Have been thinking over the weekend that I need the benefit of your experience concerning the most effective way to handle the financial disbursements for the full-time executive director. You have had the experience of serving as a state executive, and can also see it from the regional council.

When, and on what schedule will funds be sent from the Southern Regional? What are the proposed budget allocations?

Dear Dean Harvey:

Thank you for your letter of May 23rd concerning financial arrangements.

As soon as I receive official notice of Mrs. Miller's employment by the Board and acceptance, we will send you the amounts due on LCHR's regular grant-in-aid and expanded grant. Both grants are paid in quarterly installments, but normally fall due on different dates. You will receive a total of $4,100 at once, then $800 on July 1 and October 1, and $2,500 on August 15 and November 15.

Arrangements for disbursement vary a little, but I believe that in all state councils checks are written in the office. In most cases the books are kept by the secretary and reviewed by the Treasurer. Usually two signatures are required on checks: the Executive Director's or President's, countersigned by the Treasurer or Secretary. In Alabama we arranged it so that checks were valid with any two of four signatures--which was helpful at vacation season.

SRC required monthly financial and membership reports and quarterly program reports as conditions of grant payments. We also require an annual audit.

If I can be of further assistance, please let me know.

Dear Phil:

To my regret we did not get a chance to complete our conversation during the Alabama Council Board meeting on the 17th. I was very interested in your inquiry and want you to know that I am eager to supply any information I can and to help in any way possible.

In general, the human relations field is growing by leaps and bounds. For instance, in 1960 only 30 cities in the United States had adopted ordinances creating human relations commissions. By August of 1965 at least 263, or 45 percent of those with over 30,000 population had established official local community relations commissions. Besides, as you know, the federal government has been snapping up men and women from every source for this field of work, especially since passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

This is to say that once one gets into the field and gains some experience the chances of continuing to earn a living at it are pretty good. It is, I suppose, not as secure as the ministry, but to my mind that speaks well of it! The problem for anyone who, like yourself, has been in one field for a long while and then thinks of changing to another is to break into the new field at a salary anywhere near the old one.

It was good to see you again.

Dear Mrs. Jackson:

I have a telegram from Mrs. Grace Hooks stating that your committee would be happy to distribute paperback books as a part of your program.

I had called Mrs. Hooks to inquire about the number of children involved in the program of her Cultural Enrichment Committee of the East Alabama Council on Human Relations and, in the process, told her about this "paperback books" proposal which we are preparing to submit to a foundation. This will be a proposal for an experimental program, and we were wanting information about the Cultural Enrichment Program in order to use it as an illustration of the possibilities. The point is that we are still very far from the point of being able to ship the books as Mrs. Hooks suggested in her telegram.

If and when we do get the program underway we shall welcome a proposal from your group.

Dear Miss Jordan:

I have made inquiries about the possibility of a reassuring pamphlet for the parents of children attending integrated schools, particularly in rural areas. You will recall our conversation about this in Washington.

Those to whom I have talked feel that, at best, it would be too soon to offer reassurance responsibly at this time. The feeling seems to be that there may in fact be some initial side-effect of school desegregation that are undesirable. At any rate we have no basis at this time for assuring parents that there will be no serious problems. We are convinced, of course, that the problems of change are nothing compared to the ruinous cost of a segregated system of education.

PROJECT LETTER NO. 21

INTEGRATED SCHOOLS AND OUR FAMILIES

As more and more of our children go to integrated schools the majority of us parents have to admit that we have not thought seriously enough or long enough about the feelings and tensions that we must share as our children bring these tensions home from school. Our white children are now growing up in a world in which they have to deal with colored peoples as equals, and our Negro children are growing up in a world that is in many ways strange to them. Are we prepared to act as a good family by supporting each member during these times of stress?

Let's begin by thinking of our children, both Negro and white. At school they find themselves in new groups, or they are in groups that receive new members who are different in color. In such a situation the attitude of teachers is important, but according to a report by fifteen psychiatrists the child's reactions to such social situations at school are shaped to a great extent by their experience as a member of a family. This simply means that the child has absorbed the family's ways of feeling about other groups.[1]

Think about your own family as your child goes to an integrated school. Whether Negro or white your child probably feels that if he becomes very friendly with a new social group he will be disloyal to his own family. Thus, even the most well adjusted youngsters are likely to get upset and make mistakes in their behavior which ordinarily they would not make.

The Negro child going into a previously segregated school might be unduly suspicious of his new group. One Negro boy entered a previously white school and stayed for football practice. After the practice he accepted a ride home with four of his new friends. Later the boy reported that he became very much afraid as he sat in the rear seat beside two white boys. He imagined their taking him off for a beating and was relieved when they stopped at his house and waved him goodby.

At times a Negro child may imagine bad treatment when it does not exist in fact. All children are bound to be rejected at times. He will need help from his family before he can feel accepted again. One Negro girl in a largely white school was talking in the hallway with the one white girl whom she considered to be her best friend. Then a group of white girls came up and spoke to them. Seemingly without realizing it the white girl faded into the group and was soon gone. Do we Negro and white parents take time to imagine how that one lone girl feels as she is left alone in the hallway of a public school? If we try, what can we do to help?

One thing we parents must do is face our own feelings in this situation. If we are Negro parents we are likely afraid that our children will be hurt physically and emotionally. Just how much rejection and humiliation will my child have to face, and how much should I expect him to face? Will my child be treated fairly by the teacher? And deep inside we are afraid that our child may not be able to compete satisfactorily with the other children in reading, writing, and math.

If we are white parents we are afraid of losing status in the community if we are too much in favor of integration in the schools. Then, of course, we are afraid of the wider social contacts our children will face. Our fears tell us that the children may learn lower moral standards, that their education may be hampered, and finally, that intermarriage may result.

Some of these fears are realistic. A Negro child may be hurt physically or emotionally, and a white child will have to face wider social contacts than most of us parents faced in our youth. However, the report of those fifteen psychiatrists mentioned earlier assures us parents of the following facts:

1. Children of neither race need suffer in their studies unless overcrowded classes and poor teaching causes the difficulty.

2. Delinquency and communicable diseases are related to underprivileged neighborhoods and not to race.

3. Studies in areas of desegregated housing indicate that after the first sense of loss of status the people quickly adjusted and went about their business of living. The same quick adjustment is taking place in most of our schools.[2]

4. Available information seems to indicate that the extramarital mixing of races goes down as the Negro people gain social status. Sometimes Negro and white may wish to get married. We may point out the difficulties involved, but most of us will agree that a legal marriage now and then is much better than the large number of illegitimate children of the past.

But, specifically, what can we do to help our children? First, we can do our best to help them feel that they are loved, wanted, and happy members of their own family. The strength to adjust to a new group largely comes from the security we have in the family of which we are a part.

Second, we can assure our child that he can be a friendly member of that larger group at school and at the same time be a 100% loyal member of his family. As parents of white children we can encourage them to show kindness and to become acquainted with the Negro students. The children have much to gain from knowing a wider range of people.

Third, we can encourage our children to act mature rather than to depend upon prejudice to appear superior or race as an excuse for inadequacy. One Negro mother is quoted as saying to her child on his first morning of attending a desegregated school: "Don't try to act superior. Only inferior people try to act like there are people beneath them. Prove your worth; people will accept you, that is, the decent ones will."[3]

Fourth, we can be ready to try as a whole family to understand and support a child who has been hurt or who has himself acted unwisely and caused trouble. When our child comes home bringing feelings of rejection or fear or resentment toward the group in school it is the task of the family to "pick him up," encourage him, and send him back to school ready to try again to make a go of it with his group. We can listen and try to understand, regardless of how wrong the child may be, without taking a stand in favor of a mistake.

Of course the list of specific suggestions could be endless. But one final suggestion is that Negro and white parents can help the children to know something of the history of his own family. It will eventually be helpful when the school makes it clear that Negroes were Americans almost as soon as whites were Americans. But it will help even more for a child to be able to tell a story about his own grandparent.

We can expect some inevitable stresses and strains in a time of social change of the magnitude of school integration. But if families will stick together and perform as families, we can take this time of change as a time of opportunity. We can reverse the damage done by segregation, and we can give all our children the many benefits of a much wider cooperation with more and more types of people.

DISCUSSION GUIDE

INTEGRATED SCHOOLS AND OUR FAMILIES

1. What are some things we do at home that tell our family members how we feel about people of other races?

2. How can we prepare ourselves for the integrated world in which we are beginning to live?

3. How can we resist the pressures from the crowd so we can make the adjustments to this new world?

4. How can we help children to trust people who are different from ourselves?

5. What admirable talent have you seen recently in a person of another race?

2. How can we show our parents that we can be friendly with a new social group and still be completely loyal to the family?

Dear Fran:

Our wheels grind slowly here, sometimes, and I am only now able to give you a response to your letter of September 14. I asked two others on our staff to read the mimeographed "Project Letter" you sent, in order to have the benefit of their comment.

The concensus seems to be that it is good, worthwhile expanding, and worth distributing as widely as possible to the parents of children attending integrated schools.

Concerning the mention of possible interracial marriage, one commentator felt that it was good as far as it went, but should either be expanded or dropped. My own feeling is that the question should be dealt with, since it will be in the minds of many in the "target" group anyway. The line you have taken strikes me as a good one and perhaps an elaboration on it would be better than dropping it.

We will be interested to see what you come up with. If you would like comment from us on a draft of the expanded version, we would be happy to look at it. I understood you to say that you have no problem of funds with which to print it. Please keep us posted on the progress of the project, the uses to which you put your pamphlet, the response you get, etc.

I assume that you saw the study Dr. Robert Coles did for us in 1963. A copy of his report is enclosed.

Best wishes,
Ed Stonfield

Dear Mr. Kelley:

I received today an inquiry from Miss Sally Cantor of 1794 Windemere Drive, Atlanta, concerning the Southern Appalachian Center for Education in Democracy. At her request I have sent her an application form.

I noticed in our files a letter from you to Mr. Al Ulmer offering twelve half scholarships to applicants which SRC might recommend. In the event that a half or full scholarship is still available, I would recommend one for Miss Cantor. Sally, who is seventeen and a junior in high school, has a keen interest in intergroup relations. She received a National Conference of Christians and Jews "Good Neighbor Award" for her work with a group called "Operation Understanding." She was the first teen-ager to be so honored locally.

Harry Fleischman has turned over to me your order for 1,000 copies of Countering Extremism.

We should be happy to direct these mailings to the state councils if you will let me know how many copies you want sent and to whom. It would be most helpful if you could send us three or four already-addressed shipping labels to be used for each council's mailing.

I am assuming that we are to bill the total order to your attention rather than to bill each of the councils individually for their quantities.

We are very pleased to learn of the good reception accorded our manuscript and we hope you will find the pamphlet a valuable tool.

Date: September 12, 1966

To: Ed Stanfield

From: E. T. Kehrer, Chairman, Southern Interagency Conference Steering Committee

Subject:

As you know the Steering Committee decided to invite Dr. Lewis Killian of Florida State University to speak at the Fall meeting on September 20th. This will involve approximately $150.00 in expense. Ted Freedman of ADL has already pledged $50.00 toward this amount and I would like to ask other members of the Steering Committee if they could also assist.

Dear Dr. Killian:

After so unconscionable a lapse of time we have finally come up with a rough transcription of your address to the Southern Interagency Conference here in Atlanta on September 20. You will recall that we agreed to submit it to you for corrections before making any use of it. The transcription is enclosed.

Bob Anderson, Editor of Publications for the Southern Regional Council, has indicated that he would like, with your permission, to use excerpts from it for a section of our magazine, New South, in which we regularly print significant quotations from recent speeches.

We do not at this time plan any other mass reproduction of the speech, but a few of the people who attended the meeting--Ted Freedman, Al Kehrer, Charles Wittenstein, and others--have indicated that they would like to have Xerox copies, if you would not object.

Le me take this opportunity to thank you for the address. I hope that our paths will cross again in the not-to-distant future.

Mr. Bob Luitweiler
c/o Bob Swann
Voluntown, Connecticut

Dear Bob:

It was good to see you in Washington last week and to have the chance, if only briefly, to discuss your proposal for a national investment corporation for southern development.

I continue to be interested in the idea of such a corporation and have passed your proposal around this office to get other people's reaction to it. Here are a few of the ones I have received.

1. Private money cannot begin to solve the problems of the rural South. Only federal monies, and in large amounts, can begin to stabilize the situation. It would be better to spend the money you raise to inform the average U.S. citizen of rural problems and to push for legislation that would confront these problems then to buy small amounts of land.

2. The person who would invest in such a proposition would not likely want his money back soon nor would he be investing for a profit. Therefore, the idea of a foundation guaranteeing investments is not a sound one.

These were the two main complaints of the proposal by those with whom I shared it.

I have several suggestions of my own. The problem of FHA loans and their insistence upon a clean title to the land is of course a real one. In addition, however, FHA relies heavily upon the individuals ability to repay the loan. Herein, it seems necessary to me to stress the necessity of some type of money-making employment which will either precede or at least accompany the building of the homes. Perhaps this comes in the more complete plans for the cooperatives you referred to later in your paper.

The question of who should do this land purchasing, the government or a private corporation seems to be a valid one. It could be answered if you stressed that the corporation is designed to show what can be done. Why not use a number of families, say 1,000, and talk in terms of them. In this way some idea of the amount of land, money, people, time, etc. would be easier to imagine. You could have a goal for investment purposes and could also dissuade the critics of the idea you are doing something the government should do.

I hope we can continue writing about this. I am anxious to learn of the results of your goddard meeting.

In addition to Speed-Up we are also recruiting for the American Friends Service Committee project in Sumter and attempting to find counselors for Upward-Bound at Claflin College in Orangeburg. The opportunities for student involvement this summer are exciting.

Dear Mr. Martzell:

I was in New Orleans last week and tried to call you at the suggestion of Mrs. Leo Mervis, who did not realize that you had already moved to Baton Rouge.

Mrs. Mervis said that you were aware of the New Orleans Community Relations Council, but might not be aware of the existence of the Louisiana Council on Human Relations. Theyletter was organized about eighteen months ago and, with some initial aid from the Southern Regional Council, hopes to employ an executive director and open an office in the near future. The office location has not yet been determined.

The Louisiana Council on Human Relations, like the New Orleans Community Relations Council and other state councils in the region, is a biracial, voluntary association of Louisiana citizens for the purpose of promoting -- by research, education, and negotiation -- equal opportunities for all peoples in the state. The president of the Louisiana Council at this time is Dr. James R. Oliver, P.O. Box 2992, Lafayette, Louisiana.

I am sorry that I missed meeting you, and I hope that I may call on you at the first opportunity. If we at Southern Regional Council can assist you in any way, please call on us. We wish you well in this important assignment.

HUMAN RELATIONS WORKSHOPS

Summer 1966

The Council on Human Relations will soon publish its Fifth Annual Brochure listing all 1966 Summer Human Relations Workshops to be held in Colleges and Universities throughout the United States.

In former years you have suggested colleges in which workshops were to be held, so that we could follow up for definite information.

Once you sent us a page entitled "Cooperating Organizations" which we found very useful. If you have an up-to-date list of that sort we shall be glad to have it.

Dear Mr. Stanfield:

Since our last correspondence with you in late February, I am very pleased to inform you that we have been successful in our effort to raise the necessary funds for a second edition of our scholarship booklet for Southern Negro students. In fact, we have been successful even beyond our wildest dreams.

Shortly after our last letter to you in late winter, we contacted the Ford Foundation in an effort to determine whether they would be receptive to the idea of backing this project. In the intervening months, we have been in increasing contact with them, culminating last week with the formal notification that we have been granted $6,400. This grant, which is renewable yearly up to four years, is to be used in the development of our scholarship guide, in its distribution, and in a determination of its ultimate usefulness.

In addition to the Ford grant, we have been able to secure certain other funds from individual donations from within North Carolina. At present, there is a distinct possibility that we will be able to obtain an appropriation of $800. from the Student Government on the University of North Carolina campus.

We would hope to use the funds pledged by the Southern Regional Council in a variety of ways. In all probability it will be necessary to hire part-time a secretary to help with the immense amount of typing necessary before the second edition. Personal visitations to high schools in an effort to determine more precisely what types of information are most needed might also be a possibility. It is still our intention to transfer our master plates to you for your use as outlined in our earlier correspondence.

Dear Mr. Mason:

Thank you for your letter of February 11, concerning assistance in publication of your scholarship booklet.

We note that you are going to try to arrange a combination of sources of funds and prepare your publication on that basis. It trust that you will keep me informed of your progress in securing tentative commitments. If it appears that you will be able to produce the booklet as proposed, we will honor our tentative commitment of up to $500100.

Incidentally, for purposes of our accounting and to avoid any supposition that we can be considered as a charitable foundation, we probably would want our aid to take the form of a contract for a certain number of copies or use of the plates, as you mentioned.

If you should find it impossible to arrange the necessary funding combination, we would still be willing to help with our existing staff and facilities, as outlined in my letter of Februmry 7th.

Dear Mr. Stanfield:

Our committee is very pleased with the three propositions you presented us concerning our scholarship booklet in your letter of February 7th. After due consideration, I can report to you that we favor the second alternative, that is, a contribution of about $500.00 from the Southern Regional Council.

We have been seeking financial support from several sources throughout the region including Youth Educational Services in Durham. It is our hope that with several grants such as yours, we will be able to reach our goal of between $2,200.00 and $2,500.00.

In the proposed second edition all contributors to the project will be recognized in a special section.

Because of the nature of the Scholarship Information Center, we wish to try and print the guide locally and have orders cleared through this office. The Center is set up as a dynamic fact gathering and distribution agency. Bulletins (samples of which I am enclosing) concerning various aspects of high school, college, and graduate study will be distributed fairly regularly. We feel that it would be awkward to have the booklets in Atlanta and the bulletins in Chapel Hill.

Yet we do, however, plan to let groups such as the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party and the Voter Education Project in Columbia use our lithograph master plates free and in whatever way they wish. In this manner, they can distribute our information to students we could not reach through schools or individual mailings. We would be happy to let you use the plates for your own distribution desires.

We hope that this meets with your satisfaction.

Dear Mr. Mason:

I have shown your proposal for publication of an enlarged and improved edition of Financial Aid for Southern Negro Students to Mr. Paul Anthony, Executive Director of the Southern Regional Council. He and I are both impressed with the edition already prepared and feel that it meets a real need. We want to suggest some alternatives to you.

First, you are probably aware of "Youth Educational Services," which is affliated with the North Carolina Council on Human Relations. Mr. Mike Lawler is the principal officer of this group, and their current address is P.O. Box 3067, West Durham Station, Durham. It is possible that they would have money to underwrite such a project, if you should feel that you could work in cooperation with them without undue loss of identity.

Second, although we cannot find funds to underwrite the project to the extent of some two thousand dollars, an alternative would be to reduce the scope or arrange a combination of sources of financing. We probably could find about $500 to contribute.

A third possibility which, if viable from your point of view, seems most promising from here would be for the Southern Regional Council to publish your compilation. In this way we could obtain the larger printing and distribution that you have in mind, but by using our existing facilities, staff, postage budget, etc., we could simply absorb at least half of the cost suggested in your budget -- which otherwise would require locating additional funds. We could supply all of the copies you need for distribution in North Carolina and elsewhere, but would have to handle distribution through the rest of the South ourselves. The publisher would have to carry our imprint as publisher, but the more prominent "billing" could be given to your organization: something like "Compiled by the University of North Carolina YM-YWCA... Published by Southern Regional Council."

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Let us know what you think.

Best wishes,

Edwin Stanfield

COLLEGE SOPHOMORES, JUNIORS, even FRESHMEN

If you're interested in some kind of graduate or professional program after graduation, a good time to get your foot in the door is THIS YEAR. You can do this mainly by making the fullest use of your summer:

(1) If you attend summer school at a University, successful completion of a few courses there (don't take a heavy load), will greatly improve your chances of getting into the University's graduate school later, as well as give you an idea whether you want to. You and the University get a chance to look each other over, to some extent, (in spite of the fact that summer sessions are rather different from the academic year). It gives you useful contacts and an idea of the variety of different brandes and subjects you can go into later. (For instance, departments and fields of study at UNC include the following: Biophysics, Communication Center, Dental Research, Folklore, Information Science, Institute of Fisheries Research, Institute of Latin American Studies, Medical Sociology, Microbiology, Psychometrics, Urban and Regional Studies. Some college students never even hear about these. Yet there's no reason why you shouldn't get into one of these fields.

Even at a tough university, it's mostly quite easy to get into the summer school. Some suggestions (for instance): Tulane University, University of N. C. at Chapel Hill, Duke University in Durham, Vanderbilt, University of Alabama, University of Mississippi, Washington University, Mo., Chicago University. Inquire about a possible scholarship or loan for the summer at that University.

(2) There's a variety of summer jobs, and for most of these you should write and apply soon. Many summer job experiences, ranging from research jobs and training fellowships that tax your book knowledge to the fullest, to routine clerical jobs in a research or professional environment, besides providing income for the summer can

Give you an idea what a profession is about,
Hence give you ideas as to what you want to take up
and what elective courses to take next year in preparation,
Teach you things you can never learn in class,
Give you useful contacts,
Open doors to graduate and career opportunities to you in the future,
And be an interesting change.

Oftentimes a department of a medical school, or a city Department of Health (or of anything else), or a firm, etc., likes to take you on for two or three successive summers with the idea that you may later study and work there full time, if they like your work and you like what they have to offer. Without that first summer they'll never know and you'll never know.

- College Students -
GRADUATING THIS YEAR?

Many deadlines are imminent; get your grad school applications in immediately.

The following departments at the UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA graduate school are excellant, and rather hard to get into (at least B average, and good GRE score required): Physics (Prof. Eugen Merzbacher, Chm.), Chemistry (Prof. R. G. Hiskey), Statistics (Prof. George Nicholson), Mathematics (Prof. W. E. Jenner, Chm.)., Dept. of Botany, Psychometrics Institute (Prof. William Wynn), and others. The music Dept. has some very good people, e.g. in voice, and offers a lot. Vice Pres. Branch has some applications for U.N.C. A good major in any subject who is strong in mathematics should apply to Prof. John W. Tukey, Chm., Dept. of Statistics, Princeton University, Princeton, N. J. if interested in grad work (for PhD) in statistics pure or applied to any subject. Recommended for a strong Chem or Biology major: Dept. of Biol. (write Prof. Donald Kennedy, Chm.), STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Stanford, Cal. For excellent statistics dept. at Stanford: Prof. Lincoln Moses, Chm. DUKE UNIVERSITY is a good grad school too.

GRADUATE PROGRAMS IN MEDICAL SCIENCES, PUBLIC HEALTH AND MEDICAL STATISTICS have these advantages:

(1) Usually a bit easier to get into than major grad schools
(2) Lots of fellowships ($2,400 plus tuition) available.

The National Institutes of Health of the U. S. Public Health Service provide these, because the need for people trained in medical and public health research is so great. The courses, mostly given at a School of Public Health or a medical school, are not MD courses, but PhD, DSc, or MPH (Master of Public Health) etc.

E.G., at University of N. C. School of Public Health, Chapel Hill, N. C., apply to Dr. D. A. Okun, Chm. Dept. of Environmental Engineering for admission and a fellowship for PhD studies in any of the following: Biology, Ecology, Chemistry, Microbiology, Radiological Hygiene, Air Polution, (etc.). You can also write to Dr. Robert Mah in the same dept. (he's a microbiologist) who will be glad to answer any questions you have about the various programs. Then there's the MSPH. Master of Sci. in Public Health in Biostatistics: Apply for admission and fellowship to Dr. Herbert A. David, Dept. of Biostat.

The Medical School at UNC also has PhD programs. So do all the major medical schools and schools of public health. Courses include those listed above and some of these: BIOCHEMISTRY, PATHOLOGY, ANATOMY, PSYCHOLOGY, MEDICAL SOCIOLOGY, PUBLIC HEALTH NURSING, SOCIAL WORK. Lots of government money available. For a list of programs get Public Health Service Grants and Awards, Part II, Training Grants, Traineeships and Fellowships - get it from N.I.H., U. S. Public Health Service, Bethesda, Md. 20014. Apply to Chairman, Dept. of whatever it is at the medical school. You find most of the above programs given at these: UCLA medical school, Chicago Univ. medical school. Some at the med schools at Jackson and Birmingham. Also apply at the following if interested:

Columbia University School of Public Health, Dept. of Biostatistics, John W. Fertig, Chm., 168th St. and Broadway, N. Y. C.: The MPH program there is very good and is relatively easy to get into. Only prerequisites are a year of calculus, probability and statistics, some biology and a fairly good average; strength in something else can substitute for biology or probability and statistics. A good program in PHARMACOLOGY: Dr. Avram Goldstein, Chrman, Dept. of Pharmacology, Stanford Univ. Medical Center, Stanford, California.

PSYCHOLOGY AND SOCIOLOGY MAJORS are needed in research and in public health. Lots of training programs psychology, soc. work, med. sociology, etc. are financed by the Natl. Inst. of Mental Health. The Psychology Dept. at UNC has lots of NIMH fellowships.

Dear Ed:

It was delightful having dinner with you during my recent visit to Atlanta. It was stimulating to learn of your new programs in voter registration and education, labor, and urban affairs. I am very interested in keeping in contact with you regarding the progress of Moreland Smith, as we are contemplating the establishment of an urban affairs department.

I am sending the names and addresses of your state council staff members to our council presidents, so that our people can get in touch and cooperate with the state council operations. As soon as we finish revising the list of our own councils, I'll forward a copy to you immediately.

Our Education Department is conducting several workshops for teachers on human relations this summer. Some of them will be in the South. You might want to contact Sr. Mary Peter, NCCIJ, 1307 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, for a listing of these workshops. If you received the latest NAIRO mailing, however, it contains a small brochure with a listing of all the workshops sponsored by our conference for this summer.

Let's keep in contact, Ed, we we develop thoughts regarding the operation in future for our respective councils. With many thanks for your splendid hospitality and warm welcome,

Sincerely,

Jim (.RV)

Dear Helen:

I wonder if you are going to the Executive Committee meeting in Baton Rouge on Saturday. If so, could you pick me up at the airport and let me ride with you? I can get a flight that arrives there at 10:46 a.m. (or I could get an earlier one) and we could argue all the way to Baton Rouge!

How about letting me know by return mail? Don't change any plans, of course. It's simple for me to fly on into Baton Rouge or rent a car.

Dear Tony:

Enclosed is our check in the amount of $500.00 which is our contribution to the Scholarship Information Center. We understand that we are to be permitted to use your master plates after you have published your compilation of scholarships available to Negroes.

Please sign the enclosed carbon of this letter and return it to me to acknowledge receipt for our auditors.

I must say that I was astonished to learn that you had secured such a sizeable grant, renewable for four years, when only three months ago you were hoping to raise a mere $2,500 budget! Would you be interested in assisting us with part of our publishing program? Seriously, we are delighted to know that the foundation shared our opinion of the value of what you have done and are proposing and that you have been able to find this substantial backing.

We assume that you have expanded your program and we would be interested to know -- simply for our own information -- what your present plans are.

All good wishes for the success of your endeavor.

Dear Mr. Stanfield:

On behalf of the Scholarahip Information Center, I wish to thank you and the Southern Regional Council for your assistance in helping us to fund our project here. We, too, were astonished at the generous grant made to us by the Ford Foundation. I only hope that we will be able to continue both Ford's and the Southern Regional Council's confidence in the work that we are doing.

Since much of our correspondence in the late winter, the whole concept of the scholarship information clearinghouse we have here has undergone considerable modification. This in part accounts for the amount of the Ford grant.

The Ford money is to be used for certain specific items only. One of the major uses of this money will be to offset costs incurred by printing 10,000 copies of the scholarship guide and distributing them throughout the South. There is also an allowance for the necessary research leading up to the second edition of the booklet.

One of the newer activities of the Center has been the development of special college information bulletins. These bulletins are being mailed on to colleges, high school counselors and interested individuals. Hopefully these bulletins will serve to disseminate specialized information on new scholarship programs or on very promising college programs for disadvantaged students. The Ford grant also made a small allocation for one part-time secretary.

Part of the rationale behind the bulletins is to supply information (often of a rather specific nature) tailor made for the problems of a particular area in the South. This will entail contacting groups in various areas in the South to determine the specific needs of the students. We have already been able to establish lines of contact in many areas, but the job is only partially complete. There was no provision made in the Ford grant for this activity; it is in this area that the Council's funds will be used.

As you can see things are still in a state of flux here as to where this will eventually lead us. I feel that the spontaneous character of the work we are doing will in the long run be highly beneficial in that we can plan our activities to meet the demands in many areas of the region.

Our immediate plans are to continue work on the second edition of the scholarship guide with the goal of a publication date sometime in early September. At that time we will arrange to have our litho master plates sent to the Council. Furthermore, either I or someone else will keep you informed of our progress throughout the summer.

Thank you very much again for both your help and interest in our work.

Sincerely yours,

Tony Mason

Dear Mrs. Miller:

While thinking about a period of orientation for you in Atlanta, it occurred to me that this might very well be joined with a Community Leadership Laboratory that is being held here the last week in July. Several of our state council directors will be attending. The Southern Regional Council will pay the tuition, if the respective state councils will pay the $140.00 room and board for the week.

If enough of the Directors take advantage of this opportunity, we hope to set up one of our periodic state council staffs meetings, either during or after the laboratory. If this were done, you could perhaps come a week early,--say, the 15th--and spend a week in the office and visiting the offices of allied agencies. Altogether this would provide an excellent orientation for you, I think.

If this does not fit your schedule, we can make other arrangements, of course. If you feel the need for some orientation before that time, we could fly you over for a week right away and then you could return for the laboratory.

Let me hear how things are going,--and how we can help.

We do not have an opening for a field worker at this time. I will give your letter to the director of our Community Organization Project, who is out of town today, on the off chance that he would know of something in Birmingham. Frankly, though, the chances seem pretty slim at the moment.

We know of your leadership in The Movement and are sincerely sorry to hear of your present tenuous circumstances. We are especially sorry to hear of your baby girl's serious illness.

Be assured that we shall have you in mind and will let you know if we hear of a suitable opening.

Dear Helen:

I asked Paul Anthony whether it might be worth your while to prepare a request for funds to finance an inventory of all the do-gooding agencies and projects in the New Orleans area. His reply was that we could consider a very modest grant, although he was under the impression that the Community Relations Council had money of its own in the amount we could consider.

If you could come up with some specific figures, details, as to what you are proposing to do, and perhaps a little background information on Dr. Lloyd, I think the project might get favorable consideration. (Especially if the New Orleans Council had previously given all of its money to the Louisiana Council, ha.)

ADVANCED SEMINAR ON

ORGANIZATIONAL CHANGE

DuBose Conference Center
Monteagle, Tennessee
October 13-16, 1966

For persons who have previously participated in a "Communication Conference" or other similar learning experience (such as "human relations training", "sensitivity training", or "laboratory training"), this Advanced Seminar will be of value for those who are working within organizations (Church, on-the-job, or community) and who would like to be more effective as agents for change within such organizations.

The Seminar will focus on setting goals within an organization, and developing behavior that can help the organization to reach its goals. It will not help participants plan changes for others, but rather will attempt to help them plan the changes they need to make in themselves in order that they may assist others to change.

Specifically, attention will be devoted to:

- establishing goals and setting up priorities for reaching goals
- increasing ability of participants to involve others in goal-setting, problem-solving, and decision-making
- increasing ability to see an organization in terms of the behaviors that go on within it, rather than simply in terms of its official structure
- assessing one's own motives for change
- assessing the readiness of an organization to change

Time: Beginning with supper at 6:30 p.m. on Thursday, October 13, 1966, and concluding after supper at 6:00 p.m. on Sunday, October 16. Every participant is expected to arrive on time and remain for the entirety of the conference.

Place: DuBose Conference Center is located just off the main highway through Monteagle, Tennessee. All linens and towels are provided, and DuBose serves exceptionally fine meals.

Cost: $25.00 per person to be sent with registration form below. Make checks payable to William A. Yon

- Sponsored by the Episcopal Dioceses of Alabama and Tennessee -

The Purpose of a Communication Conference is to make it possible for those participating to communicate themselves in new and more satisfying ways with other people. It is not primarily to learn something about communication. Its objective is behavioral, aimed at helping participants convert their intentions into action.

Specifically, each person attending may expect to have an opportunity:

- to increase his knowledge of how he communicates to others (How do others see you as you communicate? What do you lead others to think you want as a response to what you say?)
- to increase his knowledge of how others communicate themselves to him (Do others see you as being open to communication or closed? How do others shape their communications to you? What kinds of communication are you likely not to get from others?)
- to increase his understanding of how a group influences what is communicated among its members (What patterns do groups set as to what is permissable and what is unacceptable? How can these patterns be examined? How can they be changed?)
- to experiment with new ways of communicating with others in order to develop community among the members of a group.

How Does It Work? A Communication Conference differs from many other kinds of learning situations in that the individual participant is responsible for setting his own learning goals. Participants work primarily in groups, varying in size from two to twenty, in which the primary emphasis is placed on learning from what is being experienced in the group "here and now." The intent is for each person to learn how to examine his own behavior as he engages in communication with other people and to experiment with new forms of behavior. There are consequently few lectures, as this is not a "subject-centered" conference in the usual sense.

It pays off! A growing number of men and women have found a new freedom and openness in their relationship with other people as a result of this kind of learning experience. It has begun to make a marked difference in their home life, their relationships on the job, and the quality of life in their churches and other organizations of which they are a part.

Time: Beginning with supper at 6:30 p.m. on Thursday, October 13, 1966, and concluding after supper at 6:00 p.m. on Sunday, October 16. Every participant is expected to arrive on time and remain for the entirety of the conference.

There are six other boys whose names will be submitted shortly.

Would there be any possibility of a youth tad in the ninth grade being considered?

This is a tremendous opportunity of untold benefits and I hope very much that several of these youngsters will qualify.

Thank you for your letter of October 1 and for sending the names of five youngsters as potential applicants for southern prep schools.

We have been given no firm closing date for nominations. However, a large number of names have already been received and the selection process has begun. I would suggest that any other names you wish to submit be sent at once.

No consideration could be given to a boy in the ninth grade under the stipulations given to us.

We have not been given the names of the schools in the program, having been asked only to help find possible applicants. The youngsters and their families will be approached, of course, in terms of specific schools.

Thank you for your help.

Dear Mr. Stanfield:

Subsequent to mailing the last letters to you we have had a staff meeting and have finalized the plans for counties in which we will work this year.

Oconee
Pickens - These are going full steam now with about 50 tutors! In most cases however there will probably not be that many workers. Clemson College students are heading this through the campus Wesley Foundation.

Greenville - We hope to work through students at Furman University

Laurens - students from Presbyterian College are working - Wesley Foundation

Abbeville - students in local student council at Erskine College -real problems - the college is at least 14 miles from the community.

Richland - students from U. S. C., Columbia College, Benedict College, and Allen University

Spartanburg - students from Wofford College will work

Darlington - high school students are now tutoring with guidance from a local teacher. There is no college in the community.

York - students from Winthrop, Friendship and Clinton Junior College will work

Orangeburg - students from S. C. State and Claflin College will work

Sumter - students from St. Jude School (high school) and college students from Morris College

In some of these counties there will be more than one center at which tutoring will be going on.

This should complete the file information you suggested that you'd require to consider our needs. Please contact us if any more information is needed.

Sincerely,

Henri Monteith

In the latter part of August I wrote to you concerning the possibility of our obtaining funds for transportation to aid student run tutorials. Your reply of September 1st raised many questions and I hope that I can clarify these matters.

The SPEED-UP project was funded by the Office of Economic Opportunity for a summer project only. So, at this time we are operating merely on funds left over from this project and have on our payroll only three persons-Project Director, Tutorial Director, and bookkeeper-secretary. We are acting more or less as a service organization ie, we supply the impetus and guidance that local councils need to get a tutoring project going, and they supply the work. Let me give you an example: In Clemson, S. C. students desired to keep a tutoring service going. (SPEED-UP worked in Clemson during the summer). They found students who wanted to tutor. We went to Clemson, gave a tutor training session, supplied them with tutoring manuals that had been developed during our summer project, supplied them with books, tape recorder and anything else that they needed. The tutoring and all work that they are doing is going on in SPEED-UP's name only. The leaders of this group are students who are very active in the Wesley Foundation on campus. None of them are paid.

We have come across these type problems in many communities where the college campuses are not proximal to areas where people are in direct need of a tutoring project. This is where we are limited ~~sense~~ since we cannot supply them with funds needed to cover gas expenditures to and from these communities.

There are campuses on which the tutoring will be carried on by the Student Human Relations Council and others where a religious group supply the work and workers.

We feel that the funds that your organization has could best be distributed from a central office and at this time SPEED-UP is the only state-wide tutoring service organization.

There is a definite need for tutoring services in South Carolina where the drop out rate is 55.7% loss grades 1-12, graduating class 1966, and rated 49th or 50th in most phases of the educational system. It would indeed be a tragedy if no one in the state rises to meet the needs of all elements.

SPEED-UP is the only organization in the state that can meet the needs of giving "know-how" to students who have definite convictions and desires to work in and for their State.

Project SPEED-UP is applying for more government funds, but any that might be donated from your organization would be kept entirely separate. Even our proposed budget to the OEO does not allow funds for campus tutorial travel as we do wish to have them donate as much of their service as possible. Many campus workers have asked us for travel funds and without them it is feared that tutorials will be limited in great measure, particularly as we try to reach those who are in the more rural areas.

A definite problems in Clemson involving transportation - one of the towns in which tutoring is carried on is about 10 miles from the college campus. This means at least 20 miles a day for some tutors. Some of them must make several trips a week to the community.

We are most hopeful that the Southern Regional Council can provide the funds to carry on this most necessary project.

Sincerely,

Henri Monteith

Dear Miss Monteith:

Thank you for your letter of August 29 inquiring about possible funds to pay transportation costs for workers in your tutorial program.

I am somewhat familiar, of course, with SPEED-UP and know that it operated this summer as an O.E.O. demonstration project. It is not clear to me whether the continuation of your tutorials is to be financed by government money or not. You mention that the tutors would be working as volunteers, and I would assume that you are attempting to continue on a voluntary basis a part of the program begun this summer. Is that correct?

You understand, of course, that SRC is able to offer assistance only in those areas and kinds of programs indicated in our mimeographed catalogue, which I am sure you have seen. I am not sure that the project you have in mind would fit any of these categories, unless it is a project of a state or local student human relations council.

At any rate, we would need more information in order to consider your needs. Where will the tutorials be? (In all 13 counties?) How many tutors will be involved? How many tutees? How much travel is involved? How long will the project run? How much money are you asking for?

Let me suggest that you re-examine the catalogue of aid available to determine if what you want to do is covered by any of the program areas for which we have help available. I enclose a copy for your convenience.

Best wishes,

Dear Sir:

Project SPEED-UP has been involved in tutorials and community development for the past summer in 28 centers in 13 counties and would like to continue our service this coming year.

We would like to inquire into the possibility of our securing funds for transportation to continue our work in a tutorial program. Our funds are extremely limited and in order for our fall program to be effective we must provide some mode of transportation for our tutors who will, in all cases, be doing volunteer work.

We would appreciate any invormation and help that you can give.

Thank you for this kindness.

Mrs. Helen Mervis
34 Audubon Boulevard
New Orleans, Louisiana 70118

Dear Helen:

Your letter of October 22 was on my desk when I returned Monday from a field trip to Alabama. I was very glad to receive it.

First, let me say that I appreciated your frankness in our telephone conversation. (One can hardly be responsible without being frank, I think, and "charitableness" without candor is false.) I was a bit upset by your remarks, but not because you were honest. It was more a matter of being disappointed that Pat appears not to be as sensitive or quick to grasp and respond to a situation as I had hoped.

I do remember meeting Gary Lloyd. And I have to be grateful for his advice to you, despite compunctions about asking you to give aid to the Louisiana Council when I am well aware--as I am--that the CRC needs to be receiving help for the tremendous job to be done in New Orleans. I hope that you will take Dr. Lloyd up on his offer of counsel as to how you and the CRC might help. Louisiana as a whole is, in my estimation, one of the toughest states we have to tackle. The LCHR, being in effect brand new, is inevitably weak and disorganized. Even if the Executive Director were an experienced professional, the job would be frighteningly formidable.

The fact is, of course, that "professionals" in this field are scarce, much in demand, and able to command jobs better paying and more secure than the LCHR can offer at this time.

There as elsewhere we faced the necessity of developing our own professional. I am prepared to entertain the thought that Pat might hot have been the best possible choice. On the other hand she does have good points. One of them is administrative ability, and if she does little beyond laying a good organizational foundation on which a more savvy intergroup relations official could build, she will have done a good job.

All of this is to say that I surely do think you can be useful to the LCHR -- and not only you, but also the CRC as a whole. If nothing else (although I am sure it would amount to much more than this), making a special effort to swell the ranks at future membership meetings would be invaluable moral support.

While I am giving "advice" (you asked for it!) I might as well advise a little more patience with Pat. I well remember my own compulsion, early in my Alabama career, to do and say and propose something, faced as I was with an overwhelming situation and with volunteers who in fact knew much more about my business than I did! I like to think I settled down to a more constructive approach and pace. Perhaps Pat will, also.

I plan to attend the LCHR Board meeting in Baton Rouge on Monday the 7th and hope to see you then. If not, I'll try to call you on my way through New Orleans. You will be attending the SRC Annual Meeting here on November 16, no doubt, and we'll see you then.

Dear Ed,

Do you remember meeting Gary Lloyd the day you and Pat Miller came to the house? He is on our Board by virtue of his interest, but also because his professional competence is so highly regarded by Tulane's School of Social Work, where he is on faculty. His youth belies his reputation as an administrative expert, and he has been of inestimable help to me. I lean on him heavily for advice and guidance, and told him of your call. His initial question was whether I leveled with you which I could honestly say I did. He was distressed that I felt LCHR would benefit from my non-participation because he felt Pat would need all the help she could get for a tough job. He wants me to reconsider, and offered to counsel with me on how I might help. I wanted you to know this, because I sensed I upset you with my remarks.

I'd like to reiterate that, objectively speaking, LCHR is justified in thinking CRC has not done enough, but our omissions are not based on rejction or even indifference but rather on pre-occupation with our own problems re growth and strength. I think we re beginning to make an impact on the community, but it s been almost a full-time job that has stretched me to the limit of my capacity and at the expense of certain other commitments I had made, for which I've been criticized.

The foregoing is intended to explain to you that I do not wish to evade responsibility, and that if you think I can be useful I would be willing to try. I will await advice from you.

Sincerely,

Helen

Dear Miss Monteith:

We have carefully considered your request for travel funds for tutors in SPEED-UP's tutorial project and regretfully conclude that the proposal does not come within the limitations under which we must work.

As I explained in my letter of September 1, we have modest financial aid available only in certain limited categories. The one that I mentioned as coming closest to yours was for projects of student councils on human relations. Indeed, we have funded a number of projects of the South Carolina student human relations group. What the donor of these funds primarily intended was to encourage student human relations organizations, and while the tutorial project uses students, it does not seem to be initiated and run by the student human relations council.

Mrs. Robert H. Crossfield

Dear Mrs. Crossfield:

Please pardon my delay in answering your good letter of November 22. I have had to sandwich conversations about your project and requests in between a couple of bouts of illness and a heavy travel schedule.

After careful consideration, it is our honest opinion that the sort of unofficial poll which you propose, to determine whether or not Griffin's citizens what their pools opened on a desegregated basis, would be useless. As you pointed out in your letter the city commissioners would not be influenced by it one way or the other. Moreover, it would be very difficult to conduct it in such a way as to make the results incontrovertible evidence of the wishes of the majority of citizens -- even if the authorities were interested in the wishes of the majority of citizens. So much depends upon the wording of the questions, the choise of people to whom they are submitted, etc. Consequently we feel compelled to turn down your request for $100 to finance this poll.

As for your request for information, I am sending herewith copies of a number of recent newspaper clippings from all over the South which have to do with parks and pools and integration of them. It seems to me that the local council might more effectively prepare and document, from this and other information, a public statement on the issue. Have it read at a meeting of the city council. Would it be possible to get news coverage? I have forgotten the exact circumstances, but you might explore the possibility of asking the Department of Justice to initiate a suit -- as it is reported was done in one or two communities. A sumpathetic attorney might suggest grounds on which you could at least threaten such action. In any or all of these ways you could keep raising the issue -- and it seems to me that raising a straightforward fuss would do more good, in this case, than a popular opinion poll. (What is the use of securing confirmation or denial of popular prejudices?)

I am afraid this is not being much help, but we certainly would like to help in any way we can. That is a tough job you have cut out for yourself!

Best wishes,

J. Edwin Stanfield

Mr. Stanfield

Southern Regional Council

Dear Mr. Stanfield;

You will perhaps remember our conversation of some months ago concerning a public opinion poll our Human Relations group is interested in conducting. We feel that it would be most effective in the early spring. A thousand cards should give us a good sampling of opinion. We have investigated different kinds of mailings but find that a double post card costing eight cents is the most practical. Printing costs would be about twenty dollars. Thus for approximately one hundred dollars we could lay before the people of Griffin the choices of whether to open our swimming pools this coming summer on an integrated basis or leave them closed for the third year.

Neither the city commissioners nor the local newspaper are interested in sponsoring such a poll although most said they would be interested in the results. One commissioner said he would try to indict me for inciting a riot! (This is the commissioner that will be mayor next year.) He admitted that it wouldn't be legally possible however, but said that in his opinion anything that brings up touchy matters is bad and he would do all he could to prevent us from conducting the poll. You can see that the results of the poll will carry very little weight.

We have talked to a statistician at the University of Georgia and he recommends a careful selection of names from the voting lists rather than the phone book, being certain to keep the percentage of Negroes and whites true to the Griffin population and balanced as to wards in the city. This sounds very difficult to us.

As to the content of the card we had thought of the following choices to mark:

1. I would like to see the public swimming pools opened on an integrated basis this summer.
2. I would rather the pools remained closed.
3. I am undecided on this issue.
4. There are children in this household.

The cards would not have to be signed and postage would be paid to return them to a box number. We would explain on the other half of the card the purpose of our group in sending out the poll.

We would like to ask three things of you, Mr. Stanfield. First, any further thoughts or opinions you have concerning this venture. Second, what assistance you could give us to finance the poll. And third, do you have any information about integrated pools here in the south, preferably in small towns. We would like to know attendance figures (percentage of Negro and white) and operateing costs, whether they lost money when they integrated, for how long, how it's working out now, etc.. Any information you can send us will be appreciated.

Yours truly,

Mrs. Robert H. Crossfield

In April, 1965, the Inter-Citizens Committee decided to establish a Memorial Fund in memory of Jimmy Lee Jackson, who was shot by an Alabama State Trooper following a voter registration meeting on the night of February 18, 1965, in Marion, Alabama, and who later died. The purpose of the Fund is to provide a small income for Mrs. Viola Jackson, Jimmy's mother (also beaten by State Troopers the same night Jimmy was shot, and to whose rescue he came) by giving her $50.00 a month for as long as the Fund lasts.

With permission of the Committee, this Fund is being administered by the past Secretary of the Committee, Rev. C. Herbert Oliver. To date, the funds that have come in are as follows:

Inter-Citizens Committee	$100.00
Dr. Randolph Sailer, Birmingham, Alabama	50.00
Friends of the Mississippi Freedom Project, Oxford, Ohio	70.00
Clarke W. Crannell, Oxford, Ohio	10.00
Mary Lou Dorking, Kentfield, California	10.00
Rev. Alfred Heininger, Claremont, California	10.00

Palm Sunday Interdenominational Musicale at Grace United Presbyterian Church, Baltimore, Maryland, Rev. Robert Newbold, Jr., Pastor	200.00
Rev. and Mrs. John W. Miller, Columbus, Ohio	25.00

From April, 1965, to the present (April 1966), Mrs. Jackson has received a check for $50.00 each month. There is enough on hand to cover nearly two months. Would you kindly help keep the Fund alive by making a contribution today. Make checks payable to the Inter-Citizens Committee Jimmy Lee Jackson Memorial Fund, and send to Rev. C. Herbert Oliver, 253 Lincoln Rd., Brooklyn, New York 11225. Please note this: all contributions are deductible for income tax purposes. Words of deepest appreciation have come from Mrs. Jackson for your generous kindness.

Dear ~~Mr. Anthony~~ Paul:

We are most appreciative of the co-sponsorship of the Southern Regional Council and of the efforts of Mr. Ed Stanfield, as SRC representative, which contributed to making the state-wide Citizen Action Assembly a success.

Nearly 245 people registered and/or attended the Assembly, and, of those who were neither speakers nor consultants, approximately a third were from outside of Atlanta.

We are very interested in receiving any comments or criticisms that members of SRC who attended the Assembly might have. We would also like your suggestions for future action to improve and insure health and welfare services for children in Georgia. A copy of the Assembly Resolutions and Recommendations is enclosed.

Tapes of the Assembly are being transcriped at the National Urban League office in New York, and copies of the following speeches and sessions have been requested: Mrs. Helen Howard, "A Community in Need;" Mrs. Mary S. Weaver, "The Volunteer's Role in Relations to Intergovernmental Programs;" the first session on Day Care and Child Welfare; the presentations from the sessions on Maternal and Child Care and Mental Retardation. Please let us know if you are interested in receiving copies of these. Copies of Mr. William "Pete" Page's speech, "Intergovernmental Programming to Improve Health and Welfare Services for Children," are available now.

Again, thank you for your assistance in contributing to the Assembly's success. We will be in touch with you as plans for future action are developed.

Most sincerely,

CITIZEN ACTION ASSEMBLY
ON HEALTH & WELFARE SERVICES FOR GEORGIA'S CHILDREN

RESOLUTIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS, as follows, were set forth by the participants of the state-wide Citizen Action Assembly on Health and Welfare Services for Georgia's Children, April 1, 1966.

I. In considering welfare services, it is essential that we resolve to be aware and have concern for current programs, problem areas, and proposed changes in programs and legislation.

A. We resolve that the criteria for qualifying to receive Aid for Dependent Children (ADC) be re-evaluated to eliminate the high rigidity of requirements which deprive our children of basic essentials for their normal existence, and that steps be taken to increase the amount of the grants and the number of benefits (services).

B. We particularly recommend that the "substitute father" or "man in the house" clause be removed as a criteria for denying a family the right of assistance.

II. We recommend that the Georgia General Assembly be reconvened for the purpose of using surplus funds to increase health and welfare benefits; and that such benefits include the Georgia Department of Family and Children's Services launching a special project to distribute surplus foods, and that this Department increasingly use the Food Stamp Program as a more effective means of providing food to people in need.

III. We recommend that mandatory legislation be passed which will....

...require all school superintendents in all school districts to establish classes for retarded children, both educable and trainable, and that there be less rigidity in the accreditation of teachers for these special classes and an increase in the training of volunteer aides.

...establish a mechanism to insure the enforcement of child labor laws and practices throughout Georgia.

...insure enforcement of day care requirements at all centers in Georgia.

IV. We resolve that we be an Action Assembly and Committee, concerned with implementing and insuring adequate services towards improving the health and well-being of all children in Georgia, regardless of race, color, or creed.

A. To actively follow-up the groundwork laid by the Citizen Action Assembly:

1. Funds be sought and secured to develop a program which will bring services to those people most in need.

2. Upon receiving of funds, area meetings be held in the State, as the first phase of the Citizen Health and Welfare Program. These meetings will follow, in principle, the goals, purposes, and structuring of the State-wide Assembly.

3. An Advisory Board (Committee) be established to insure the fulfilling of program goals and plans, and that this Board be composed of a third civic leaders, a third representatives of communities in need, and a third professionals from public and private servicing agencies.

B. Upon establishing a state-wide structure, which will be composed of a state-wide committee with an advisory board, and area committees with boards and community delegates, we recommend the following programs:

1. Consultative services (public or private) be secured for community organizations requesting health and/or welfare programs.

2. Leaders of community organizations be encouraged to assist in educating the general public by interpreting health and welfare programs to their membership, encouraging volunteer service in areas of need, and devising means of disseminating information to the community-at-large.

3. Students should become aware of communities with health welfare problems; they should examine (research) services performed by local agencies, and, in general, analyze areas of need--geographical and problematic.

4. Young people should be motivated towards careers in public health and welfare, particularly in those areas in most need of trained personnel.

5. Local action should be taken to establish a community information center which would be responsible for....

   a) developing a community agency inventory for the purpose of coordinating and co-relating existing services and developing those additionally needed;

   b) devising an uptodate fact sheet on existing services and a means of disseminating this information;

   c) actively involving the people receiving services, and in most need of services, in the planning of methods for more efficient dispersing of services and in the planning for additionally needed services.

C. We recommend that, in cooperation with various citizen action groups in Georgia, public and private servicing agencies....

...examine their current procedures for distributing services, and, wherever feasible, devise means for simplifying procedures.

...make home services available or, where such servicing is not feasible, funds be available for those individuals who cannot present themselves to take advantage of services.

...consider decentralization and extension of services to improve the quality and quantity of services for those communities in need.

...provide the assistance of qualified personnel to train volunteers for services needing aides.

V. We resolve that we as individuals and representatives of our organizations will assume the responsibility for taking the above recommendations and resolutions to our respective communities, that we will actively participate in their implementation and in the elimination of all discriminatory practices existing in health and welfare servicing by public and and private agencies in Georgia.

Dear Mr. Pecoul:

Thank you for having your booklet from the Placement Bureau sent so promptly. It was helpful and, I might add, impressive.

I have taken the liberty of sending your data to the chairman of the nominating committee of the North Carolina Council on Human Relations as well as to the chairman of the Louisiana Council committee. Frankly, I feel that the chances of an arrangement where-by the Louisiana Council Director could live in New Orleans are remote, and in many ways the North Carolina situation would be more suited to what seems to be your interests. It has more cities, for one thing, although none of them is as large as New Orleans or Atlanta. It also has far more colleges and universities, and the N.C. Council has a lot of people from academic communities in its membership.

All of this is simply to say that if your wish to live in one of the larger southern cities is at all negotiable, if you are otherwise interested, and if the North Carolina

Committee should approach you, I hope you would not dismiss the possibility at once.

Keep in touch.

Dear Mr. Stanfield,

Just a brief note to thank you for the up to date listings on the councils on human relations. I will see that we have them all on our mailing list and that you have a subscription to THE NEW SOUTH STUDENT.

SSOC is beginning to take the initiative in southwide student programing and I hope that we can keep you posted on our plans.

If it is possible, I would love to receive copies of all forthcoming publications from your Atlanta office. By our knowing what research you are doing, we can serve our constituency better. We find it a real help to know where to send people for significant research papers.

Looking forward to keeping in touch.

Dear John:

As Dr. Williams has written, Will Allred has accepted the offer of the position as Director of North Carolina Council on Human Relations. This means, of course, that we do not have among the state councils a suitable opening at this time.

In keeping with our conversation the Southern Regional Council would like to offer you a temporary and "open ended" position at our headquarters in Atlanta at a salary rate of $8,000.00 per annum. We understand that you could begin September 1. We are prepared to guarantee a minimum of three months' employment.

As Paul and I told you, this is the arrangement that SRC first made with me. There is no guarantee, of course, that it will work out as smoothly this time, but we are confident that, even if nothing develops within the SRC-state councils network, a few months with SRC would be a desirable pad from which to launch a career in human relations.

One implication of this is that we do value what you have to offer. I sincerely hope that you can see your way clear to accept this proposition.

If there are details you want cleared up, just write--or feel free to call. If you would like to return to Atlanta for a more leisurely visit and disucssion, we will arrange that.

We would like to have your response as soon as possible.

Dear John:

We are delighted to have your letter of June 13 accepting employment with us. I am sorry that I was so vague about the group medical care policy. The premiums for the policy are paid by Southern Regional Council and there is no cost to you. The policy does include maternity benefits beginning, I believe, ten months after the coverage begins.

Your coming to Atlanta on June 27 and staying for a day or two is very acceptable to us, and I noted on my calendar that you will be here.

September 6 will be a fine starting date.

We will be happy to see you again.

Dear Mr. Stanfield:

On the basis of the conditions agreed upon in your letter of June 8, 1966, I am happy to accept employment with the Southern Regional Council.

One minor point of clarification about the group medical care policy. Your letter says that coverage begins one month after employment. It is not clear whether this means that the policy is one provided by the Council for employees or one to which employees must contribute in order to be covered. Another point is whether this policy includes maternity benefits or whether a special coverage is necessary for this.

We would like to come to Atlanta later this month to get better acquainted with you, to look into housing, and to see the city. We would like to drive down, arriving in Atlanta Monday, June 27, in the evening and being available Tuesday and early Wednesday, if necessary. Would this be acceptable and convenient?

One final point about availability. I would prefer to keep open the possibility of beginning on September 6, the day after Labor Day rather than September 1 if that should become necessary for the completion of my academic responsibilities here at the university. Is this possible?

Thank you again, and I look forward to our meeting.

Yours truly,

Dear John:

Thank you for your letter of June 2. I am sorry you had difficulty reaching me in Washington.

We are happy to assure you at least two months of employment after any mutual agreement to terminate our arrangement. As you well know and indicate in your letter we do not at all anticipate such a denouement. We are simply in the predicament of having you available for employment at the end of the summer, being confident that you have much to offer this field, and being without a specific, permanent, and suitable position at the moment. I can scarcely imagine that nothing would develop in this fast-changing field that would be mutually satisfactory.

Concerning health insurance and retirement benefits: We have a group policy with Mutual of New York for complete medical care. You and your family would be covered one month after your employment begins. Our retirement plan is one by which SRC contributes four percent of each employee's salary under a tax-shelter plan, also with Mutual of New York. It would not be reasonable to enroll you in this plan on a temporary basis, since it would have no cash value until after two years and is limited to employees of educational institutions and non-profit agencies. However, if you wish to enter or continue a plan that you have through the United Church of Christ, we will contribute four percent of your salary.

We will pay the cost of moving your household goods to Atlanta. We will also work with you on the temporary housing problem. It is possible that satisfactory living arrangements can be made, but if necessary we would go to a modest rent subsidy or pay the cost of storing your furniture.

We are glad to know that the favorable impression was mutual, and we look forward to having you with us. Please let me have your final acceptance at your earliest convenience.

Mr Edwin Stanfield

Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Stanfield:

I tried to reach you in Washington and could not. I did get through to Paul Anthony and I assume that he related our conversation.

Briefly my concern was over the precise meaning of "temporary and 'open ended'" in your letter and in our conversation as opposed to "a minimum of three months' employment" in your letter. At worst "minimum" meant that if no openings developed in three months, then I would be without a job and adrift in Atlanta. To come on that basis would have forced me to begin looking for a new job "just in case" from the moment I arrived, and would not have allowed me to give full energy and attention to my work and future possibilities with you. I could not come under such an arrangement.

Paul Anthony assured me that you would not "leave me out in the cold" at the end of three months. "Minimum" means just that---at least three months of work and then more until such time as an opening develops or until we mutually agree that I should look elsewhere for work. At that point, I could again begin to look around while I continued to work with you for a brief period. I ask as a basic condition that the termination of employment not come until at least two months after such a mutual agreement. This would be the most unfortunate outcome of our arrangement and it certainly is not the one that I expect to occur.

Nevertheless, I want to prepare some kind of buffer to mitigate the consequence of such a possibility. That is why I make the two month notice a condition of my coming.

The salary rate of $8,000.00 per annum is acceptable, but I have some question about health insurance and retirement benefits in view of my temporary status. Paul Anthony indicated that your present programs would not cover me on a temporary basis. Would you be able to subsidize, in an amount equal to what you would contribute if I were permanent, my participation in other plans for which I am eligible through the United Church of Christ? Some such arrangement would also be a condition of my coming.

One final condition involves something we briefly discussed in Atlanta--the problem of temporary housing and moving expensives. We have very little furniture of our own---barely enough to fill one room.. Nevertheless we would have to move it to Atlanta and store it unless we found temporary housing that was partly furnished with , range, regrigerator, cabinets and so on. We have only a desk, a hide-a-bed, two chairs, a bookcase, a chest, some small appliances and many books. At any rate, as you suggested in Atlanta, I would have to ask for subsidy of moving expenses---which would be minimal--- and of extra costs for rent due to the indefinite time commitment.

Assuming that these conditions can be worked out, I am delighted to accept your offer of employment. I have read all the literature you gave me. What you are doing has stimulated and excited me. The need is obvious and possibilities are immense. To work in the context of the Southern Regional Council comes as close to my fondest hopes as anything could in our kind of world. I take it as a challenge and an honor to join you.

Finally, I should note that the decisive factor for me has been my opinion of you, Paul Anthony, and Dr. Wheeler as formed on the basis of our too brief visits. Quite apart from this outcome of employment the visit was excellent as a re-assurance that people of intellect, imagination, and integrity are deeply involved in crucial ways in making the history of the South change. That is something one hopes is true, but to have that hope confirmed as a fact is invigorating. Vigor has been big with me since 1960.

In short, and less cryptically, I look forward to working with you all as persons as much as I relish tackling the task you have defined.

Thank you once again.

Yours truly,

John A. Pecoul, Jr.

Dear Mr. Puckett:

Mr. Anthony has asked me to write to you concerning your request for reactivation of your application for employment with the Southern Regional Council or a related agency. We have found your biographical information sheet and have placed it in our active file.

We have no appropriate openings either in the office here or in any of the State Human Relations Councils at this time. As a matter of fact, this is rather unusual to have all of our state councils fully staffed. We never know when there will be a vacancy, however, and we shall certainly keep you in mind.

Meanwhile, if you would be interested in working for a government agency, let me suggest that you write to our Mr. Galen Martin, Executive Director, Kentucky Commission on Human Rights, Capitol Building, Frankfort, Kentucky. They are expanding their staff at the present time and might have an opening in which you will be interested.

Dear Marge:

Thank you for your letter letting me know what to expect at the United Church Women's meeting in Huntsville on October 7.

I don't know whether I will come up the night before or leave early enough to get there Friday morning. Also, I am not sure about the possibility of bringing Joyce and Mark with me since Mark is now in school. At any rate, suppose you just leave me to my own devices and I will be sure to get in touch with you when I arrive.

I probably will want to see some people from the local council while I am there.

I had a letter from Jim Tate the other day, and he tells me that things are going very well at the church from his point of view. I realize, of course, that things are never going well in a church from a preacher's wife point of view.

Dear Ed,

Thank you for your letter saying that you will speak to the United Church Women. We still feel it is alot for you to do without any funds from the U.C.W.

As it stands now, the meeting will be on Oct. 7th at the Latham Methodist Church on Heatherly Rd. S.E. There is a coffee from 9:30 am. to 10:00 am. The meeting should start at 10:00 with a devotional by the women and then you would have the remaining time. We would suggest about 20 mins and then definitely some time for discussion.

The purpose of our year has been to try to bring into focus those evils are hoping to do a Christian mission through their work. Our theme has been "Laity in Mission."

Of course the S.R.C. was in N'ville when I asked you, but I still think that there are very few people who are even aware of it and have no idea at all in what you are working towards in race relations. So I feel you could tell about the SRC and how you feel it has a mission for us all.

Our group may vary from 20 to 60 women and we have had a good many Negro women to participate in this group. However, at the meetings it is usually a very small percentage of women from each church.

You might be interested in knowing that First Presbyterian has voted to pull out of U. C. H.

We are helping out at a doctor's office and we doubt if he will be able to be there as much as he would like to be.

Would you like to come over and spend the night of the 6th with us or will you fly in. We would love to have you and Joyce. Let us know your plans and we can have someone like Frank, meet you.

Thank you for considering this undertaking. We would like some info. to give our publicity chr. for paper.

Love best to each of you and we hope we will get to see you even if we can't get to hear you.

Sincerely,
Margie

We forgot to say that there is a business meeting of the U.C.W. after you speak so we would suggest you close by eleven a.m. or a little after. Thank you.

Gentlemen:

The committee in charge of preparing the book has asked me to write a chapter entitled "Preaching on Civil Rights and Race Relations since 1954."

Would you please help me on this project in the following ways:

1. Send any information you have related to "Preaching on Civil Rights and Race Relations since 1954." Especially do I need sermons which have been preached on the subject. I will be happy to receive such sermons in any form (on tape, mimeographed, typewritten, printed, or in longhand).

2. Evaluate preaching on this issue as seen from your perspective. (For example, has there been much preaching on this subject? Too much? Too little? What changes have you noted about such preaching since 1954? In quantity? In emphasis? Which religious groups have been outspoken in favor of segregation? Of de-segregation? Which have been silent?)

Your replying to my request within the next two weeks will be deeply appreciated.

Dear Mr. Stanfield:

Region IV of this Department, with headquarters in Atlanta, Georgia, will hold a conference on family planning at the Biltmore Hotel in Atlanta on November 16 and 17. You are invited to attend and participate in this conference.

The purpose of the conference is to bring together leaders in the fields of health, welfare, education, and general community development to deal with problems of services and support for local family planning and health programs.

The President and Congressional leaders have emphasized the importance of making available information and services that will allow an individual the freedom to follow his own conscience in this vital matter. It is the objective of this Department to improve the health and welfare of the people, to strengthen the integrity of the family and to provide families the freedom of choice to determine the spacing of their children and the size of their families.

I believe that this conference will contribute significantly toward achieving the above objectives by delineating the methods by which programs acceptable to all may be developed and supported in the community. I sincerely hope that your schedule will permit you to attend.

Enclosed are a proposed program, an outline of administrative arrangements, a hotel reservation card, and a reply card. Please indicate whether you will attend, and I would advise that early hotel reservations be made.

Your prompt response relative to your attendance will be appreciated.

Dear Ed:

Spare-ribs often give me indigestion. Such was the case today when I called you, but I wasn't aware of the fact when I placed the call, or even thereafter until I started burping. Despite the acuteness of the attack, all is well now. I got relief by direct communication with the fine young fellow listed above. Decided to cut straight through the maternal protectiveness from several sources that has prevented man to man understanding. Am glad that I did. Believe that he really sees that we can work together now, just as you and he did. That's my chief goal at the moment along with establishing complete rapport with Lewis, and I don't anticipate any problems there. Think we--Lewis and I--made a good start last Monday and am looking forward to further contacts next week. By the way, I paid you a compliment with that "that's my chief goal." I don't hand them out like that very often. But I meant it--You are quite welcome. The new secretary isn't on the job yet; so the lousy typing is all mine. Besides this ain't the kind of letter that one puts in a file--and I hope you won't. But it doesn't matter if you do, nobody would ever believe and that an English major wrote it, and not even a New Critic could decipher it. If you have trouble, just reduce it to everything is O.K. and we will soon be on our way.

Thanks,

Jerry

P. S. I am stone sober, but am asking my wife to witness this statement--just in case of doubt. She is a notary public, but I don't consider it worth the extra cost to get her to affix her seal.

Dear Mr. Robertson:

At the request of Paul Anthony I am replying to your letter of February 9, in which you ask about a grant for the Boot Heel area of Missouri.

The $300,000 grant to SRC which you mentioned covers a three year period and is solely for aid to the several councils on human relations -- that is, the state organizations affiliated with SRC. I believe that this would eliminate the possibility of a grant to help provide a staff for the five county Booth Heel organization.

However, we do administer special projects in voter education, school desegregation, community organization, labor relations, and urban planning. It is possible that we would be able occasionally to provide consultants or pay expenses for consultants in these areas of concern to the five county association.

Dear Paul:

In an effort to better inform regional, state, and local civil rights and other civic groups of Commission activities in the various states, the Field Services Division is compiling a nationwide list of paid civil rights workers. We would appreciate receiving from your office the names of staff members on the various Human Relations Councils which are affiliated with your Council. We would like to secure, as well, a list of full-time workers on local council, if this is possible.

Thank you for your cooperation and best wishes.

Dear Martha:

Thanks for your help during my visit to Nashville last week.

After talking to you Wednesday morning I had an interview with Dr. Tarleton. He was reassuring about the problem of regularizing procedures and seemed to think that the new secretary would be a lot of help.

I am concerned about one thing that he told me, however. He said that some of the new grant-in-aid money intended to help hire the second staffer had been used to pay regular expenses. In assuring me that this would be "paid back" he said that he was going to withhold Baxton's salary until there was enough income to make up the difference. His reason was that money-raising is Baxton's responsibility.

I feel that this is unfair (although I refrained from saying as much to Dr. Tarleton) for two reasons. First, despite Baxton's boast, which you also quoted to me, it is not really fair to expect Baxton to raise money single-handedly; this is partly the responsibility of the Board and local officers, also. Second, if the Board feels that Baxton's leadership in this regard is inadequate, it seems to me that the forthright thing to do would be to terminate his employment, perhaps after a reasonable trial at improvement. The withholding of an agreed-upon salary does not seem to me to be a proper solution under any circumstances.

Dr. Tarleton's comment took me by surprise, and I did not react immediately. I wonder if you might bring it up with him. Tell him that I was concerned about it, if you like. I leave this to your discretion, of course. But I would favor paying salaries regularly, even if it meant "borrowing from Peter to pay Paul," until we can reach some solution at the meeting on April 16.

Enclosed is a copy of a letter to Baxton in which I agree to attend the April 16 meeting. I am assuming that this will be all right with you, but if it isn't, just let me know.

Warm good wishes,

Mr. Paul Anthony
Director, Southern Regional Council

Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Anthony:

I wish to call your attention to a significant action taken by the delegates to the recent Fifth General Assembly of the Unitarian Universalist Association in the field of racial justice.

The 821 delegates assembled at Hollywood, Florida, on May 20, adopted, with but three dissenting votes, a comprehensive Statement of Consensus on Racial Justice which we feel is especially timely as the Congress considers the Civil Rights Act of 1966. The Statement of Consensus reflects the preponderance of opinion of the denomination, its members and its churches, on the problems of segregation and discrimination, racial violence and the administration of justice, the franchise, education, housing, employment, public accomodations and facilities, federal-aid programs, demonstrations and civil disobedience, interracial marriage and adoption, personal associations, integration of the churches and ministry.

While it is believed this Statement will stand as a guide to our actions as a church body for a long time to come, it is contemplated that it will be open to revision when occasion demands.

Please feel free to make what use of this Statement you deem wise and to comment upon it if you feel so moved.

Yours very truly,

Rosamond C. Reynolds

UNITARIAN UNIVERSALIST STATEMENT OF CONSENSUS ON RACIAL JUSTICE

Inasmuch as one of the purposes and objectives of the Unitarian Universalist Association, as stated in Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution, is "To affirm, defend and promote the supreme worth of every human personality, the dignity of man, and the use of the democratic method in human relationships"; and

Inasmuch as the General Assembly of the Unitarian Universalist Association of 1962 affirmed that segregation and discrimination, wherever practiced, continue to be a matter of major national and international concern and reflect attitudes contrary to moral, religious and ethical commitments;

Unitarian Universalists pledge themselves to:

Work to eliminate all vestiges of discrimination and segregation in their churches and fellowships and to encourage the integration of congregations and of the Unitarian Universalist ministry, and

Work for integration in all phases of life in the community.

SEGREGATION AND DISCRIMINATION

The 1962 General Assembly's resolution also continues "Such discrimination is economically wasteful and psychologically destructive to members both of majority and minority groups. The treatment of a large part of our population as second-class citizens and the indignities to which they are subjected destroy confidence in the moral leadership of the United States.

In spite of the passage of Civil Rights Acts in 1957 and 1960, the comprehensive Civil Rights Acts of 1964, and the Voting Rights Act of 1965, inequalities of treatment and opportunity continue to exist in American society. While these inequalities affect members of all minority groups, attention has been focussed on the special problems of the Negro minority in the United States. Negro citizens and other persons engaged in the civil rights movement find themselves at the mercy of individuals who hope to prevent progress toward full equality of the races by resorting to physical violence and acts of terrorism, and the victims are often denied justice when they face all-white courts and juries.

A double standard of justice exists in some communities and states. All-white police forces, court officials, judges and juries, and segregated courtrooms and jails have operated to deprive minority group persons of the equal protection of the laws in violation of the United States Constitution. In everyday terms this means, at the least, harrassment and discourtesy from law officers and, at the most, summary trials without adequate counsel, and severe and unreasonable sentences or fines meted out, especially where the offense may be committed against a white man. Conversely, whites accused of crimes of violence against minority group persons or civil rights workers of any race, are acquitted by prejudiced juries or otherwise treated leniently, especially in the South.

Members of the minority races and ethnic groups find much public school education still segregated in defiance of the landmark 1954 Supreme Court decision. They find doors to fair employment opportunities still closed in many places, face uneven compliance with the public accommodations part of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, and see authorities in some places closing rather than opening public facilities to all groups.

Probably the most difficult hurdle, aside from jobs and education, continues to be housing where the Northern Negro especially finds himself confined to the decaying neighborhoods of the central city and the avenues of escape to the white suburbs effectively blocked by restrictive real estate practices. The Federal Government, though possessing the power under the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to cut off the flow of Federal funds to programs and activities in the states which are administered in a discriminatory manner, has not chosen to exercise this power to any significant extent.

A whole private area of American life, including club associations, fraternal memberships, and, shamefully, church membership, remains almost totally segregated. Several states maintain laws forbidding racial intermarriage, thus arbitrarily interfering in the most sacred of human relationships.

Much remains to be done to implement the concern of Unitarian Universalists for the supreme worth of every human personality and the dignity of man.

RACIAL VIOLENCE AND THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

The rise of violence in the political and social conflicts of American life endangers freedom of speech and assembly essential to democratic society. These freedoms and, in general, life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness are, and have been, Federal rights of all citizens since the founding of the Republic. To secure these freedoms, the President should appoint a commission to investigate the collapse of law in such acts of terrorism and make remedial recommendations wherever constitutional rights are denied. The local police should invite the assistance of the FBI in cases of terrorism.

The Justice Department should press with renewed vigor the prosecution under existing law of those guilty of the beatings, the shootings, the bombings and the killings. The President is urged to recommend and the Congress to enact new Federal legislation at the earliest moment to protect the security of the individual from assault or threatened assault upon his person or property, where that assault has a racial purpose or effect, and to provide civil damages for the victim of such assault.

State and local officials are urged to curb police brutality, to institute human relations programs in local and state police departments, and to end the use of unwarranted curfews wherever they exist. Support is also urged for Federal legislation to protect individuals against unreasonable use of force by law enforcement officers and to make such law enforcement officers and their civilian superiors liable for civil damage suits for unnecessary and unreasonable use of force resulting in physical injury. Enforcement officers formally charged with unlawful violation of the rights of persons should be suspended from their duties pending trial. Local civilian review boards to hear complaints of police brutality should be established.

The Department of Justice should enforce existing laws such as the 1875 statute making jury discrimination punishable by fine of up to $5,000, and seek new legislation making for a uniform system of choosing jurors which will fairly reflect the racial composition of the court's jurisdiction. Also, legislation forbidding discrimination in appointment of court officers and police is needed.

The Justice Department and Federal Bureau of Investigation should make on-the-spot arrests where constitutional rights are being violated by local law enforcement officers or other persons, as they are empowered to do under existing law.

The President of the United States should appoint men to the Federal judiciary who are free of racial prejudice and who do not owe their political careers to the system of white supremacy.

Other needed reforms to assure equal protection of the law include support for public defenders for the indigent, installment paying of fines, and limits on excessive bail.

THE FRANCHISE

The right to vote is elemental in our American society. Efforts by the Federal Government to implement the provisions of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 should be supported so that all obstacles to the right to vote may be removed in localities where they still exist.

The efforts of private citizens in voter-registration campaigns should be supported and the Department of Justice should be vigilant to extend the protection of the law to these workers so that intimidation of any kind will not delay, hamper, impede, or pervert the exercise of the franchise.

Federal voting examiners should be used in every county in which discrimination still exists. Federal authorities should also observe voting subsequent to registration to make sure that once registered, persons are not prevented by any device from voting, and that their votes, once cast, shall be accurately tallied.

EDUCATION

Denial of equal opportunities for education on account of race or color continues to be widespread though several years have intervened since the historic Supreme Court declaration of 1954 that the United States Constitution forbids it. Such disregard for the supreme law of the land presents a moral crisis no less than that resulting from the violation of the human rights involved. Public schools should be promptly integrated at all levels.

Since passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, it is no longer necessary for the Executive Branch to rely on the Federal Courts for implementation. Therefore, the Office of Education should move speedily to require desegregation and integration of the nation's public schools, North and South, and to use the powers granted under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to withhold Federal-aid funds from school districts which continue to segregate white from minority group pupils. "Freedom of choice" plans achieve only token integration and leave minority group parents who exercise "free choice" exposed, in many localities, to intimidation and reprisals.

De facto segregation of schools is as unconscionable and harmful as formal segregation is unconstitutional. Citizens and government on all levels should work to correct discriminatory racial imbalance and improve the quality of education in the public schools.

We urge adequate preparation of teachers in the field of human relations so that they may give meaningful instruction in human relations and we encourage federal and state authorities to work towards that end.

Preschool education for socially disadvantaged and culturally deprived children should be a necessary preparation for school integration.

HOUSING

Comprehensive open-occupancy legislation should be enacted at all levels and such legislation should embody firm and unambiguous enforcement procedures. The President of the United States should be encouraged to extend the President's Executive Order No. 11063 on Equal Opportunity in Housing to include all mortgage loans made by financing institutions which are regulated or supervised by the Federal Government and that the Order cover federally-assisted housing, not just that built after November 20, 1962; and that more adequate funds be appropriated for the vigorous enforcement of the Executive Order.

Furthermore, members of our churches and fellowships should support such legislation at the state and municipal levels. In order to make such legislation effective, individual Unitarian Universalists should introduce into every phase of the acquisition, purchase, building, financing, and occupancy of real property the banning of discrimination due to race, religion, or nationality. Legislation should be encouraged, consistent with the objectives of open occupancy, to curb panic selling or block-busting.

Our churches and fellowships and individual members should undertake active efforts with others in their own communities for the integration of their own neighborhoods and our members should scrutinize off-campus or sorority and fraternity housing in colleges and universities as it affects minority students or foreign students and other students and seek to eliminate discrimination.

Our churches and fellowships should call upon their individual members to make all housing, urban and suburban, new or old, which they control as owners, dealers, brokers, builders, or mortgagors, available to any qualified person, without regard to race, color, creed, or national origin; and should call upon all real estate dealers, brokers, and mortgagors, to do the same. Educational programs and other activities should be encouraged to promote equality of opportunity in housing.

Churches and fellowships should take the initiative in their communities to use funds provided in Section 221 (d) (3) of the Federal Housing Act. This enables non profit groups, including churches and fellowships, either to build low-cost housing open to all groups or to renovate slum dwellings.

There is promise in the proposal of some urban authorities to slow down the building of mass low-cost public housing in or adjacent to racial ghettoes, thus reinforcing patterns of de facto segregation, and instead to scatter new low-cost housing in upper and middle-income white residential areas, thus integrating both neighborhoods and schools. To be commended also is the new federal program to subsidize the purchase and rental of a percentage of publicly subsidized middle-income housing for low-income families. Plans for the renewal of present ghetto areas should ultimately include provision for their integration. Unitarian Universalists should be involved in helping to win acceptance and support of such programs.

EMPLOYMENT

Discrimination in employment stifles individual initiative and wastes valuable human resources. Government at all levels should enact strong legislation to assure equal opportunity in employment in the conditions of labor and in hiring and firing procedures and in training and apprenticeship programs. Compensation should be nondiscriminatory. No person should be discriminated against on the basis of race, religion, national origin, or sex.

The Federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, activated in July 1965, should be given the power to issue cease and desist orders against employers who practice job discrimination. In the meantime, the Department of Justice should move to use its power under the Civil Rights Act of 1964 of filing suits to secure equal opportunity, where it finds a pattern or practice of discrimination. The Department of Defense and other government agencies should be urged to use, whenever necessary, the powers granted under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, to bar bidding on contracts, or otherwise withhold funds, from those who practice racial discrimination in employment.

Unitarian Universalists as employers, should practice equality of opportunity, both in private enterprise and in public positions they may hold; and churches and fellowships are encouraged to hire members of minority races or nationalities in their institutions.

PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS AND FACILITIES

Freedom of access to places of public accommodation and public facilities is an essential condition to fulfillment of the ideal of human dignity. The individual must be free to seek food, drink, and lodging, to enjoy equal access to the marketplace, and to find recreation and nourishment.

Members of Unitarian Universalist churches are urged to use their personal influence in their local communities to secure service without discrimination in all places of public accommodation.

Progress has been made since the first student sit-ins of 1960 and since passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, in generally opening to all races, hotels, motels, restaurants and lunch counters, public libraries, museums, hospitals, parks, sports arenas, and theatres. However, in the 1964 Act, retail businesses, as such, are exempt from coverage, unless they have eating facilities, and clothing stores and barbershops are exempt unless they are part of a hotel facility. Spectator sports are covered, but consumer sports such as bowling lanes, swimming pools, tennis courts, golf courses, and golf ranges, privately owned but open to the public for profit, are also not covered. Legislation should be enacted at all levels of government to correct these weaknesses in the federal law.

FEDERAL-AID PROGRAMS

The Federal Government, which has been moving steadily forward in advancing the rights of its citizens, through a series of legislative acts and court decisions, should not continue to subsidize segregation and discrimination through its Federal-aid programs.

A powerful weapon for enforcement of civil rights is Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 which prohibits discrimination in all Federally-assisted programs. This section should be used less timidly and sparingly. Unnecessary delays in compliance are countenanced by the regulations issued by a number of departments and agencies. This part of the Civil Rights Act should be revitalized.

The use of Executive Orders to direct all federal agencies to administer federal programs without discrimination should be extended; the Federal Government should withhold the expenditure of federal funds from such state or local programs and agencies which discriminate against persons on the basis of race or religion in the granting or disbursement of their facilities, property, finances, or services.

Federal hospital and nursing home construction funds provided under the Hill-Burton Act should be withdrawn from institutions that practice discrimination against minority group persons.

DEMONSTRATIONS AND CIVIL DISOBEDIENCE

The people have the constitutional right peacefully to assembly to petition for redress of grievances. Every protection of the law should be extended to secure this right for civil rights demonstrators and to protect them against individual, mob, or police violence. Injunctive power should be granted to the Attorney General to protect the constitutional rights of petition and assembly.

Individuals should be defended in their right to engage in nonviolent demonstrations and should be supported in the exercise of their moral choice to engage in responsible civil disobedience for greater racial justice.

INTERRACIAL MARRIAGE AND ADOPTION

Marriage between two persons is a sacred human institution. Persons who enter into the marriage bond should be able to do so with complete freedom of choice, since the choice of a marriage partner is a personal, not a public, decision. All laws which prohibit, inhibit or hamper marriage or cohabitation between persons because of different races, religions, or national origins should be nullified or repealed.

Adoption agencies are evidencing a more open attitude regarding the adoption of children of races other than that of the adoptive parents. This new attitude is commendable, especially in view of the pressing need of adoptive homes for children of mixed or minority races.

PERSONAL ASSOCIATIONS

All Unitarian Universalists should refrain wherever possible from joining any and all organizations which discriminate on the basis of race, creed, and national origin and all individuals should work for the elimination of discrimination in any organization of which they are already members.

Individuals should work in human relations councils and similar groups formed to further better understanding among people and should improve their practices in all areas of human relationships.

INTEGRATION OF THE CHURCHES AND MINISTRY

The Commission on Religion and Race is reaffirmed and its duty shall continue to be to explore, develop, stimulate, and implement programs and actions to promote the complete integration of Negroes and other minority persons into our congregations, denominational life and ministry and into the community.

The Unitarian Universalist ministry should become integrated as rapidly as possible. This goal is essential for the denomination as a whole, for the individual churches, and for individual laymen as well as for the clergymen involved. This goal can be reached through special efforts in the recruitment, training, and settlement of Negroes and members of other minority groups. The denomination--its departments, churches, and agencies--should give this goal a high priority. The denomination needs the services of trained Negro ministers as much as, and probably more than, these ministers need opportunities within the denomination.

Integration of our congregations is a countinuing goal. Efforts beyond the mere declaration of open membership may be necessary if congregations are to become truly inclusive: use of the communications media, including the ethnic press, personal invitations to friends to attend services and meetings, and most importantly, the active involvement of the congregation and minister in the human rights movement.

The sincerity of our commitment to racial justice will be proven by our response, as a denomination and as members of churches and fellowships, to a variety of tests. Congregations are urged to include members of ethnic minorities in leadership positions on church boards, committees, religious education and youth programs, and other church activities. The content of programs for youth and adults should reflect our concern for human brotherhood. Particular attention should be paid to the religious education curriculum so that textbooks and instruction promote the goal of integration. Exchange programs with Negro churches, groups, and individuals should be encouraged. Employment of staff, purchase of supplies, contracting for building, purchase, sale, rental, or use of property, should all be done with the church or fellowship always making the stipulation that it practices integration and that it does business only with firms which practice integration in their hiring and other policies. Each church or fellowship should examine its investments and loans and do business only with firms which are non-discriminatory and integrationist in their employment practices. Churches and fellowships should patronize places of public accommodation which are open to all.

This consensus is adopted by the 1966 General Assembly of the Unitarian Universalist Association, consisting of a broadly representative group of laymen and ministers. This consensus reflects a substantial preponderance of opinion, although not necessarily unanimity on all points, of the majority of individuals present at the General Assembly and presumably of a substantial majority of members of our local churches and fellowships. Since this denomination cherishes and recognizes the freedom of individual members, this consensus does not presume to speak for all delegates to the General Assembly or all members of our Unitarian Universalist churches and fellowships. We recognize that strong differences of opinion may exist on specific questions among sincere and thoughtful Unitarian Universalists notwithstanding their common religious affiliation.

AS ADOPTED BY THE FIFTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITARIAN UNIVERSALIST ASSOCIATION AT HOLLYWOOD, FLORIDA, MAY 20, 1966. THE VOTE TO ADOPT WAS VIRTUALLY UNANIMOUS.

Huntsville, Alabama

Dear Jane:

I mentioned the maid's union at Huntsville to Emory Via, Director of our Labor Project. He suggests that you telephone him collect and the two of you can discuss the situation briefly. If it then seems advisable, he would be happy to visit and offer any assistance.

Al Ulmer, Director of our Community Organization Project, is out of the office today but Emory or I will talk to him when he gets back. It is possible he will participate in this effort, also.

I greatly enjoyed our conversations during and after the meeting in Birmingham on Saturday.

Dear Ed:

Somehow I misplaced the travel expense form that you gave us over there the other day. Will you kindly send me another? (I guess request -- found it and am enclosing.)

Overall, I thought that the meeting was excellent--even though Paul Anthony's report cast a pall over it. Paul's statements seemed to affect me adversely more than most of the others to whom I talked, and that may have been so only because they confirmed a fear that I already had as the result of watching some national trends. I hope that something on this subject will be forthcoming in a form that we can send it on to the chapters.

By the way, Professor O. T. Ivey mentioned to me that he has placed Southern Regional Council in his will with the Alabama Council to be a partial beneficiary. I hope that we don't benefit from that will for a long, long time--for Turner Ivey is a tremendously valuable human being. But the point is that he wants me to find out whether certain correspondence that he had with SRC on that subject is safely filed and whether the wishes expressed in it will be respected when the time comes. It seems important to him to know that--and thus it is important to me to find out when you have time to drop a line or the next time that I see you.

Yes - will honor - have lawyer draw up -

Thanks for your continued fine work.

Sincerely,

Jerry

Dear Jerry:

Thanks for your letter of September 25.

I agree that Paul Anthony's report was not a cheerful one, but in view of the political events of last week in Georgia I would have to say that he may have been optimistic. Really, it strikes me that vigorous viewing-with-alarm is in order.

Yes, we do have safely filed O. T. Ivey's correspondence concerning his bequest to S.R.C. and the Alabama Council. As Les Dunbar indicated in his reply, S.R.C. will honor his wishes fully. However, we still urge that the will- and this part of it- be prepared by an Alabama attorney, if it has not been so prepared.

We have a copy of a letter to you from Deborah Cole of the Norman Fund. As I suggested at the Board meeting, you and Bob should keep in mind the possible avialability of this money for any special need.

Best wishes,

Dear Mr. Rutter:

Vernon Jordan and I have discussed your request for a speaker at your annual meeting, and he has given me a copy of his reply to your letter of September 30.

If you can make-do with me as a substitute for Vernon, I shall be happy to come. Of the dates you mention, November 22 would be best for me. I could arrange to come on November 11, also, or November 19.

I have tentatively reserved November 22 for this engagement and will await further information from you.

Dear Mr. Rutter:

This is a belated response to your letter of September 30, requesting our services to secure for the Knoxville Council on Human Relations a speaker for your annual meeting in November. I would like very much to come myself, but because of a jammed calendar I cannot do so at this time. I hope, however, the Council will give me a rain check.

I have discussed your needs with Edwin Standfield, Director of Field Activities for SRC. It appears that Mr. Stanfield can speak to your annual meeting, and will be happy to do so if you want him to. I am giving him your letter and he will be in touch with you within the next few days.

We in the Voter Education Project will also be in touch with you regarding our plans for programs in the Knoxville area comes next spring.

Thanks for your splendid cooperation with us this past summer.

RECEIVED
OCT 3 - 1966

Attention: Mr. Vernon Jordan

Dear Mr. Jordan:

The local Council on Human Relations has been in existence only 18 months. In some respects we have accomplished great things, in others very little. Those things we have accomplished have through the determined efforts of individual members rather than planned group efforts.

We have only 56 members and many of them are financial members only. We need many more financial members, but we need a greater number of active members as well. Because some of us are noisy and others are articulate the power structure thinks we have a much larger membership. We have a voting seat on the Community Action Committee and the Mayor and School Superintendent grant us audiences almost any time we wish.

The reason for the foregoing is that we think you can help us grow by providing us with a speaker for our annual meeting in November. We plan a dinner meeting for the board of directors and nominees with an early adjournment to the regular meeting with the public invited. I think, with the proper press releases, etc. we might attract a fair crowd and some new members.

Our scheduled meeting date is Monday, November 21, but since the NAACP is meeting that night, we would prefer to meet on November 10, 11, 15, 18, 19, or 22.

I'm sure SRC is familiar with problems in organizing and has faced apathy in many situations. Baxton Bryant says you would do us a fine job and I am sure you would. We would like to have you or anyone you would recommend to help us.

May we hear from you soon?

Very truly yours,

Attention: Mr. J. Edwin Standfield

Dear Mr. Standfield:

Many thanks for accepting our invitation to speak. November 22 will be fine. Let me know when you will arrive. We plan to have a dinner meeting at a downtown cafeteria for the members of the board of directors at 6:15 PM and move to the Red Cross Building for the general meeting at 8:00 PM. If you plan to fly, the last plane from Atlanta to Knoxville that arrives in time will arrive at 12:30. The next one doesn't arrive until 6:10 PM and it takes 35 to 40 minutes from the airport.

Growth of the local council has been painfully slow. We organized in March, 1964, and now have 84 members including a number of husband and wife teams and 10 or 15 who have paid dues and never attended a meeting.

In spite of the University's presence here the climate is not conducive to liberal expression. The newspapers have a policy of silence toward what they consider to be the harmless liberal groups and vitriolic critism of the ones they consider to be dangerous. We are still receiving the silent treatment.

I know from hearing you before and from Baxton's remarks about you that we will profit from your visit.

Again, many thanks.

Yours very truly,

Dear Dr. Smiley:

Knowing of your interest in Southern Regional Council and your sympathy with the civil rights movement, I am writing to ask you to keep in the back of your mind our recurring need for able men for positions with state councils on human relations. We would appreciate having the names of any persons you would care to recommend.

We feel that the human relations councils have a special role to play which is only now becoming truly possible in many parts of the South. It is the kind of role in which the leadership qualities of a mature, experienced, intelligent clergyman who is alive to current social problems could help a great deal. I don't mean to aid and abet any sort of apostasy. But if you happen to know any apt apostates...!

Needless to say, this is no field for anyone who has more than the ordinary emotional problems, nor for the immature, nor for the incompetent. (That sentence sounds a bit stuffy -- not to say conceited -- but I think this has to be emphasized at whatever risk. We have to seek the best men available.

As you have occasion, you might mention this need to Kennedy, Kelly, and other fathers and brethren who are "with it."

It was good to see you in Richmond last month.

Dear Prim:

The Louisiana Council Board finally made a decision to locate the office in Baton Rouge. I assume that this eliminates consideration of you for the executive position. Although I have to agree that this was the best location, all things considered, I am genuinely sorry that we cannot go into this further with you. I do think you are remarkably well-qualified for this sort of work.

It was a pleasure to meet you, and I hope that we shall have opportunity to get better acquainted.

I understand from our mutual friend, Will Campbell, that you might be interested in seeking employment outside the pastoral ministry, perhaps in the human relations field.

From time to time we have need of able men for positions with our state councils on human relations. We try to keep a file of information on prospects for these positions for referral to appropriate state councils. If you would like to submit biographical data and a resume of your employment experience, we would be happy to have it particularly any experience that you have had as a volunteer or otherwise in connection with human rights or human relations. It would also be helpful if you could supply us with 3 or 4 references.

I might mention that many of our state council executives or former ministers find this kind of work very satisfying.

Dear Nancy:

I had put off writing to you because I anticipated going to Auburn with Vernon this afternoon and talking is easier than writing--even for me. Now we have had a change of plans and I have to write.

Sorry about standing you up. I had thought you would call a little before the lunch hour, and when you didn't, I just assumed something had happened and you weren't coming.

You had not mentioned that you were going to Chicago--at least not to my recollection. But it sounds like it was a good deal. The impression that I do not approve of the American Ethical Union is a gossipy and quite, quite unwarranted generalization from the fact that I discouraged the Huntsville Council from undertaking to sponsor their program in Huntsville last summer. This I did for what seem to me good and sufficient reasons--which incidentally did not and do not apply to the situation of the East Alabama Council. They are a worthy outfit, and I'm glad you went.

Concerning the books, your proposal can include any variety of books and uses you wish. I am enclosing supplemental information prepared by Harry DeLung, the young man who is administering this project for us. We found the task of preparing a meaningful booklist in a helpful variety of categories to be too formidable. Therefore we are asking each potential sponsor to request books by quanity and category to the extend possible. It will be much simpler for us to find books of the kind you want after we know what you want than it is to imagine all kinds of wants! But if you know specific titles, of course, you may request them. We can get almost any paperback in print, but some of them may take longer than others.

As to procedure, you are to let us know what you want and we will order them. We have access to the wholesaler's computer system and he is also giving us warehouse space and taking care of the shipping for us.

As for Jerry and the Alabama Council...you certainly are nosey, aren't you?!!

Dear Ed:

Well, I sure do consider myself stood up. There I was sitting in Emile's all by my lonesome. I really am sorry I missed you. You had already gone to lunch by the time I called and as I had only an hour to an hour and a half to eat lunch and catch the limousine back to the airport, I had gone directly to the restaurant hoping you could meet me there. We will try it again sometime.

My trip to Chicago I feel was very successful. In the first place I plain had a good time. Could not have been treated nicer. Could be easily sold on the American Ethical Union. Their leaders and delegates were a warm friendly bunch of people, maybe I say this because they treated me like a queen. My real reason for going was their Commission on Race and Equality felt that they might lose the money which had been used in the program we co-sponsored with them last summer and had planned to do so again this summer. Do you remember these? The play school, tutorial program, adult seminar and the inter-racial camp program. Anyway my role was to express the need and see if we could convince them that the programs were important. I was asked to respond to three things, one, What is the Alabama Council on Human Relations? Two, What is the Experiences of the White, Moderate and Liberal in the Recent Civil Rights Transitions? Three, What was the Value of the Inter-racial Programs We Co-Sponsored Last Summer? This I did. I received a standing ovation and couldn't have had people say nicer things. We certainly did get a lot of publicity for ACHR particularly EACHR in the newspaper and also on TV as I was interviewed by two of the TV stations while there. Hope you approve. Someone had gotten the impression that you might not approve of the American Ethical Union. How about that?

Ed, I have the guidelines in my hand for the paperback book program and feel we can use these in more than one project. Would this be possible? For instance, in the adult parent group and recreational groups for the children, these both being connected with Head Start. Also could use some in the tutorial program I mentioned above co-sponsored by AEU and the parent education program they intend to have this summer in connection with the playschool as mentioned above.

We do intend this summer to bring rural children into Tuskegee and through the playschool these books for both parents and children could be sent back home. Would it be possible to use them in both of the programs? Also, you say you can buy these wholesale in Atlanta. Do you have a list of available paperback books or does the wholesale company have this to make life simpler. We would really like to get underway right away with what we can do as our parent groups in Head Start and recreational groups in Head Start have started this week. Do we let you know the books we want and you purchase them, or do you send us the money and we purchase them? If we can include all the things mentioned, we would need a variety of books or a variety of books for a variety of ages. Would appreciate you giving me further hints as soon as possible. This sounds exciting and a very useful thing and if we could get it in right away as we would like to have the books available to our parents and children in Head Start. Thanks again. I will expect to hear from you soon.

Oh yes, forgot to mention that the money for the co-sponsored program was approved at the assembly of the AEU and so we will be having these programs again this summer. Let me know what you think about it all. Once again, sorry I missed you.

By the way, I called Jerry last night and poor boy he seems all shook up. I think he would much prefer not to have this directorship mentioned to him until he was out of school this summer. But so life goes. Has anything more been done, planned, so on? I talked to Gomillion last Wednesday and he seemed to indicate that things might be underway. Let me know, will you?

Dear Nancy:

Thanks for your cordial letter. You make me feel guilty for being so sarcastic.

Actually the negotiations are going along and, as you may know, a meeting of the Executive Committee has been scheduled for May 26. There are several little problems which have to be ironed out them, so nothing is certain. You shouldn't feel guilty, for you gave the whole thing a needed push to get it started. It is probably true, however, that none of the principals involved need further pushing at this stage.

I had suspected that Mrs. Gomillion's illness is terminal, but had not heard Dr. Gomillion or anyone else say so. Thanks for letting me know about this. I share your wonder at Dr. Gomillion's spartan self-discipline.

We have just gotten word from Sam Simmons that there are outstanding obligations from the School Desegregation Conferences which the Commission on Civil Rights cannot honor. These are a bill going out of the North Carolina Conference for lunches for $261.00, and the other is a cost of travel expenses of Morton Gitelman, University of Arkansas School of Law, who served as resource person at the Arkansas meeting.

Is it conceivable that the Foundation could take this amount from the funds returned by us to cover these, or is it possible that we could simply take these costs from the present Contingency Fund?

Dear Ed:

I am enclosing two bills which were incurred in connection with the education desegregation conferences and which are not properly payable from public funds.

One bill relates to the fact that approximately 261 persons who attended the North Carolina Conference did not make use of the facilities previously arranged for them at the College. We are stuck, therefore, with a balance of $261. Is there anything that you can do to handle this out of the monies available for these conferences, if the money is still available?

The second bill relates to expenses of one of the resource persons who participated in our Little Rock Conference. Through some misunderstanding, this man got the impression we would pay travel expenses incurred by him in serving as a resource person. Is it possible that this expense can be taken care of?

If these can't be taken care of, let me know and we will have to try to work out some other arrangement for payment. Although I will be on vacation for the next two weeks, I will give you a ring on this matter. Many thanks.

TO : Samuel J. Simmons, Director, FSD

SUBJECT: Travel expenses, Morton Gitelman, Little Rock Education Desegregation Conference

I discussed with Morton Gitelman, via the telephone, the matter of his expenses in connection with the Little Rock Conference. I told him that there was no way in which the Commission on Civil Rights could reimburse him, but there was the possibility that you could obtain some money from the Southern Regional Council to defray his transportation expenses.

I concluded the conversation by suggesting that he submit an itemized account of his total expenses, but I made it clear that we could make no commitment concerning how much of these expenses he would be reimbursed for.

Gitelman seemed satisfied with this arrangement and merely asked that we do the best that we can.

I have had several calls from the Committee about the July 9th meeting. Shall we meet at my house . . or hire a hall. It is up to you. You will recall, the meeting is to be in Little Rock.

Dear Oron:

Thanks for sending me the announcement about the Monteagle Communication Conference. I am sending along copies of it to a woman in New Orleans who expressed interest in the Emory Conference, about which she had read in my newsletter. I doubt that she will attend because she seemed to think that it would have a "church content," but I'll send it anyway.

Incidentally, while I was in Louisiana, Pat Miller told me that she felt the Emory conference was of great benefit to her and that she hopes to attend others. This strong positive reaction is set, in my mind, over against some very negative reaction that I got from professional associates who were not there but seemed to have some notion of what went on.

I am tempted to offer to pay tuition for a group of 6-8 people from the Huntsville Council on Human Relations to attend, if that many would go. At least they would make that Episcopalian confab interesting -- since most of them are Unitarians. My temptation stems from the fact that I was in a long discussion last weekend with some of them about how you deal with the "power structure," their contention being that you mount all the pressure you can muster and raise hell until they are forced to do right.

However, while I yet feel that they are wrong and that the question we have to ask most insistently about southern whites is Why? -- still I conclude regretfully that we cannot invest more money in communications conferences for the time being. For one thing, the cost of the Emory Conference I felt was really high, and it is too early to tell whether or not there will be good results. In fact we may never know, since one probably cannot say definitely whether desired changes, if they come to pass, were caused by the communication conference experience.

Which brings up the point that you have to take this sort of thing on faith -- and I just don't have that much faith in it for our purposes. It is a boon to those of us who have problems of interpersonal relations (as who doesn't). But there is something more to intergroup relations than the sum total of interpersonal relations, and intergroup relations is really our business -- despite the "human relations" banner.

It does seem to me that the basis of community in our time and circumstance is justice, not love. That is, we have to relate rightly not only to the people we know, but also to all the people we don't know but with whom we have an interdependent relationship. (This is not to say that love is not a higher value than justice, but only that in the nature of the circumstances justice is the highest attainable value.) If this be so -- that the value we seek is justice rather than love -- then the means we are after is power rather than understanding. I say it somewhat wistfully.

Could it be, by the way, that this is what SNCC and CORE and their allies are saying? That they are tired of worrying about understanding when what counts is power?

Perhaps you will say that relations between groups are carried on through persons, after all. But I don't think so. They are carried on through impersonal processes, such as voting, purchasing, etc. Besides, when Martin Luther King or Mayor Allen sit down at a conference table, practically speaking they are not and cannot be themselves. They are officials, representatives, symbols -- not quite people at all.

At any rate, I can't see my way clear at this point and moment to push this kind of thing further. That I have written such an epistle to say so is offered as evidence that my "thanks anyway" is most sincere.

Best wishes,

J. Edwin Stanfield

LEARNING VS BECOMING--HOW CAN I BE WHAT I LEARN

by Oron P. South
120 Acklen Park Drive
Nashville, Tenn. 37203

In looking at traditional practices in parishes and congregations, my impression is that most programs are directed more toward learning than toward becoming. That is, the chief emphasis is on having people learn the contents of the Bible, the Prayer Book, the Creeds, or Sunday School material. Where programs are activity oriented, emphasis is often placed on becoming an expert in the activity under study, such as prayer, or witnessing. The parallel to this orientation in theological schools is found in the assumption that salvation depends on deepening scholarship, so that expertness or depth of knowledge is more highly prized than encounter and existence. As a result, ministry for both clergy and laity is seen as revolving primarily around dispensing knowledge--the saving word.

The outcome of this orientation is that both Man and God take on the quality of abstract symbols, and the power to influence people is lost. As Man worships as abstraction, he becomes an abstraction himself in the process. And the more this line of endeavor is pursued, the more Man loses his capacity to be human.

Our traditional modes of study accustom us to think that the study of Man, of God, of Others, and of the Church, can each be conducted somewhat in isolation, and that the study of one does not influence the other. But this is not so. When we assert the one, we automatically assert the others, for they are inseparably bound together. When we choose to make God an abstraction, at that moment we also choose to make Man an abstraction, we make Others abstractions, and we make Community or Church an abstraction. When this happens a marvelous opportunity is created for academic learning, for the variations are endless, but often such creation is no more than an abstraction, an empty symbol. In saying this, I do not mean to reject all study, but rather to call attention to the need for being clear about purpose and results. Increasingly, for example, clergy and laity are turning to further study, some in graduate schools, because they have found the studyband worship of symbols barren. To the extent that such study leads to de-abstracting Man and God, then to that extent I think such study is useful. Where it merely leads to increased depths of knowledge about symbols and rituals, I tend to see it as almost useless and a positive hindrance.

Typically, then, the approach to God and Man as abstractions leads churchmembers to see the task of spreading the Good News as being the same as telling about the content of the Bible. They pass on the symbols they have received. Membership in the Church is conceived of as requiring the acquisition of knowledge. This shows up clearly when talk turns to missionary activity. The tendency is to want to send those members who are well versed in the Bible, and who know denominational creeds and doctrines. Training programs supplement knowledge by emphasizing what to say.

The conception of religion as involving chiefly the transmission of abstractions or symbols shows up also quite clearly when laymen talk about religion in business, or when talk turns to religion in schools. The difficulties seen in introducing religion into the marketplace or the classroom revolve around the lack of opportunity to introduce talk of God or Jesus into discussions on purchasing or buying, or into classes on economics or math. That one cannot be religious unless he talks religious subjects seems to be a basic unquestioned assumption. This assumption is reinforced by the admonition to "Go To The Church Of Your Choise."

With such an orientation it appears to me that a considerable number of clergy and laity are somewhat perplexed, and oten quite upset, by the notion of "Doing The Gospel," or "Doing The Truth," or "Being The Church." These same persons are also upset by Bishop Robinson's statement that it may be well not to use the term "God" for 100 years. This perplexity and upsetness I take it comes from an almost complete inability to comprehend religion in other than abstract or symbolic terms. If one cannot talk about God, then one cannot be religious. This may be a slight over statement, but not much.

The extent to which reliance is placed on conveying symbols can usually be guaged by looking at the organization of denominational instutions. Sunday Schools, men's groups, women's groups, youth groups, and prayer groups, are generally organized to pass out information or to develop expertise. While there may be talk about the benefits of brotherhood, there is usually a feeling that what is most beneficial is being down on one's knees or learning something religious. This learning is usually seen as being most worthwhile when it comes from an expert; that is, the unlearned cannot teach each other.

When this approach is emphasized in any congregation or parish, and especially when it is emphasized to extremes as it seems to me it often is, the Church fails to provide for members the chance to acquire an identity that is essentially different from that found in the world. As I see the matter, there is no essential difference between an expert on marketing and one on God as an abstraction. To the extent that expertise in abstract knowledge helps one to know God, then it makes little difference whether one is a marketing expert or a God-expert. While this may not be completely true, the difference does not seem worth arguing.

As the Church loses its ability to point toward an identity that is significantly different from that found in the world, then it loses its power to influence people. Further, it loses the power to minister significantly, to have it communications heard and taken seriously, and to have relevance to the lives of those with whom it is in contact.

When learning is the basic goal, then ministry is seen as deriving from expertise. Thus, to minister to the alcoholic, one must learn about alcoholics and develop a technology suited to alcoholics. If one is to minister to married couples in distress, then one "takes" marriage counseling. For whatever ill one is to minister to, an appropriate technology is available or can be developed. Church members, then, tend to see other as ministers to them only to the degree that those who minister have expert knowledge. What emerges finally, to put the matter in an extreme way, is that the Church ministers to those who need or want an abstract knowledge of God and Man. Other "needs" are much better ministered to in the world.

One concomitant of this approach is that as increasing dependence is placed on expertise, less dependence is placed on self. One trusts what one knows as an expert, but one does not trust one's self. And as one grows to mistrust one's self, or to lack trust in one's self, then it is difficult to put trust in others. What may result, then, is increasing alienation and isolation, the "unreachable" clergyman or layman.

The loss of power which the Church is suffering comes from the bind created by equating religion with learning, or more accurately with learning about symbols. One cannot be what he learns under this system, all he can do is tell what he learns. Doing, being, and becoming are not possible outcomes, except in a minor sort of way.

But doing, being, and becoming are real possibilities, if one is willing to accept the concept or premise that religion cannot be captured in words and symbols. It is possible, at least partially, to be what one learns, to become, to take on a new identity (one's own identity). When two or three choose to try to be what they learn, however, they inevitably will alter more than just their attitude toward learning. The effort to be and to become alters their relationship to each other, to others, and to the organizations in which they find themselves. In short, more than a change of attitude is involved in the matter.

In any congregation or parish where an attempt is made to work on being and becoming, the concepts of Man, God, and Church will immediately be brought into question, as will the organization of the congregation itself and the activities in which that congregation is involved. Questions arise because being and becoming involve self awareness. Awareness of self brings awareness of others and one's relationship to others. Relationships which contribute to being and becoming are valued, those which do not are seen as bringing death. Thus, the two or three who choose becoming find that in choosing they begin to question organization and organizational goals, for these are inseparably bound to the question of being and becoming. Included in this questioning of goals is also a questioning of the traditional interpretation of doctrine. In sum, the move from telling what one learns to being what one learns is not a simple move, but one which involves a multitude of other factors. It is in truth a shift from one dimension to another.

One of the means used today to try to effect this shift is the T Group, or Basic Encounter Group, in which people meet together in what is usually called an unstructured gathering. In the context of this paper, I think it will make most sense to say that the T Group is a situation which the individual is faced with freedom. This freedom is resisted in a number of ways, especially with the observation that it seems obvious one cannot learn from just sitting around saying what comes to mind. If, however, there is a willingness to explore freedom, an awareness of one's self in freedom may emerge. This awareness involves a recognition that one does have a choice in being and becoming. It also leads to recognition that in freedom one acts by choosing a goal. This choosing represents a moral act, as it is clear that several choices are open. When this is the case, then one's actions are not based on inevitability, but on one's own determination. This determination means that one is responsible, whether one wishes to be or not. In this sense, awareness leads to the loss of innocence; one lies in a different moral domain.

Sometimes when a deeper than ordinary awareness is first experienced it is glimpsed somewhat as a narrow step leading toward something different. As one mounts this step and puts all his weight on it and begins to look around, he begins to see a whole new landscape spread before him. While the boundaries and the horizon are not visible, and there are misty features, shafts of light illumine what can be seen in a beckoning sort of way. The realization crashes through the self that one has stumbled on to something immensely different. Then the question comes: Why didn't someone tell me about this before?

Exploration of this landscape may lead to the discovery of another step. And this new step may lead to another plain, or to rough mountainous, tortured, landscape. But how many steps there are, or what lies on each step, no man can say for sure. What one can say is that they can be found through freedom andawareness. One can also say that no one can really tell you about these unless he goes with you on the journey.

I have used the step and the landscape analogy because they seem to me to explain why a change program aimed at being and becoming may not lead to predictable and controllable organizational change, at least not controllable in the ordinary sense. There is no way of knowing. The way is through faith. If one chooses to be and to become, he cannot decide beforehand where being and becoming will lead. He can decide to stop at any time. But if he goes on, he goes in faith.

This faith is manifest in the belief that if one can endure freedom (including the freedom found in the T Group) he can encounter the depths of his and other's existence and emerge from this encounter stronger rather than weaker or destroyed. It is the experiencing of this truth that makes one free of the world and gives community the power to transform the world. But the power is in the experience, in the being and becoming, not in a symbol. The experience leads to life, to being what one learns; the symbol leads to death.

Dear Mrs. Spears:

Ed Stanfield told me today that you were still waiting for books from us. I am at a bit of a loss because the person here who placed your orders left the early part of August. The last letter to you that we have in our files is dated July 26, 1966, from Nan Pendergrast. She has written in longhand on the carbon that 10 copies of South Town, Before the Mayflower-History of Negro in America, and Roosevelt Grady were also sent. She also has a notation of August 5, 1966, that 5 each of 20 Sturdi Contour Books, 5 each of 15 Tip Top Rand McNally coloring books, and 5 each of 10 Golden Shape Books were sent.

If you can tell me the titles and how many of each that you have not received, I will be glad to check with the Atlanta News Agency here, which may have made an oversight. I'll make every effort to get the books to you.

Sincerely,

Dear Nancy:

Thank you for your long letter of September 20. I felt that the seminar in Birmingham was useful although not as productive as I had hoped. Let me assure you that the Alabama council is not the only one that has difficulties with motives, methods and appropriate roles.

At this point I am at a loss as to what books you have received, but I have asked Louise Cole to write to you to get the matter straightened out if possible.

The address of the Youth Educational Services is P. O. Box 1168, Durham, North Carolina 27702. You should write to the attention of Michael H. Lawler, and ask for their catalog of scholarships available to Negroes. Unfortunately, I cannot find the address of the outfit which had scholarships particularly for young people involved in the civil rights movement. You mention this to Mike Lawler when you write to him. I am sure he knows who it is that I am thinking of.

I do not have a manuscript of my remarks at the Auburn meeting. I keep hoping that I will get around to writing an essay, setting forth my position about the role of state councils in particular and white liberals in general in bringing about social change in the South. If I ever do it I will send you a copy.

As for the problem of "sensitivity", I am so insensitive I didn't even know we had one.

I expect to be out of the city most of next week, Wednesday through Friday, and I have an all-day meeting on Tuesday; otherwise, I would be happy to have lunch with you.

Dear Ed:

Thanks for being at our state meeting. Always like old home week having you back with us. I guess in a way the meeting left much to be desired but I wonder if we really could set up a number of guidelines for us to go by. That seems so sterile for some reason. I went to the meeting thinking this could be accomplished, I left the meeting thinking if each chapter really uses common sense in action we'll probably come out in the wash. Maybe the only guidelines we need are to talk it over with the state staff first. By that I mean both Bob and Jerry. Jan Valder did say to me this morning that we were beginning to lose some people like Bob. I wonder if this is really true. We had some new outspoken people on the board-one who Bob himself recalled to her-plus the fact I have heard Allen Black wonder about the Council, its action and so on for sometime, but the next morning at breakfast he seemed to be at least somewhat pleased with the meeting, although he said we hadn't really settled anything as I thought we all thought this. In fact, for what it is worth, my suggestion is we try this once again. We have at least gotten some feelings out, maybe next time more and more can be resolved. By the way, what's the feeling in the other Councils and do they get tied up in motive, role and all that jazz?

By the cotton pickin' way, I still haven't received the books from SRC that I have been waiting for! What's wrong with that organization? Maybe you just need me up there to run things. At least I guess I know you'll come through with the information I asked you for. Looking forward to getting it and trying to get her settled. In fact, good old Ed, you always come through. I am enclosing your check for expenses incurred when you spoke to our group. Thanks once again. Do have a big favor to ask of you. Do you have a copy of the speech that I missed and would you put in writing your thoughts you were expressing in Birmingham on Saturday about Black Power, Carmichael, Council's role, etc.? Preacher like, you have a graat way of expressing what many of us think. How bout it?

Oh, yea, I haven't forgotten that I was going to write you a letter about another little subject 'sensitivity' no less. If it wasn't for you always having a bunch of good jokes to tell I might go away mad. Would you care?

Keep up the good work. Let me hear from you. Do something about those blasted books and tell everybody at SRC "hello" for me. I may be in Atlanta next week so don't run too far. By the way, I think maybe SRC could have a seminar on how to work with whites!

Dear Ed,

This is to express my appreciation for having been put on the mailing list of the FIELD ACTIVITIES NEWSLETTER of Southern Regional Council.

Recently I was with one of the new National Council of Churches field workers in Alabama working out of Tuskegee Institute as a successor to Mr. V. A. Edwards. I refer to Rev. Robert Smith a Methodist minister from Indianapolis and a Tuskegee graduate now in Alabama with the kind of responsibilities that I have across the Southern states. I thought you might like to know about his work which is called the Religious Extension Service in collaboration with Tuskegee Institute's program and in cooperation with the National Council of Churches' concerns across the board in Alabama.

In addition, I am sure that Mr. Smith would benefit from reading your newsletters, and I would like to request that you put him on your mailing list. Please send him back issues for the last few months.

If you think of any other orientation material that he should have, I am confident he would appreciate receiving same.

Thanks for your attention to this request. Hope to see you soon.

Dear Sam:

Receiving the full list of participants at the Louisiana School Desegregation Conference, held last Spring, reminds me to write a word of appreciation to you for your part in making these conferences possible.

I think all of the conferences helped the interested and affected people in the several states to find their allies and the available helping persons, as well as to understand their rights. We, for instance, will be putting this Louisiana list to use as a source of contact-persons for our new executive director of the Louisiana Council on Human Relations.

I know that you have had some negative criticism from well-meaning people who felt that the conferences did too little good. My own feeling is that these people are failing to make a distinction between the basic inadequacy of "freedom of choice" to eliminate the dual school system in the South and the worth of these conferences -- which were helpful in achieving what could be achieved under the circumstances.

Dear Ed,

I' sorry to be so late in responding to your letter of late September, but have delayed anwering until I could take the time to set forth in some detail my answers to some of the questions you raise.

In particular, I should like to comment on what you have to say about the use of power to achieve justice in community affairs. As a preamble, let me say that this was one of the fields that I studied and lectured on at Air University for several years. I mention this not to set myself up as an authority, but to indicate that I have given some study to the problem. While most of my effort was directed toward trying to get an understanding of the uses of power and its effects in international affairs, I believe some of the findings are applicable to community affairs.

While there may be those in the field of laboratory training who are reluctant to consider the use of power, or who are forthrightly opposed to the use of power, I do not consider myself as being one who advocates renunciation of power. I don't think justice is possible without power. Further, in most of our communities, I think we are very reluctant to admit to the use of power to keep people suppressed. This reluctance to acknowledge the value of power, whether rightly or wrongly used, has an ancient tradition in American history. C. Vann Woodward a few years ago in a very perceptive article pointed out how for over a century we were protected by weak neighbors on our borders, by the British Navy, and by the Arctic, Atlantic, and Pacific Oceans. Without the necessity for armed power, we tended to believe that those who used power were inherently sinful and wicked. This same attitude, I believe carries over into community affairs. For this reason, I don't believe it is the spectre of black power which is so frightening, as power itself, openly mentioned. Unleashing the power dynamic, then, whatever the cause associated with it, immediately taps into long existing and latent fears. These fears in turn mobilize an immense amount of energy, usually released in an Old Testament quality of punishment (i.e., unconditional surrender for the Germans and Japanese, accompanied by the demand to restructure both societies from the ground up).

Behavioral that power is used confusing dealing with power passive positive with power

At the same time fears are aroused by grasping for power, the linking of power to "righteous" goals attracts those who like to feel that they are on the side of God, and who, from my point of view, are bothered by not being able to put most affairs into a simple right or wrong category. I include in this group those who headed for Selma, Montgomery, Birmingham, and other trouble points, simply because "it was right." confrontation

Typically, then, as I see it, when battle is joined over the issue of power per se, two groups come forth to confront each other. On the one hand we have the righteous, and on the other hand we have the wicked. While this is slightly overdrawn, this tends to be the way the power battle is fought in American communities.

What is missing for me in this is a sense of power with reponsibility. I dislike the business of disregarding the responsibility for one's own actions behind the cloak of doing what is right, for "right" and "wrong" are logical distinctions. Acts in themselves carry consequences and cannot be logically confined to one single consequence. Those who try to establish what is right, in a logical sense, also tend to try to establish what is just in a logical sense. Another way to establish this is through dialogue as between contending parties without recourse to abstract logical distinctions. Ghandi, I am told, although trained in Western law, when confronted with his first client threw away his legal training and tried to mediate between the contending parties. Greek

As nearly as I can read what Martin Luther King tried to do, he preaches responsibility. Although he says what he is striving for is right, he does not advocate right as an unlimited absolute, but as a condition limited by responsibility. This for me means that he is open to communication, while I suspect that some of the advocates of black power are not. ? stimulat

In lab training, then, I do not see myself as saying that the use of power is bad, or that the use of power is not to be considered as a legitimate way to have influence in the community. But I do see myself as trying to get participants, as well as myself, look at the consequences of the use of power, and the responsibility which we all bear when we use power. And I also see myself as advocating looking at possible alternatives to the use of coercive power. In short, I think there are a number of change strategies available, many of which do not have some of the possible undesirable side effects that the use of coercive power has. Alternatives

I think there is also another aspect of this that needs to be considered. Since World War II, as a nation we have for the most part tried to solve some of our most vexing international problems by relying on the capacity of science and technology to provide us with the means for continually increasing our material power, and with means for defending ourselves from attack by others. This reliance on science and technology has produced a sort of attitude that many of our most pressing human relations problems can be solved by technical means. In our communities I think this same attitude shows up when people try to solve human relations problems not by changing attitudes, but by trotting out some technical device. I include in technical devices in this sense the use of power.

In international affairs the ability of science to provide hardware answers to human relations problems has reached a dead end. The significance of this was seen several years ago by many people in the defense department, but has not been grasped by the people at large. Herman Kahn, for example, went around lecturing about the ultimate weapon, that is, the ultimate weapon of technology. This was a nuclear device buried deep in the earth, capable of blowing up the whole world. When threatened by an enemy, the only retaliation one could offer was pressing the button which would blow up everything. As nearly as I can tell when Herman presented this story, many people reacted by saying that he was inhuman. I don't think Herman is a monoster; what I think he was trying to point out was that science and technology simply cannot solve some of our most basic human problems. I would put it this way: when you run out of the ability to solve your problems by killing people or besting them with scientific inventions, then you may be faced with the alternative of trying to establish trust as the basis for solving problems of living together. Thus the horror of nuclear weapons is not so much that we might blow up people as that we might have to live with them in some ways that are not of our own choosing. I think it is important to recognize this at the community level, for inevitably we apply the same problem-solving process to national problems that we apply to community problems. Thus the person who advocates the use of unrestricted power in a community tends to advocate the use of unrestricted power in international relations.

So far as I can understand the matter, Kennedy understood the change in international affairs brought on by the failure of science and technology. What he tried to substitute for straight power diplomacy was a strategy of communication. You may recall that he had a face-to-face confrontation with Kruschev. I don't know what he said, but I surmise that he told the Soviet Prime Minister that he was interested in their reaching a clear understanding of each other. This did not mean agreement, but rather that they communicated accurately with each other. In other instances, Kennedy used power to get the other person to listen. He announced what kinds of weapons we had and what we intended to do with them, thus trying to do away with secrecy so that intentions could be made clear. In these and in many other ways, Kennedy was trying to switch from power politics to communication politics. I think he was succeeding, and this I think is one of the great tragedies of his death, for I do not believe Mr. Johnson understands this approach, as he has grown up in the power-and-persuade school.

I think this same kind of strategy is available in our communities for the process of change. But I do not think that it can be used in most communities at the present for people are not yet trained in clarifying their own motives, in being open, and in recognizing their own responsibilities. Again, I would call attention to King and the openess with which he announces his goals and his methods.

Spontaneity

Well, this has turned into a rather long letter. I hope we have a chance to talk some of these things over more at length some time.

Best regards,

Oron

Dear Jack:

Thanks for your letter of November 29 and for sending me the "Brief Summary--Demonstration Cities and Metropolitan Development Act of 1966."

At this time we do not have definite plans for a program in connection with this Act involving the state councils. I am very much interested in exploring the possibilities, however. I am writing for copies of the "Brief Summary" for distribution to our local councils through the state council offices. It seems to me that information about the Act might be another possibility for the agenda of the Southern Interagency Conference.

At the very least, as your ALERT bulletin suggests, councils in cities of some size--say 300,000 or over--should be urged by all means to open conversations with the municipal authorities in their metropolitan area as to what they intend to do to take advantage of the opportunities provided. I don't think such officials in the South, generally speaking, realize yet what troubààs they are headed for. Certainly it is a valid function of human relations councils to help educate them by raising with them the need for planning and action.

I'll see you at the SIC meeting in January, I suppose, if not before.

Dear Paul,

It may be that John Hills and/or his substitute may not be able to stay entire annual mtg ----- We need to know schedule + program to assist in decision as to best time.

Some SPEED-UP crises et al have delayed typing of all reports but since we don't have a June 30 or Dec 31 Bldg & Loan interest date to cope with in preparing the reports you need for Oct 15th deadline first O.K.?

Much we need to talk about and I hope your offer to spend a part of a day with us still holds. Please advise pronto

I had hoped to have a joint meeting with you and Ed last week but discovered that you were in New York. Had lunch with Ed. Hope our quarterly report will attest to our compliance with terms of the expanded grant-in aid as we've understood it -

Dear Mr. Timpane:

In reply to your letter of March 18, the Southern Interagency Conference meeting has been set up one day because of a conflict. It will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday, April 19 and 20.

If it will still be possible for you to come, we will be happy to have you. We understand that you would prefer to observe and listen, for the most part. At some point, however, it would be helpful if you could give us a brief outline of your office's role and then answer questions. I believe the agency representatives would be glad to know how they can best assist you in your work, too.

Please let me know if you will still be able to attend. I am sorry about the necessary change in dates.

Dear Dr. Tarleton:

This will confirm, pursuant to our telephone conversation last evening, that the Tennessee Council is authorized to use funds from our expanded grant-in-aid temporarily for general operations. We understand that funds will be restored to the special account out of returns from the council's funding campaign.

Since the Tennessee Council's primary proposal was to employ an associate director, our only concern would be that this be done in time to show use of the funds for this purpose during the grant period, which ends February, 1967. In fact, as you will recall, one of the general conditions was that the second and subsequent quarterly payments would be withheld until proposed additional staff persons are hired.

I look forward to seeing you at the Board meeting on the sixteenth.

In reply to your letter of April 8 to Mrs. Ruth Alexander concerning the quarterly grant to the South Carolina council, I am sure you understand that our policy is to forward the quarterly payments upon receipt of financial reports and program reports for the preceding quarter. These reports for the South Carolina council were received on Wednesday, April 6th. As it happens, I was out of the office on Thursday and Friday. However, I do not believe that failing to get the payment to you by April 8th did constitute unreasonable delay in any case.

This summer the Council is sponsoring SPEED-UP (Summer Project for Educational and Economic Development) in some of the poverty-stricken areas in South Carolina. About 125 college students from S.C. will be participating in the program. In order to enable the students to do effective work in the area of poverty, we are giving them an intensive one-week orientation starting June 5.

Alice Spearman mentioned some psychological studies done by Dr. Robert Coles that might be of great help to the students. She also said that she was sure that we could count on you to send us information on these studies soon. If there are any of these studies left, would it be possible for us to obtain them, either with or without charge, before June 5. We would need at least 125-130 copies.

We have no appropriate job openings at present in the Southern Regional Council itself. Your interests and experiences seem most suited to work with one of the state councils on human Relations. A little more information would be helpful. Would you send references, the names and addresses of three or four persons who have known you and worked with you, preferrably in a variety of relationships, during your years in Louisville? Do you have any preference as to location? Do you plan to be in or near Atlanta in the near future, so that you might come for an interview?

AIKEN COUNTY COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

April 11, 1966

Mr. Edwin Stanfield
Director of Field Activities
Southern Regional Council
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Stanfield:

Thank you for your letter of March 15 indicating that you may be able to speak at our May 5 meeting. In answer to your questions, the current interests of our local council are concentrated in developing employment opportunities, OEO poverty programs and tutorial programs. We have an active committee meeting with local industries attempting to encourage increased hiring on an equal basis. The local Economic Opportunity Commission has been slow in establishing a program in response to local needs and our organization has been trying to encourage action in this area. We enthusiastically sponsored a tutorial program last year for students transferring to desegregated schools and an even more ambitious program is underway for the coming summer.

If you or any one in your office have experience in any of these areas, I am sure our group would be interested in these experiences and suggestions of the SRC in these programs. But, perhaps more important, I do not believe our group is sufficiently well acquainted with the work of the Southern Regional Council and, therefore, a primary purpose would be to acquaint our group (and our community) with the programs of the SRC.

In answer to your last question, I am enclosing a pamphlet which briefly describes the Aiken County Council. You will note that we have over 120 members. About half of these members actively participate in our programs and attend our monthly meetings. For the size of our community, we have a relatively large and active group.

I hope that this will answer your questions and that you will be able to speak at our May meeting.

Sincerely,

Allen F. Westerdahl

The Aiken County Council on Human Relations was organized in February 1963 for the purpose of promoting good race relations in our county. From an original dozen persons, it has grown to a membership of well over ~~100~~ 120 Negro and white citizens.

MAJOR ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE COUNCIL INCLUDE THE FOLLOWING:

1) It has provided a forum for communication between races, for the airing of problems, for the expression of common goals.

2) It was instrumental in the establishment of the Aiken STEP school for job training and has sought out new employment opportunities for Negroes.

3) It has urged the opening to and use of cultural facilities by all people.

4) It has established communication with the government of the City of Aiken.

5) It worked with representatives of the Aiken County Hospital during the integration of facilities at that institution.

6) It encouraged adoption of a pupil transfer plan for public schools and assisted in presenting a summer tutorial program for transferring students.

7) It established a Student Council on Human Relations.

Some of these achievements have been real ones, some intangible; but in all its activities the Council has sought to work quietly, without undue publicity. Its method has been to negotiate through correspondence or to send representatives to confer privately, and this manner of operation has proved effective. As one of the Council's members has said, "We don't create problems. The problems are there -- we try to work toward their solution."

THE COUNCIL ANTICIPATES EXPANDING ITS WORK IN THE FOLLOWING AREAS:

1) Contact with county governmental representatives.

2) Increased emphasis on employment opportunities and on compliance with new legislation.

3) Continued emphasis on educational opportunities open to citizens of all ages.

4) Encouragement of programs developed under the Poverty Program.

5) Urging the use of all public facilities by all people.

Monthly meetings are held by the Council the first Thursday of each month at 7:30 p.m. at announced locations. Business is transacted, and generally a speaker is provided. All Council meetings are open, and interested persons are cordially invited to attend.

The Council is governed by a 15-member Executive Board which includes elected officers and appointed chairmen of standing committees.

The Aiken County Council on Human Relations was incorporated in October 1964 under a charter issued by the State of South Carolina.

The only qualification for membership is payment of yearly dues of $1.50. Membership is encouraged in the South Carolina Council on Human Relations, with which the Aiken County Council is affiliated.

Gentlemen:

A group of us here in Tuscaloosa, Alabama, and at the University of Alabama, are presently considering the possibility of forming a bi-racial committee to deal with various problems that have come up from time to time.

Would you kindly send us materials that you might have that would help us organize such a committee. Also, we would be interested to know to what extent such committees have succeeded or failed in other parts of the country.

With many thanks, I am,

Sincerely,

Dear Mrs. Watkins:

In reply to your letter of June 3, perhaps I should explain, first, that the state councils on human relations which are associated with us (although they are autonomous) are voluntary associations, as are their councils in various cities and counties. They have no official standing with municipal or state governments.

In case you are interested in official human relations or community relations commissions, I have enclosed a list (which appears to be a bit out of date). I should observe that a simple listing means very little. In most cases southern municipal human relations commissions have little or no budget, staff or authority; frequently they do not function, and when they do it is only within very narrow limits. There are exceptions. The Tennessee Commission has a very fine, dedicated staff. The Louisiana Commission on Human Relations, Rights, and Responsibilities has a staff, but it has just been formed and it is not possible to evaluate it yet.

As for the staff and local councils on human relations with which we work, their purpose and function is similar to that of the Southern Regional Council. They have different program emphases, depending upon the needs of their community and the interests and capabilities of their Boards and staffs. They aim "by programs of research and action, to obtain equal opportunities for all people of the South."

Under separate cover I am sending you a little literature about the Southern Regional Council.

Please let us know if we can be of further assistance.

Gentlemen:

The Citywide Committee of Individuals and Organizations for Human Rights (CCIOHR) is a non-profit, charitable, Texas corporation located at Austin, Texas. It was chartered in early 1966 for the purpose of providing an organization in which members of Austin's three major ethnic groups (Anglo, Negro, and Latin-American) could begin to work together effectively for the solution of pressing human relations problems.

Despite the presence of the University of Texas and state government offices in Austin, small progress has been made in this capital city during the past three years in dealing with extensive discrimination based upon race, color, religion, or national origin. This discrimination is to be found in both public and private employment, in union membership and apprentice training programs, in housing, and in certain types of public accommodations such as credit facilities, funeral homes, business schools, and beauty shops. Leadership in the majority "Anglo" group has been almost totally lacking with respect to these matters. For example, no Negro or Latin-American holds a position as a teller or loan officer in any Austin bank. No Negro or Latin-American was admitted to twelve of thirteen building trades apprentice programs. Fifty-two percent of Latin-American families and fifty-seven percent of Negro families have incomes below $3000 annually. In one Negro and in one Latin-American "satellite slum" the families have an annual average income below $2000. Many Negroes and Latin-Americans are paid less than others for doing comparable work. Many of them are purchasing homes under contracts of sale that contain the most harsh of terms, often applied so as to destroy the value of their improvements without any recourse being provided them.

An especially unfortunate aspect of the situation in Austin is that it has a great influence throughout the state. By and large Austin's condition is duplicated throughout the urban centers of our state in which large numbers of Negroes and Latin-Americans live. The CCIOHR was formed not only to set aright prevailing injustice in Austin, but also to provide a model that will have influence upon the rest of the state.

Perhaps the most tragic lack in this community has been the absence of minority group leadership in human relations matters or any vehicle through which it could be developed. The NAACP has been singularly ineffective and no comparable national organization is operating in this city. There has been little co-operation between the two principal minority groups for their mutual progress. The absence of minority group leadership in the Negro community has not resulted from lack of a well educated and capable group of Negro leaders. The absence of similar leadership in the Latin-American community may be attributable in part to lack in this respect. By and large the affluent among Negroes and Latin-Americans have contributed almost as little as the Anglos to elimination of racial and nationality discrimination. They have been apathetic about the tragic conditions of their fellow citizens.

It is one of the major purposes of the CCIOHR to strive to cope with the leadership problem in the minority group communities. It seeks to help potential leaders among the middle and lower income groups of both Negroes and Latin-Americans to emerge as leaders in human relations matters. It seeks to help the two minority group communities to begin work together for this purpose of creating equal opportunities for all their members. It seeks to provide a means by which Anglos with needed training and commitment can assist these potential leaders to become effective as leaders for these purposes. Another purpose of the CCIOHR is to study the nature and scope of human relations problems in Austin and to provide various kinds of services to ameliorate them.

To accomplish these purposes CCIOHR has been meeting weekly in various churches and community centers throughout the two minority group communities. It has developed a membership of approximately two hundred persons, two thirds of whom are Negroes and Latin-Americans. Some of these are small businessmen, others are teachers, still others are managers and employees of local businesses. Its first project was directed toward preparing and securing the adoption of a civil rights ordinance. An ordinance was prepared modeled after those in effect in cities such as Philadelphia, Baltimore, and St. Louis. Four months was consumed in presenting it throughout the minority group communities and eventually before the City Council. The City Council refused, as it had twice before in the past three years, to create an official human relations commission or adequate human relations law dealing with discrimination in the areas mentioned above. It fostered instead the development of a private corporation to receive human relations complaints.

Although this is a small achievement, it is a minimal and pitifully inadequate step since the corporation formed lacks basic understanding of existing problems and essential commitment to their solution. It also lacks channels of communication with, and even more significantly, the confidence of minority groups.

The first project of CCIOHR served to provide excellent leadership training for minority group members; it also cemented the members together in an effective working group. The second project of CCIOHR is one of interviewing representative Negro and Latin-American families to elaborate the nature and scope of their human relations problems in employment, housing, credit facilities, and welfare assistance. This project is based upon the theory that one must go to where the problem is, to understand it and to develop constructive and co-operative efforts towards its solution. Minority group persons are conducting these interviews. During the past week, CCIOHR has established a permanent Citywide Center for Human Rights on the premises of the Holy Cross Catholic Church in rented quarters. It is expected that families interviewed will be coming into the Center for assistance and guidance.

A third project underway is that of job counseling. Presently CCIOHR is seeking to establish liaison with personnel directors of government agencies and private employers who will employ minority group personnel. It seeks to know what personnel will be hired and the qualifications wanted. It also is seeking out personnel to fit these jobs. So far two major federal agencies have opened jobs to minority groups as a result of its efforts. One has even designated CCIOHR as its source agency for securing minority groups personnel for job openings.

The purpose of this letter is to inquire whether your foundation would be willing to entertain a request for support of some of the work CCIOHR is attempting. So far it has raised funds by solicitation of members. This has been sufficient for our limited operations to date. It now becomes evident that to maintain a Center and to staff it with part-time and full time personnel that CCIOHR must somehow manage to obtain financial support that goes well beyond what it can hope to raise through solicitation of members. While it will continue to probe for federal funds through OEO, it is reasonably apparent that the City Council at present will oppose the granting of funds for such work as it is doing. Recently, for example, the University YMCA-YWCA sought City Council approval for OEO funding of its services in one of the "satellite slums"; this was rejected.

You might be interested in the nature of CCIOHR leadership. Mrs. James H. Means, one of our directors, has long been one of the outstanding public school teachers in Austin. She is Negro. Her husband is a professor of mathematics at Huston-Tillotson College in the city. I am also one of the directors. I have been a professor of law at the University of Texas School of Law since 1948, and have publications in the fields of civil rights, administrative law, and jurisprudence.

Mr. Robert E. Canino, our third director, is a state hospital employee in the field of psychiatric care. He is also chairman of the American G I Forum, Austin Chapter, which is a specialized organization for administering to the needs of Latin-Americans. Our subcommittees are each co-chaired by an Anglo, a Negro, and a Latin-American. At the present time we have subcommittees for the Study of Minority Group Problems, Job Counseling, Programs, Complaints, Negotiation, and Funding. Professor Bassett Maguire of the University of Texas Zoology faculty, Mr. Michael Hernandez, a doctoral candidate at the same University, and Mr. Milton Gooden, an officer in a Public Employees Union serve on our Negotiation Committee. The other committees are staffed by similarly well qualified persons.

We need immediate funding to support our present minority group study and counseling efforts at our center. We feel a sum of $2000 would be of substantial assistance to us for these purposes and enable us to carry through for the next four to six months. We also estimate that we need to find ways of supporting an annual budget of around $25,000 to maintain a staff at the center as well as the center itself. We hope to discover ways of raising some of this money locally.

It is our hope that your organization will have a general interest in what we are doing and that, if it does, you will provide us with information that will be helpful to us in preparing a proposal along the lines indicated above.

Sincerely yours,

Joseph P. Witherspoon

Dear Dr. Wilber:

Your letter of September 8 to Mr. Anthony has been referred to me for answer.

In general we have found that a genuine sense of commitment, together with mature emotional balance are the strongest and most important qualifications for the job of Executive Director of a Human Relations Council. A good sense in administrative ability also is important, of course. Neither Mr. Anthony nor I feel that previous experience as a professional in this field is a high priority consideration.

I am enclosing a resume' on a young man who is working temporarily in our office here. Asyyou can see he is exceptionally able. Because of his lack of experience in this field in particular and in adminstrative positions generally, we would prefer to see him continue here for at least three months before taking any position. We do have a very high estimate of him, however, and think that you might profitably consider him.

If we can be of further assistance in any way, please let us know.

This is just to follow up on my correspondence with you and Mr. John J. Doyle in August. We are interested in Austin and in Texas and are eager to render any service we can to your organization.

As you know, Mr. Marvin Wall of our office visited Austin while you were away and talked to Mr. Doyle and others from CCIOHR. His report was highly complimentary.

I hope to be in Dallas in the near future to explore the possibility of a human relations council in that city. If possible I would like to visit Austin also, and I wonder if you have a regular meeting date on which I could arrange my visit.

Dear Kathie:

I have your letter of December 3. The plans for the Mobile Council dinner on January 17 sound great. I am particularly honored to be the cleanup man for so distinguished a personage as Richmond Flowers and only hope that I am more of a winner than he.

It is also gratifying to know that you have found someone imaginative enough to present the "many splendid accomplishments" of the Mobile chapter.

My reservations are for Eastern's flight 139 which will arrive in Mobile at 2:07 P.M. or something like that. I'll have to catch the first flight out the next day. For that reason, and because I really was not expecting you to put me up for the night, you might prefer to get me a hotel reservation.

We are doing what we can about the blasted books, but we don't seem to be very effective.

The 2 Revolutions Of Wilcox

A few months ago the County of Wilcox was referred to by fanciful conquistadores of the yankee press as a feudal barony. This picture of Wilcox was faithful to the fact to the extent that there were many large landowners no more disposed to alter their way of life than the rich of Darien, Conn., or the ranchers of Wyoming.

There was not a single Negro voter, though the proportion of white to colored is Rhodesian. Wilcox was also Rhodesian in the sense that when Sheriff Lummy Jenkins had a warrant for a Negro, he simply tapped out an order on the jungle tom-tom network to get the heck to the courthouse and get arrested.

It was also a plot of earth where the Negroes in many cases profited greatly by a traditional paternalism of the whites, who were steadfast, Bible-loving Scotch-Irish typified by the renowned Benjamin Meek Miller, the governor whom The Advertiser imperishably named the "Rugged Oak of Wilcox." Until quite recently the people of Wilcox frontally opposed a historical process following Emancipation and were astonished to see the walls smitten and breached.

But history does not follow the arrow course of the highway: it turns and bends. The federal revolution was quickly followed by another revolution; in some aspects it may turn out to be a counter-revolution. By which is meant, of course, the announcement that a great foreign corporation will industrialize the county with construction of a $77,000,000 plant.

MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River, Ltd. of Vancouver, British Columbia has plywood factories and lumber mills in a number of countries and sells to all the world. Its operation will create 700 jobs in plant and woods.

The racial turmoil did not prevent this great investment in Wilcox anymore than the sitdown strikes of the 30s drove industry out of Michigan. The political climate and resources of the area were inducements of such strength as to overmaster other reservations. The same was seen at Hammermill near Selma and will be seen elsewhere in Alabama in the coming year.

What is not known is, the reservations were on the other end. The mill got about 30,000 acres of timber under lease, but its need was more on the order of 100,000 acres. There was a strong sense on the part of the reluctant landowners that the mill and the labor union might bring new conditions and fortify the revolutionary thrust of the federalized agitators.

Last summer a barbecue was held and the crowd assembled in the courthouse to consider the lease matter and the question of the mill. Gov. Wallace was present and earnestly addressed the landowners. It was carried on the local radio. He assured them that the paper mill workers' union, from his experience elsewhere, would not upend the Wilcox order, but fortify it and stabilize conditions.

The evidence is that Wallace convinced his followers and the mill then was able to lease ample acreage for its operation.

So the little town of Pine Hill, with less population than there will be mill workers, will suddenly get a new bridge across the Alabama River, a new airport and a great industrial plant. One revolution bumps another. The rest we leave to the imagesayers.

Selma march movie costs up to $49,459

BY DAN DOWE, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 22 — Like Topsy, the cost grows and grows on production of the state-financed film of last year's Selma-to-Montgomery civil rights march.

The Alabama Sovereignty Commission, which footed the bill, had paid a total of $49,459 for the 58-minute movie up to Dec. 31.

DAN DOWE

Sovereignty Commission records indicate that the Selma march film was its major expense for the past 12 months.

The previous year, the commission had concentrated its spending on donations totaling $39,000 to a now-defunct organization registered in Washington to lobby against the civil rights bill of 1964.

Known as Fundamental American Freedoms, the group dissolved after the rights bill was passed by Congress. During its brief lifetime, however, the FAF was a heavy advertiser in behalf of Gov. George C. Wallace's presidential campaigns in Wisconsin, Indiana and Maryland.

Under prodding by Wallace, the Alabama Legislature created the Sovereignty Commission in 1963 for the purpose of "safeguarding the constitutionally guaranteed rights of individual states from encroachment by agencies of the federal government."

Other major expenses

IN ADDITION TO PAYING for the movie, which wasn't released until a good half-year after the Selma march took place, the commission's other major expenses for calendar 1965 included legal fees in a number of civil rights cases.

The previous year, the commission had concentrated its spending on donations totaling $39,000 to a now-defunct organization registered in Washington to lobby against the civil rights bill of 1964.

Known as Fundamental American Freedoms, the group dissolved after the rights bill was passed by Congress. During its brief lifetime, however, the FAF was a heavy advertiser in behalf of Gov. George C. Wallace's presidential campaigns in Wisconsin, Indiana and Maryland.

Under prodding by Wallace, the Alabama Legislature created the Sovereignty Commission in 1963 for the purpose of "safeguarding the constitutionally guaranteed rights of individual states from encroachment by agencies of the federal government."

Other major expenses

IN ADDITION TO PAYING for the movie, which wasn't released until a good half-year after the Selma march took place, the commission's other major expenses for calendar 1965 included legal fees in a number of civil rights cases.

Montgomery attorney Frank Mizell, employed as counsel by the commission when it was organized, was paid over $3,200 during the past year. Mizell helped represent several county boards of registrars in federal voting cases, and also appeared on behalf of the governor in litigation attacking the validity of the 1965 Voter Rights Act.

The commission paid $1,904 during 1965 to the Washington law firm of Steadman, Leonard and Hennessey for legal work on Alabama civil rights cases at the appellate level.

Other expenses for 1965 included $1,200 to something known as the International Association for the Advancement of Ethnology and Eugenics, and another $1,500 to the Citizens Council Forum — a radio show.

Eli Howell, executive secretary of the commission, explained that the International Association for the Advancement of Ethnology and Eugenics is a group of scientists that disputes the theory that all races are intellectually equal.

Howell said the $1,200 the state paid to the association financed "dissemination of information prepared by them and distributed primarily to educators, scientists and lawmakers."

In addition to the money already paid, Howell added, the Sovereignty Commission is encumbered for another $1,500 to the organization.

The commission secretary said the $1,500 paid to the Citizens Council Forum was for publicizing proposals by Wallace to hold U. S. constitutional conventions questioning the right of the federal government to interfere in local school matters and in reapportionment of state legislatures.

$42,549 to Texas firm

A BREAKDOWN OF THE SPENDING on the Selma march film shows that the lion's share of the state money went to Katz and Herndon, Inc., a Dallas, Tex., firm which produced the movie.

Katz and Herndon received a total of $42,549 during 1965.

Birmingham radio announcer Leland Childs was paid $4,000 for his services as narrator of the film, and another $25 in expenses, commission records showed.

Edwin Strickland, executive secretary of the Commission to Preserve the Peace and an investigation during the Selma march, received $669 in expenses from the Sovereignty Commission. Another $431 was paid to Henry L. Seale Aviation for rental of an airplane for five hours during the march.

Other expenses involved salaries of Howell, who was raised from $10,000 to $11,000 as of Oct. 1, and several secretaries. Martha Witt Smith, chairman of the Madison County Board of Registrars who also serves the commission on a contractual basis as an adviser on voting matters, was paid a monthly salary of $540 by the state group.

Total expenses for calendar 1965 were slightly over $90,000.

Federal-state relations

DESPITE ITS HEAVY EXPENDITURE on the march film, Howell insists the Sovereignty Commission is now "almost exclusively engaged in the area of new federal relations with states."

He said the group's main function is analyzing federal legislation and court rulings involving reapportionment, voter rights, civil rights, the Appalachian and war on poverty programs, and education.

"We consider these, not always with the idea of opposing them, but to see where they can be utilized," Howell explained.

Whatever purpose it serves, the Sovereignty Commission continues to enjoy popularity with the Legislature and at least some well-heeled private citizens.

Lawmakers approved an administration-backed bill last summer that raised the commission's annual appropriation from $50,000 to $100,000 for the next two fiscal years.

Moreover, Howell said, the group received over $40,000 in contributions from private donors in fiscal 1964-65, and has already been given another $15,000 in contributions in the fiscal period that began Oct. 1.

Klan Undercover Agent Studied Racial Strife for Alabama Committee

By JOHN HERBERS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8—The state of Alabama hired an undercover agent for the Ku Klux Klan to investigate racial strife in that state in 1963.

The agent, Ralph R. Roton, told the House Committee on Un-American Activities he was appointed to the position after he had asked Gov. George C. Wallace for a recommendation. He said state officials did not know of his Klan connection. He said he was on the job when the 16th Street Baptist Church in Birmingham was bombed, killing four Negro girls.

"Was the state of Alabama paying you to investigate for the United Klans of America," asked Representative Joe R. Pool, Democrat of Texas, who was presiding.

"No, definitely not," Mr. Roton said.

"I know who was paying you," Mr. Poole retorted. "Who were you working for?"

"I was working to preserve the Constitution of the United States," the witness said. "That is my stand."

He later acknowledged, however, that his findings on racial disturbances were furnished to both the state and Robert M. Shelton Jr., imperial Wizard of the United Klans of America, Inc.

Alabama is the only state where the Klan is believed to have any substantial influence in the state government. It was brought out in the Klan hearings last fall that a Mobile engineering firm paid Mr. Shelton $4,000 for helping it obtain a contract with the Alabama Highway Department.

Governor Wallace's name, however, had not been mentioned in the hearings until today.

Mr. Roton is a crew-cut, 35-year-old electrician who said he had been a member of a Montgomery Klavern for more than six years. In the last few years he has been seen at racial disturbances in the South, carrying cameras and a tape recorder.

He carried a press card from

Associated Press Wirephoto

Ralph R. Roton at House hearing on Ku Klux Klan.

The Independent, an ultra-conservative weekly newspaper in Birmingham, and was present at press conferences and meetings of the civil rights movement. He acknowledged today that it was he who furnished detailed reports of the movement for the United Klan newspaper, The Fiery Cross.

Mr. Roton appeared at the witness table without an attorney and sat ramrod straight as he answered questions. He said that he, like the committee, was in the business of investigating Communist infiltraton

Asks to Make Call

The witness said he was employed by the Alabama legislative commission to preserve the peace in the summer of 1963. The commission, he said, had be set up to study "subversive activities in the state of Alabama." Donald T. Appell, chief investigator, asked him who had recommeded him for the job.

"Mr. Chairman, do I have to answer that question!" he asked. It would not be fair, he said, "to implicate people who hold a high position."

Mr. Pool said the question was pertinent to the inquiry and ordered him to answer it. Mr. Roton then asked for a five-minute recess to make a telephone call, which was granted.

When he returned to the hearing room, the witness said:

"I talked to Governor Wallace He had no idea I was connected with the United Klans of America—to the best of my knowledge. I told him I did investigative work, for whom I didn't say. I said I understood there was a position open and would appreciate anything he could do for me."

After a noon recess, Representative John Buchanan, Democrat of Birmingham, said he had talked to the chairman of the commission, State Representative John H. Hawkins Jr, who said Mr R.oton worked for the commission "for six months or so but at no time did he [Mr. Hawkins] have any knowledge of his [Mr. Roton's] Klan connections."

Mr. Roton, wide-eyed and polite, rankled Mr. Pool and Mr. Appell on several occasions. He said he could not remember the names of Klansmen and was vague about his conditions of employment for the commission. He said he worked for expenses only and was not completely reimbursed for that.

Mr. Pool said he found it hard to believe that any agency investigating subversion would fail to "investigate the investigator."

The House committee has said that its investigation had shown that Klansmen were involved in the church bombing in Birmingham in 1963. The state police arrested three Klansmen on charges of possession of dynamite shortly after the bombing, an action that frustrated the Federal Bureau of Investigation's work on the case. The Klansmen received light, suspended sentences and were never directly connected with the case.

Mr. Roton said he arrived at the scene of the bombing a few minutes after it occurred and took pictures. Asked if he thought the Klan planted the bomb, Mr. Roton said "I don't think they did."

The witness indicated he was more interested in finding Communists in the civil rights movement. Asked how he did that, Mr. Roton said, "To determine if a person is a Communist you follow him around and listen to him."

A NEGRO BOYCOTT SET IN ALABAMA

Birmingham Ministers Act to Protest Shooting

By GENE ROBERTS
Special to The New York Times

BIRMINGHAM. Ala.. Feb. 24—A committee of leading Negro ministers, stirred by the recent shooting of five Negroes, announced plans today for a city-wide boycott of white merchants.

The object of the protest will be to integrate the Birmingham police force, arouse interest in voter registration and increase employment opportunities for Negroes.

The Rev. Calvin Woods, strategy chairman for the protest, said plans had been made in a meeting of 25 ministers and representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

"More than 100 ministers have already indicated they will carry the message to their congregations," said the Rev. J. L. Ware, president of the Birmingham Baptist Ministerial Conference. "And we expect many more will join in — from our organization, the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance and other religious groups.

'Program of Self-Denial'

"We visualize this as a program of self-denial," said Mr. Ware. "We eon't be buying new Easter clothes this year or anything else that we can do without."

The ministers began organizing around the civil rights movement Tuesday, less than 24 hours after a white customer wounded five Negroes who had been picketing the Liberty Supermarket here. Ninety ministers marched around the supermarket to protest the shooting, then selected the committee that shaped plans for the boycott.

The plans call for starting the boycott at an interdenominational rally March 19. Meanwhile, the ministers hope to drum up interest in their weekly sermons, beginning Sunday.

Negro ministers will also be asked, Mr. Woods said, to generate interest in a faltering voter-registration campaign here.

Since the passage of the Federal Voting Act last August, the number of registered Negroes in Jefferson County has increased from 25,000 to 55,000, compared with 160,000 whites. Approximately 60,000 Negroes and 90,000 whites remain unregistered.

Although civil rights organizations failed in a similar boycott here two years ago, the ministers predicted success this time because of increased support from the churches. They said the major decisions would be made by ministers and other Birmingham Negro leaders, rather than by civil rights organizations.

"More Negro ministers are now interested in getting things done than anytime in my memory," said Mr. Ware. "I think the self-denial program will be the biggest program ever undertaken by ministers here, other than saving souls."

First Lady Visits Alabama, Receives a Standing Ovation

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP)—Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson spoke Friday at Tuscaloosa, headquarters of the nation's largest Klan group, and received a standing ovation from 2,000 University of Alabama students and 400 members of a women's organization.

The first lady appealed for "offering the hand of partnership in the American experience to our neighbors, putting aside custom and prejudice that deter this."

At the University, where Governor George C. Wallace made his dramatic stand in the doorway and federalized troops had to move in to effect the enrollment of two Negro students, Mrs. Johnson said:

"The promise of equality first made in our Constitution is ours to keep."

The University, where Mrs. Johnson was a six-week summer student in 1931, now has an enrollment of 16,000 students here, 150 to 200 of them Negroes, according to the school president.

A crowd of about 1,000 students and the University's band turned out to welcome Mrs. Johnson on her arrival at the home of University President Frank Rose.

It was a campaign-style arrival by motorcade and Mrs. Johnson shook hands with an airport crowd of about 100, some of whom waved American flags.

On the campus, some students up front carried hand-lettered signs that said "We Support LBJ on Vietnam," and "Draft Lady Byrd for Governor of Alabama."

(Wallace's wife, Lurleen, had announced Thursday that she would be a stand-in candidate running for her husband's position in a forthcoming Democratic primary.)

Mrs. Johnson side-stepped any comment on Mrs. Wallace's move. To reporters making the three-hour charter plane flight with her from Washington, Mrs. Johnson gave this statement:

"In a long life in politics, I have never taken part in a primary, especially in a state where I do not vote."

Mrs. Johnson spoke at the opening of a two-day Alabama Women's Leadership Conference and to an additional audience of students.

She included in her speech, which urged the participation of women in community activities, a low-key appeal for racial tolerance.

She said for a nation that heads for the moon "we seem to be able to do anything except get along together."

"One day we might hope that the conference table in Birmingham or Geneva will be as successful as the assembly line in Huntsville (an Alabama rocket research center) and the launching pad at Cape Kennedy."

A long, standing ovation followed.

Flowers, a Moderate, Joins Alabama Race for Governor

~~POLITICS~~ ALABAMA Ark Gazette 2/26/66

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Attorney General Richmond M. Flowers plunged into the governor's race Friday with an undisguised plea for Negro votes and a promise to fly the United States flag on the dome of the state Capitol.

The appearance of the Dothan, Ala., lawyer in a field already crowded with nine other candidates gave him a chance once more to challenge Governor Georce C. Wallace's strong segregationist views in the May 3 primary. He formally qualified after making his announcement.

Flowers' announcement came 24 hours after Wallace's wife, Lurleen, 39, made known her intentions to run as a "stand-in" candidate for her husband, who is prohibited by law from seeking re-election. Mrs. Wallace made it clear that her husband would continue to govern the state if she is elected.

The attorney general, a racial moderate, frequently has taken issue with Wallace in the handling of Negro problems.

Flowers told reporters crowded into his office that "I want the vote of all the people. I want the Negro vote and the white vote * * *."

An estimated 200,000 or more Negroes are registered as voters in the state, thousands of them as the result of the presence of federal examiners sent into Alabama under the new voting rights act.

The Negro vote could exert the balance of power in this year's statewide election.

Flowers made no mention of Wallace in his announcement. But he touched a sensitive area in reminding newsmen that the United States flag flies on a pole on the south lawn of the capitol instead of on the dome where the state and Confederate flags wave.

He said the absence of Old Glory from the dome was "a gesture of defiance that should be put behind us. I intend that such gestures become a part of our past."

If he gets the Democratic nomination, the attorney general said he was certain he could defeat Republican Congressman James D. Martin, the GOP's top vote getter in Alabama and an avowed candidate for that party's gubernatorial nomination.

Flowers promised "a very sane campaign—one based on reason, respect and responsibility—not of this hitting back and name calling."

The attorney general, who personally prosecuted Klansmen in the killing of a white civil rights worker, but failed to get a conviction, criticized the recent Klan investigation in Congress.

He said the hearings before the House Un-American Activities Committee "strengthened the Klan by giving them publicity and allowing them to go to Washington and make statements while taking the Fifth Amendment. There was no evidence, just rumors. It made them look good to a certain element of the people."

Another Wallace critic, state Senator Bob Gilchrist of Hartselle, is expected to get into the governor's race before the qualifying deadline Tuesday. Gilchrist, one of those who stopped the governor's drive last year for a constitutional amendment to let him succeed himself, has called a news conference for Monday to make his plans known.

School Bombed In Alabama; None Injured

V7d Ark. Gazette 2/26/66

From Gazette Press Services

ELBA, Ala. — One wing of Elba High School lay in ruins Friday from two quick explosions and Police Chief I. F. Dunaway said a burned dynamite fuse was found in the rubble.

The explosions, seconds apart, shattered the four-room wing of the school about 10:30 p. m. Thursday, less than 30 seconds after a dinner for the Coffee County Hog Producers Association had ended in another part of the building.

The guests had left the school and no one was injured.

"We know now it was definitely dynamite," Dunaway said. "There were two dynamite bombs. They left two craters."

A deputy state fire marshal was called to the school to help in the investigation along with two Army demolition experts from nearby Fort Rucker.

The dynamite fuse was eight feet long and the demolition experts estimated it would take four minutes to burn. They said five to ten sticks of dynamite probably were used in the two explosions.

A $1,000 reward was offered by the city of Elba for arrest and conviction of the bomber and the Elba Chamber of Commerce also appealed to merchants to contribute to a separate reward fund. More than $500 was raised in less than an hour.

"I just cannot for the life of me imagine why anyone would want to dynamite this school," the police chief added. He said two Negroes enrolled in the school last fall but that there had been no trouble.

The only possible lead, Dunaway said, was the chance that there was a connection between the explosions and two bundles of dynamite found last week in a deserted house on the outskirts of this South Alabama town.

He said the finding of the dynamite—one bundle containing 24 sticks, the other 12, both fused and capped—was "the first thing that popped into our minds when this happened."

He said his investigation of the cache of explosives had produced no leads.

Alabama Republican Is Favored To Win Race for Governorship

2/28/66

By GENE ROBERTS

Special to The New York Times

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 27—Alabama Republicans this year could elect their party's first Southern Governor since 1920 and sweep many local candidates into the state's Legislature, courthouses and city halls for the first time since Reconstruction.

This is the view of many of the state's professional and amateur political analysts after watching the state Democratic party struggle to overcome recent defections.

These forecasters say United States Representative James D. Martin, the Republican candidate, not only has a chance to win the governorship, but at least for the moment must be rated as the favorite.

Already this year in Jefferson County, which embraces Birmingham and is the state's most populous county, three Democratic State Representatives have switched to the Republican party. Two others have announced they will not seek reelection as Democrats, and thus are figuring in speculation as possible Republican candidates.

Still another Democrat, a three-term member of the Alabama Democratic executive committee, has resigned to become a Republican legislative candidate.

The New York Times

James D. Martin

"It is time to spell it out plainly enough for all to see," said The Birmingham News in a recent analytical editorial. "The State of Alabama possibly is going more heavily Republican this year than it did, in a sense, in 1964."

In 1964 Alabama voted 2 to 1

for the Republican Presidential nominee, Barry Goldwater, who opposed the Civil Rights Act of 1964, over a slate of unpledged Democratic electors. They also elected Republicans to five of the state's eight seats in the United States House of Representatives.

If Mr. Martin wins in November, he would become the first Republican Governor in Alabama or in any other Deep South state since the eighteen-seventies when Re-construction governments were swept out of office.

He would be the first to be elected in any case of the 11 states of the Confederacy since 1920, when the landslide Presidential victory of Warren G. Harding carried Alfred (Alf) Taylor into the Governor's Mansion in Tennessee.

Even more unusual is the prospect of local Republican officeholders in a large number of counties outside the traditionally Republican mountainous areas of the south.

Wife Faces Defeat

If Mr. Wallace's predictions fail to come true, one of the casualties could be his wife, Lurleen, who announced last week as a candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

Representative Martin is identified in the minds of many Alabama segregationists as having virtually the same racial views as Governor Wallace.

"Let's face it," said one newspaperman. "Democratic officeholders in Alabama, and especially Governor Wallace, have spent so much time denouncing the national Democratic party over the segregation question that it is no longer popular in many quarters to be a Democrat."

Gov. George C. Wallace, along with segregationist Democrats in Mississippi, has said it will be possible to keep voters loyal to state Democratic parties while repudiating the policies and candidates of the national party.

The Alabama Republican party encouraged this identification when its 1962 convention nominated Mr. Martin for the United States Senate but refused to nominate a gubernatorial candidate against Mr. Wallace, despite the pleas of a longtime party member who wanted the nomination.

Mr. Martin, then a little-known oil dealer from Gadsden, added to the identification throughout the campaign by denouncing Senator Lister Hill as being insufficiently militant in opposing racial integration.

On election day, many of Mr. Wallace's supporters voted for Mr. Martin, who came within 6,845 votes of upsetting Senator Hill.

Mr. Martin made segregation an issue again in 1964 in his successful campaign for a House seat.

When the state Democratic executive committee voted last month to strike the words "white supremacy" from the party emblem in an effort to appeal to the state's growing Negro vote—there are now about 200,000 registered Negroes—Mr. Martin's popularity climbed still higher among the more militant segregationists.

In recent weeks, however, Mr. Martin has spent little time denouncing racial integration, but has not repudiated his earlier position.

Now he is saying that many of the differences between the races grow out of economics and would disappear if more industry was attracted to the state and more jobs were made available to both races. And industrial development, he adds, will be one of his administration's major projects if he is elected.

"It is a mistake to assume that the Alabama Republican party has a narrow base and is appealing only to the Dixiecrat type of voter," said John Grenier, a former state party chairman, who was a top aide to Mr. Goldwater in his Presidential campaign.

Fiscal Conservatism

Mr. Grenier said that while his party was drawing support from "Dixiecrats" and from members of the John Birch Society, which has more than 100 chapters in the Birmingham area alone, a major part of its support came from businessmen whose chief interest is fiscal conservatism, and from urban dwellers concerned about rural influence in the overwhelmingly Democratic Legislature.

"We will also be talking to Negro voters too," Mr. Grenier continued. "If the Democrats nominate Lurleen Wallace, I think we can count on the Negro vote."

In the opinion of some political observers here, Mr. Martin would lose the Negro vote against any of the 10 to 12 Democratic candidates who are expected to be in the race by next Tuesday's filing deadline, but could win many Negro votes and many segregationist votes as well if Mrs. Wallace is the Democratic nominee.

A Cabby's View

"I'd vote for George Wallace for anything," said a Montgomery taxi driver, "but not for his wife. How do I know she wouldn't get mad at him and do something he doesn't want her to do? So I'm for Martin — he is the next best thing to Wallace anyway."

Mr. Martin and his party also could capture the white vote in the state's predominantly Negro "black belt" counties if newly registered Negro voters succeed in their plans to nominate Negro Democrats to such key offices as sheriff.

Until these counties bolted to Mr. Goldwater in 1964, they had formed the "backbone" of Democratic politics in Alabama, voting in the Democratic column by margins up to 25 to 1.

The Republican party expects to field candidates for 80 per cent of all legislative seats in the state, all of the statewide offices and many local offices.

To insure a strong slate, a team of party recruiters has been touring the state regularly since 1964 in search of candidates.

"I'll say this for them," said Roy Mayhall, the state Democratic chairman. "They are working."

Hold Balance In Alabama

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Two civil rights spokesmen foresaw the chance today that Negro voters, rid of the poll tax, may exercise a veto over Gov. George Wallace's bid to elect his wife.

Orzell Billingsley and Arthur D. Shores, both Birmingham attorneys, predicted that 250,000 or more Negroes will vote in a block in the May 3 Democratic primary.

Billingsley said the Negro vote, which has increased rapidly with the presence of federal examiners in 11 counties, may reach 400,000 by the November general election. And, unless for some reason the Negroes find no candidate for governor acceptable to them and decide to stay home, he said he looks for a bloc vote then, too.

Neither of the lawyers would rule out altogether the possibility that Negroes might support Wallace's wife, Lurleen, in her race for governor if she wins the Democratic nomination and goes against Republican congressman James D. Martin in November. Martin has said he will seek the GOP nomination.

But they said it would be difficult to get Negroes to vote for Mrs. Wallace. Shores, himself a candidate for the state Legislature, saw the possibility that a Wallace-Martin race would find many Negroes unwilling to support either candidate.

Billingsley, president of the Alabama Democratic Conference, conceded the bloc vote could go to a Republican in the general election if the Negroes felt that would upset the governor's hope of electing his wife as his "stand-in" successor.

The Alabama Democratic Conference has a screening committee, the attorneys explained, which "studies the candidates and issues." Until that recommendation has been made, they said their organization will withhold any endorsement.

The real impact of the Negro vote, which increased immeasurably because of a federal court ruling Thursday which knocked out Alabama's poll tax, may come in the runoff primary for governor May 28. The two top candidates fight it out in the runoff if no one gets a majority of the votes in the first primary.

If the candidates who gets the Negro support in the first election fails to make the runoff, one of the two in the finals can start off with a bonus of 250,000 or more votes. That could be the difference.

But, cautioned Shores, "no candidate is going to be able to deliver our votes to someone else. We will make our own independent decision about which one to support."

5 Rights Volunteers Tell of Threats From Whites

BY JOSEPH A. LOFTUS

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5—Five VISTA Volunteers working in Alabama are carrying firearms in self-defense as a result of threats that the volunteers say have come from the white community.

Four of the volunteers are white males. All are Northerners. Their superiors in Washington and the Federal Bureau of Investigation have given tacit consent to their means of self-protection.

The four young men, who have taken a house in Hobson City, near Anniston, have two shotguns and a .25 caliber pistol. William Hansell, 23 years old, of Philadelphia, said:

"If we go out at night it's in two's and there is a shotgun on the back seat of the car."

He said the volunteers did not carry the weapons in the daytime.

Mr. Hansell's companions are Gary H. Mols, 20, of Amherst, N.Y.; Samuel Cook, Jr. 18, of Des Moines, Iowa; and Eugene Peters, 22, of Endicott, N.Y. The fifth volunteer is Ruby Shanklin, 24, a Negro, of Berkeley, Calif., who lives with a local family.

Community Projects

VISTA, meaning Volunteers in Service to America, is the domestic version of the Peace Corps and is one of the programs in te campaign against poverty. The volunteers receive subsistance allowances.

In Hobson City, a Negro community of 900, adjacent to Anniston, the five volunteers are helping with the technical details of town government, organizing recreation programs for youths, developing housing and community improvement programs, and organizing and teaching classes in homemaking, nutrition, sanitation and citizenship.

The group went to Alabama last September. Mr. Hansell, in a telephone interview, said they had been threatened soon after their arrival.

"One of the fellows," he said, "was in a barber shop at Oxford [also adjacent to Anniston], getting a haircut. The barber suggested the five of us get on the next bus out or we wouldn't be alive. It really scared us, his tone of voice and what he said.

"We talked to the Mayor of Oxford. He suggested we change barber shops." Mr. Hansell, after a chuckle, said the Mayor "also said the guy was nuts."

The group notified the F. B. I. but did not hear anything immediately.

Death List Alleged

The Mayor of Hobson City was stopped on the street one day by a white man, "supposedly friendly," said Mr. Hansell, "and told we had better get out of town. We were also told that there had been a meeting and that we were put on the top of an assassination list."

After that, said Mr. Hansell, the F.B.I. called and said that there had been a meeting and that there was a list, but, Mr. Hansell said, the F.B.I. told the volunteers "not to worry."

Negro women who live in Hobson City and work as domestics in Anniston also received telephone calls saying "we ought to get out of town," Mr. Hansell said.

The volunteers, he said, have not heard any threats for "three weeks to a month, but we still get very bad looks."

"We feel very safe in here," he said, referring to the house.

"We keep the shades drawn and keep our beds away from the windows," he explained. "The colored people here are very protective of us. They are going and coming from work at all hours and they always go by the house. If a white person appeared on the street at night he would be noticed."

Mozart Festival to Be in June

"We made a $122 million mistake in the ads we ran last month..."

George C. Wallace
Governor of Alabama

"When our ad people explained about deadlines (back in early December) we told them we thought Alabama's three-year total in new and expanded industrial plants would hit $1.25 billion. But when we added up 1965's plant investments, the total came to $623 million, and raised the three-year total to $1,377,000,000.

Why did Alabama lead the booming Southeast in 1965? Because Alabama's got what industry looks for. Lots of things that add up to bigger profits: enthusiastic community attitudes, trainable people who like to produce, expanding southern and southeastern markets, plenty of power, climate that cuts heating bills in two, fine schools and colleges, and financing plans you have to look at three times before you believe them.

Got a good looking balance sheet? Want a manufacturing or processing plant? Equipped? Our Cater and Wallace Acts finance $50 million plants as easily as $50 thousand plants. Or any size in between. Wallace Plans Extra Session To Aid Schools

ALABAMA.

AC 3/8/66

MONTGOMERY, Ala (AP) — Gov. George Wallace told a group of educators Monday he will call a special session of the legislature to meet school money needs. But he gave no date.

A surplus of about $40 million has built up in school funds in the state because tax collections have far exceeded the anticipated revenue.

The schools can spend only the amount appropriated by the legislature no matter how much more may come in.

Educators have urged the governor to call a special session to make the surplus money available for increased teacher salaries, employment of more teachers, and to meet building needs.

Wallace has indicated he wants part of the money to implement his expanded junior college-trade school program.

NEGROES URGE COURT TO BAR ALABAMA ACT

NYT 3/9/66

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 8 (AP)—A group of Negroes charged in a suit in Federal Court here today that the terms of office of the Bullock County Commission were extended as a means of preventing Negro candidates from running this year.

The suit asks for a court order declaring unconstitutional the legislative act in 1965 that extended the terms and for another order to permit a Negro candidate to run for the County Commission in the upcoming May 3 Democratic primary.

The complaint, alleged that a Negro, Ben McGhee, had tried to qualify as a candidate for the County Commission from District 2, but had been turned down with the explanation that the term had been extended for two more years and that no election would be held for that office this year.

Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. of the United States District Court took no immediate action to set a hearing on the request for a preliminary injunction that would enable Mr. McGhee to run in the May primary.

Liuzzo Case Defendant Dies in 'Bama

BESSEMER, March 10 (UPI). William O. Eaton, one of three Ku Klux Klansmen charged with the night rider slaying of Mrs. Viola Liuzzo last year, died Wednesday night, apparently of a heart attack, police said today.

The 42-year-old Eaton was a retired steel worker and the father of five children.

Charged along with Eaton in the Liuzzo slaying were Collie Leroy Wilkins, 21, and Eugene Thomas, 42.

Wilkins is the only one of the three to have been brought to trial to date. He won acquittal at his second trial, after one jury deadlocked and a mistrial was declared.

Mrs. Liuzzo, a Detroit white woman, was shot to death March 25, 1965 a few hours after the Selma-to-Montgomery civil rights march ended. She was shuttling marchers back to Selma when, it was charged, her attackers opened fire from a passing car.

Special Session Tied to Primary

3/13/64

By GROVER C. HALL JR.

Editor, The Montgomery Advertiser
Special to Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 12—A special session of the legislature became enmeshed with the May Democratic primary.

ALABAMA

Gov. George C. Wallace licked his chops, for the purpose of the session will be to dispense a large treasury surplus to education. He will do it at a time and in a manner calculated to favor the candidacy of Mrs. Wallace for governor.

Wallace has remained attentive but passive as ravenous educators urged him to put the surplus to work. At length, he met with a hundred school leaders at the Capitol, heard their entreaty and promised that he would summon the session.

Wallace declined to name the date, but the chances are that he will move it close to election day in the hope that legislators, eager to return to their campaigns, will meet, act and adjourn quickly.

STATE BUDGET Officer James V. Jordan estimates that the surplus will amount to about $76 million by the end of the 1966-67 fiscal year, while education cipherers predict the figure will be closer to $100 million.

Otherwise, the race for governor was, at least on the surface, stagnant. The singularity of Mrs. Wallace's candidacy elicited chatter over the state and, apparently, considerable favor. But apart from that, there was more talk of Republican Congressman Jim Martin than of all the other Democratic candidates.

Railbirds were scratching their heads over the standing of former Gov. John Patterson. Some months ago he was rated a potent contender and it might again be so, but there were many to say that he was "flat."

PATTERSON OPENED his campaign at New Site, his birthplace in Tallapoosa County, and promised two things: (1) Tireless resistance to federal intrusions and (2) $150 old age pensions.

Gov. Wallace was preparing a formal campaign opener for Mrs. Wallace, perhaps in Gadsden, a labor town in northeast Alabama. Wallace rarely mentions segregation today, but is ever ready to oppose extensions of federal power. He reminds Negroes of how much free textbooks in his administration have done to diminish dropouts.

Former Gov. James E. (Big Jim) Folsom accused Patterson and Wallace of "cussing Yankees to get votes" and predicted that the "Second Civil War" will be ended this year.

Alabamans Laud and Assail Naming of Negro Deputy

AC 3/16/66

By ROSS M. HAGEN

EUTAW, Ala. (AP) — Appointment of Greene County's first Negro deputy sheriff was lauded by white leaders and condemned by civil rights forces Tuesday.

The deputy, wealthy cattleman Howard Brown, said he was well received on his first day.

"I have had several congratulatory calls from both white and colored," the 45-year-old rancher said. "And when I walked down the street this morning, several whites stopped me and shook hands."

Brown was hired Monday by Sheriff William E. Lee. The appointment was approved by the county commissioners, the probate judge, and the mayor. He is one of the few Negro law enforcement officers in the state.

The sheriff said there would be no restrictions on Brown's official functions.

"He'll make arrests just like the other deputy (a white man) I've got," Lee said.

Asked why he took the job, Brown replied: "One of the reasons is that Mr. Lee asked me to be one of his deputies. The other is that I wanted to help the county any way I can. I wasn't looking for a job."

The sheriff agreed that Brown had little need for the $250 a month post. The deputy owns about 1,700 acres of land and runs about 400 head of cattle, Lee said.

"He lives in a $35,000 pink house here in town and drives a pink Buick," the sheriff said.

Lee said that all of the reaction he has received has been highly favorable.

The Rev. T. E. Gilmore, a Negro competing with Lee for Democratic nomination as sheriff in the May 3 primary, called Brown's appointment "a political trick."

"I don't think this Negro who has been hired is a Negro that most of the Negroes would have put up or wanted for a sheriff's deputy," Gilmore said.

'Bama Police Probe Shots Fired at Car

AJ 3/18/66

ALABAMA

PRATTVILLE, Ala., March 18 (AP) — State investigators and local police are looking for the gunmen who fired into a car containing three white men, slightly injuring one of them.

The three told police that at least two shotgun blasts and several rounds of pistol or rifle fire rang out Thursday night as they passed a building which has served as a rallying point for Negro demonstrators who have been picketing in Prattville this week.

The car's driver, Bobby Sanford, 37, said that he was taking another man in the car, 25-year-old Ken Arden Wilson, home when the car was fired on.

Wesley Brabham, 25, the third man in the car, told police that the first shotgun blast hit the right door of the car, sending bits of paint and metal into his right arm.

He said he yelled, "I've been shot!" Sanford slammed down the accelerator just as a second shotgun blast slashed into the roof and rear window.

A dent police say could have been caused by a light caliber bullet was discovered on the car's trunk lid.

Brabham displayed a series of scratches and cuts on his arm. He said his arm was resting on the door's window ledge when the first blast hit. None of the shots penetrated the auto.

Police reported finding an empty, 12-gauge shotgun shell in front of the building.

A civil rights leader at the building was quoted by police as saying that a mass meeting was going on inside at the time the shooting was said to have occurred, but that no one heard any shots.

Prattville has been the scene of civil rights picketing since Wednesday when a brief scuffle erupted between Negro pickets and white men. Three men—two of them white—were arrested on breach of the peace charges.

The pickets are demanding equal employment opportunities and stepped-up hiring of Negro clerks in downtown stores.

There were no incidents Thursday, although the pickets circled the downtown area for about five hours.

State troopers were called in by local authorities to augment the 10-man force in the Autauga County seat which is about 15 miles north of Montgomery.

U.S. Suit Seeks Alabama Election Where Negro Voters Equal Whites

ALABAMA AL. 3/23/66

By JOHN HERBERS

(Copyright 1966 by the New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON—The Justice department filed a lawsuit Tuesday to prevent Alabama from prolonging the terms of local white officials in a county where Negro voter registration has caught up with white registration.

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court in Montgomery, Ala., seeks to invalidate a state law which would delay the next Bullock County commissioners' election until 1968.

It was the first suit the department has filed under that section of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 which requires states covered by the act to clear any change in election procedure with either the attorney general or the federal court in the District of Columbia.

Attorney General Nicholas DeB. Katzenbach said the department may file other suits against what has been reported as efforts in several areas to evade the force and intent of the act.

Two weeks after the Voting Rights Act was signed last Aug. 6, the Alabama Legislature enacted a law to extend the staggered terms of Bullock County's governing body, the court of county commissioners, from four to six years. This would delay elections for two commissioners until 1968 and for the other two until 1970.

Enactment of the state law went unnoticed until Negroes recently prepared to put up candidates in the May 3 Democratic primary. White officials said extension of the terms had nothing to do with the increase in Negro registrations.

The government suit seeks an injunction requiring the election of two commissioners to be held this year, as previously scheduled, and to open and publicize a period for candidates to enter the primary.

Bullock County, in southeast Alabama, is a rural area with a large Negro population.

A Negro Is Sworn in By Birmingham Police

NYT 3/31/66

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 30 (UPI) — The Birmingham police force ended its position today as the nation's largest segregated law enforcement body by swearing in a Negro.

Leroy Stover, a 33-year-old Army veteran, said shortly after receiving his patrolman's badge:

"I feel proud and honored."

Another Negro, John Johnson, is to be sworn in tomorrow morning.

The City Council, spurred by Mayor Albert D. Boutwell, announced several months ago that it was seeking qualified Negro applicants for the force, once under the command of the arch segregationist, Eugene Connor.

Vote of Negroes No Longer Scorned

By GROVER C. HALL JR.
Editor, The Montgomery Advertiser
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 2—With the primary a month off, it became evident that the registration of 225,000 Negro voters had done its work.

In the course of the campaign, no candidate for governor has mentioned the word "segregation."

Only one candidate was aggressively seeking the Negro vote, but the rest make it plain that they regard a Negro vote as a merchant regards a Negro dollar — 100 cents and acceptable.

No Democratic candidate for governor in a hundred years had put it quite as bluntly as Atty. Gen. Richmond Flowers:

"I want every Negro vote I can get."

Putting it that ways means that Flowers can have no hope of getting much more than Negro votes.

WHEN ASKED at a press conference about Negro votes, Republican Congressman James Martin, who will be his party's candidate for governor, responded:

"I welcome the vote of all citizens who share my principles."

Gov. George C. Wallace heaps the coals on federal juggernauting in Alabama affairs and has said at least once that he hasn't changed his mind about anything. But he has reminded Negroes that his free textbook dispensation will cut their toll of school dropouts.

He makes it plain that his programs are designed to help both races indiscriminately. Negroes often seek his autograph, he expects to get a scattering of Negro votes this time and the balance next time.

PROBABLY THE most notable switch was accomplished by former Gov. John M. Patterson. At Greensboro, in the heart of the downstate Black Belt, Patterson for the first time addressed some remarks to a group of Negroes:

"I want to commend you Negro citizens for the part you are taking in your government. . . . I sometimes grieve a little bit that there wasn't more accomplished when I was governor."

The significance of this statement from a previously cold, austere segregationist was not diminished by the fact that Patterson, unless all the signs are awry, is running very poorly indeed. He presumably is desperate for a wind that will move him out of the Horse Latitudes.

Negroes Lose Fight To Oust All Officers In Lowndes County

NYT 4/2/66

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 31 (UPI)—A three-judge Federal panel dismissed Thursday a suit filed by Negroes seeking to invalidate the election of all public officials in Lowndes County.

The Negro plaintiffs alleged that their constitutional rights had been violated and that "the minority white population" had seized all political power in the county.

Only five offices are on the November ballot: sheriff, coroner, tax assessor, tax collector and district attorney.

The Negroes wanted all offices declared vacant, but with the officials allowed to serve until November as "de facto officers." Then every position would have been placed on the ballot.

The judges held such action would have considerable "disruptive effect on the orderly transaction of government."

"In addition, the judges said the plaintiffs should have sought relief shortly before or after the election of the officers and that there were other remedies to alleviate the effects of past discrimination — including the Voting Rights Act of 1965—that would accomplish the same purpose.

The court took exception to the plaintiffs' argument that failure to grant relief would leave "the majority of the people in Lowndes County [until 1970] ruled by persons who have been elected by a small minority of persons who usurped power by unconstitutional means."

The court said the majority of the offices involved would be up for election in November and in 1968.

Sitting on the panel were: Judge Richard T. Rives, Montgomery, of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, and United States District Judges H. H. Grooms, Birmingham, and Frank M. Johnson Jr., Montgomery.

WASHINGTON, April 1 (UPI) — The Atomic Energy Commission announced today that its, chairman, Dr. Glenn T. The sixth site, Brookhaven National Laboratory on Long Island, is an A.E.C. installation and will not be visited until the other possible sites have been inspected.

35 Arrested At Church In Alabama

ALABAMA
AC 4/4/66

PRATTVILLE, Ala. (UPI) — Police arrested about 35 Negro youths at gunpoint Sunday for shattering the weekend quiet with their "freedom songs."

Police Chief O. C. Burton said he received complaints of loud singing from residents near the First Baptist (Negro) Church. When he arrived with three officers, Burton said, the group was gathered outside the church and indeed was singing loud.

When he told them to tone down their singing, Burton said, they refused, so he arrested them on charges of disturbing the peace.

Burton said he ordered the group to march to the city jail, and when they refused to comply he drew his pistol and warned them that if they didn't go, they would face added charges of resisting arrest. The group then trooped three blocks to jail.

Willie Delon, 19, who identified himself as a field director of the NAACP, said the group formed outside the church to try and get some of the worshippers to join them as services ended.

Services were still in progress when they were arrested.

Delon called the singing demonstration "silent prayer."

Burton said three white boys were arrested Saturday in scuffles with Negro pickets outside a food store. He said they were all docketed on disorderly conduct charges. He confirmed that a demonstrator named Sammy Randolph had suffered minor injury in one of the scuffles in which a white youth was charged, but he said Randolph appeared later in another demonstration.

FLOWERS DRIVES FOR NEGRO VOTE

His Aggressive Campaign Startles Alabamians

By GENE ROBERTS
Special to The New York Times

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 13 — Mrs. Valester Russell, a Negro, had finished her lunch of corn bread and coffee and was dipping snuff on her front porch when the sudden appearance of a group of white men and Negroes caused her to jump from her chair in fright.

"It's all right, honey," said a Negro minister. "All we're after is your vote. That white man there is Attorney General Richmond Flowers. He's running for governor, and if you help elect him he'll get you out of this slum."

Mr. Russell was embarrassed as she shook Mr. Flowers's hand.

"I ain't never seen anything like this before," she explained to the minister. "I thouht he was gonna do something to me 'cause I registered. But God bless him, God bless him and help him."

Whites Are Shocked

Throughout Alabama in recent days, Mr. Flowers has shocked whites and startled Negroes by becoming the first major white candidate in modern times to campaign directly among the Negro people in a Deep South state.

"In my administration," he says, "I won't appoint just a few Uncle Toms to say we've got a couple of Negroes in office. I'll appoint people who are intelligent in the [civil rights] movement, who know what the movement is all about."

He also promises to haul down the Confederate flag from the State Capitol and put it in a museum "for tourists to see," to increase welfare assistance for the poor and to enact and enforce state building codes in an effort to upgrade Negro dwellings.

Mr. Flowers's aggressive campaign is making it possible for other candidates to offer concessions to Negroes and still appear conservative by contrast.

Last night, for example, Al Lingo, former director of the State Highway Patrol under Gov. George C. Wallace and widely regarded as a bitter opponent of the civil rights movement, appeared before leaders of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

Jobs for Negroes Promised

He dropped a contribution into a collection plate and promised to appoint Negro deputies and clerks if elected sheriff of Jefferson County, which embraces Birmingham.

Because of his attempts last year to prosecute the accused assassins of Mrs. Viola Liuzzo, a Detroit civil rights worker, many Negroes in the state developed a high regard for Mr. Flowers. Few, however, expected him to campaign so actively for their votes in a state in which white voters have consistently opposed any racial change.

This step was taken, one campaign strategist said, because Mr. Flowers is convinced that the Johnson Administration is trying to persuade Negro leaders to endorse another liberal candidate, former Congressman Carl Elliott.

"By going over the heads of the leaders and talking directly to the Negro people," the strategist said, "the Attorney General is making it very hard for any Negro leader to oppose him.

Mr. Flowers constantly quotes President Kennedy and avoids mentioning President Johnson name.

SPEAKING A NEW LANGUAGE: Al Lingo, center, former director of Alabama State Highway Patrol, contributes to collection plate at political rally sponsored in Birmingham by [illegible] a bitter-opponent of civil rights movement, promised to appoint Negro aides if elected sheriff.

His meaning, however, is clear when he says:

"If you turn your back on Richmond Flowers, on orders from Washington, then no other Southern politican will have any reason to come to you. They'll know that the place to go for the Negro vote is Washington."

Most white politicans in Alabama are skeptical of Mr. Flowers's chances. But Mr. Flowers's key supporters say that a private poll shows he will get at least 10 per cent of the white vote in the primary May 3 and 150,000 ballots from the approximately 250,000 Neroe voters.

This, they say, will be enough votes to bring him in second in the 10-man field and put him in the run-off election for the Democratic nomination.

U.S. to Send Observers To Alabama

WASHINGTON — The Department of Justice intends to dispatch federal observers to Alabama for the May 3 primary elections to prevent infractions against 1965 voting rights act, Attorney General Nicholas Katzenbach said Sunday.

In an interview on the Metromedia network — consisting of 27 television and radio stations throughout the country — the attorney general stated that no trouble was envisioned and he expected that "local and state officials in all of these states are goind to comply with the law."

"At the same time," Katzenbach continued, "there are obligations that the federal government has under the voting rights law and were going to be prepared to meet them.

The attorney general said that in addition to the U.S. attorneys office, whose doors are always open during an election, the Justice department plans to have 33 offices open to consider complaints of non-compliance with the law. Moreover, in some counties and precincts there will be federal observers on hand. He said that in at least one county there have been requests for election supervision by observers.

Asked about press reports concerning threats of violence, Katzenbach replied that he had anticipated threats because of the presence of an extremist element in these areas.

Negroes May Push Mrs. Wallace to Runoff

By SAM HOPKINS
Constitution Political Editor

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Even the bitter enemies of Gov. George Wallace admit he's a "magician" at pleasing the crowds and that he will hang onto the governor's office another four years by getting his wife elected.

Atlanta Constitution Political Editor Sam Hopkins spent last week observing candidates running in Alabama's Democratic primary race for governor. This is his report.

But, ironically, it will be Negro candidates who make history with clear-cut victories in Alabama's Democratic primary Tuesday while Lurleen Wallace must almost certainly settle for a run-off.

Writer Meets . . .

Some Negroes will win their races because of the 1965 Voting Rights Act, which resulted in increased voter registration among Negroes. The registered Negro voters outnumber whites in at least five counties, each of which has a Negro candidate for sheriff.

The change in the pattern of voters has brought on a notable change also in the campaign techniques of some of the Democratic candidates for governor.

"All the candidates are moderate now," one north Alabama editor observed. "They're after that new Negro vote and you don't hear them talking anymore about segregation or integration. Don't misunderstand me. The segregationists still get the message when Wallace or the others cuss Lyndon Johnson or Bobby Kennedy or the federal government or the Communists."

. . . Leading Lady

This particular editor didn't have to elaborate on his own personal political views. Hanging on the wall of his office in a prominent place is a framed picture of President Johnson.

Who will get the Negro vote in the governor's race?

Some say Atty. Gen. Richmond Flowers—probably the most outspoken opponent of Gov. Wallace—may get as much as 90 per cent.

Wallace and other candidates told a Constitution reporter that the question of who gets in the run-off with Mrs. Wallace hinges on how the Negro vote splits. He did not seem optimistic that Lurleen could get a majority of the votes on Tuesday.

But Mrs. Wallace, small, trim and slim-legged and sporting a nice suntan from her outdoor speaking campaign, said last week while in the Hokes Bluff community near Gadsden, "I hope I can win without a run-off."

It was at Hokes Bluff that Gov. Wallace learned that a Constitution reporter was in the crowd.

"We've got the Atlanta Constitution here today," he said, then got one of his biggest rounds of applause when he declared, "It ain't any of their business who we elect governor anyway." He also lambasted the national press and the Birmingham papers which oppose him.

Wallace's method of ridiculing and poking fun at all who differ with his views reminds one of Marvin Griffin in his heyday.

Lurleen Wallace is not the type of candidate who excites an audience. She even appears self-conscious when she walks through a crowd of people shaking hands and handing out campaign cards.

NOT REAL CANDIDATE

Of course Mrs. Wallace is not the real candidate. It will be George Wallace who gets the votes, not her. Wallace moves through a crowd confident and cocky, shaking hands, being folksy, slapping people on the back.

A toothless, withered old woman said to a companion after Wallace shook her hand under a shade tree, "Bless his heart."

Wallace made it clear at Hokes Bluff who would be the boss if Lurleen is elected governer. After the speaking was over, this reporter sat down next to Mrs. Wallace in the school cafeteria for coffee and cookies and struck up some talk about the race.

Wallace came over immediately and told his wife were beginning their demonstration march to Montgomery. Negroes there bitterly resent Sheriff Jim Clark for his attempt to block the march and will vote solidly against him in his race against another white candidate.

Supporters of Elliott and Gilchrist believe their candidate to be the only one who can pull all of the anti-Wallace voters together in a run-off.

TOP-LEVEL MEETING

One source said that if Elliott gets in the run-off a top-level meeting will be held immediately in Birmingham for campaign leaders of the losing candidates to map plans to defeat the Wallaces.

Elliott, who served 16 years in Congress, charges that the "extremist position" Wallace "has taken and the damage he has done to the state was intended to promote his own personal and political ambitions."

Elliott also is telling voters that another Wallace administration would "seriously jeopardize" Alabama's Redstone Arsenal and space flight center at Huntsville and that Wallace "descended to the lowest level of irresponsible demogoguery when he said that our federal government was being run by a bunch of outlaws."

Gilchrist also calls for "an end to demagoguery and demonstrations and the things that create discord, mistrust and misunderstanding" in Alabama.

Wallace came over immediately and told his wife sternly, "No interviews." Lurleen refused to answer any questions after that.

3 OTHERS STRONG

The three candidates most political observers feel have the best chance of getting in the run-off election with Mrs. Wallace are Flowers, former Congressman Carl Elliott and State Sen. Bob Gilchrist.

Most of the candidates are so vehement in their criticism of Gov. Wallace that it would seem that they and their followers could join forces in the run-off election and defeat Lurleen.

But each of the other candidates apparently has some "defect" that would cause people who first voted against the Wallaces to switch to them in the run-off.

Flowers, in particular, is seen as a big loser in the run-off because of openly courting the Negro vote.

KISS OF DEATH

The Rev. Martin Luther King and most Negro political groups have urged voters to support Flowers. Most white candidates —even in Georgia—would consider King's public endorsement the kiss of death.

King last week repeatedly urged Alabama Negroes to "bloc vote" both for Negro candidates and against Wallace. He said whites have been bloc voting against Negroes for decades.

King predicted at a Montgomery church meeting that lasted until midnight Thursday that "of the some 80 Negroes running for office this year in Alabama some 50 will be elected."

The next night at a mass meeting in Selma King told his audience, "Dallas County (Selma) gave us the voters right bill." He declared that Negroes must vote together "until every race-baiter will tremble in silence."

Selma was the scene of violence last year when Negroes were beginning their demonstration march to Montgomery. Negroes there bitterly resent Sheriff Jim Clark for his attempt to block the march and will vote solidly against him in his race against another white candidate.

Supporters of Elliott and Gilchrist believe their candidate to be the only one who can pull all of the anti-Wallace voters together in a run-off.

Gilchrist also calls for "an end to demagoguery and demonstrations and the things that create discord, mistrust and misunderstanding" in Alabama.

The former governors of Alabama — John Patterson and James E. Folsom—are not given any chance of winning. Patterson, who defeated Wallace for governor in 1958, started off strong but is now considered to have fallen back too far to make a run-off.

OTHER CANDIDATES

There are four other candidates, none of whom is expected to pick up many votes.

A record turnout of 800,000 voters is expected for the Tuesday primary. This means Lurleen Wallace would have to get more than 400,000 votes to win without a run-off. There are about 235,000 Negroes now registered to vote.

There is much evidence that Alabamians are just plain tired of listening to 10 gubernatorial candidates fussing back and forth at each other.

"I'll be glad when the whole mess is over," declared a lady clerk in a Sylacauga drug store.

And although every indication points to a final victory for Lurleen, there are some in Alabama who feel that there is a sizable "silent vote" which might surprise some politicians.

NOT FOR WALLACE

An example of this might be the newsstand operator in Talladega who said:

"I'm not for Wallace. He's done more for integration than any governor we've ever had."

The winner of the Democratic primary still must prove himself —or should we say herself — in the November general election because Republican Congressman Jim Martin will be on the ballot as a candidate for governor.

It was Martin who in 1962 came within a whisker of defeating Sen. Lister Hill. Martin, a proven vote-getter who was elected to Congress in 1964, may well prove to be the strongest candidate to face Lurleen this year.

Many Illiterates Memorize Names for Tomorrow

6/2/66

By GENE ROBERTS

Special to The New York Times

SELMA, Ala, May 1 — Mrs. Martha Hornbucker, a 70-year-old Negro, was in deep concentration as she studied the name "Richmond Flowers," which had been printed in crayon on the back of a cornflakes carton.

Mrs. Hornbucker cannot read or write, and she was trying on a recent night to imprint Mr. Flowers's name upon her mind "like a picture."

Just how well she and thousans of other Negro illiterates can distinguish one name from another in Tuesday's Democratic primary may have a major bearing upon the chances of 54 Negro candidates and Mr. Flowers, a white candidate who is being supported by Negro political organizations in his campaign for Governor.

And to help the Negro illiterates, who will be voting in Alabama Tuesday for the first time in this century, civil rights workers are making voting instruction a major part of their 11th-hour election preparations.

Other preparations include the organization of car pools and canvassing teams that will go from house to house to get out the Negro vote.

'Memorization Classes'

In nearby Perry County, for example, civil rights workers have printed candidates' names on cardboard squares and are using them like flash-cards in "candidate memorization classes."

After one evening of instruction, Mrs. Hornbucker learned to pick her favorite candidates in 13 different contests, and subsequent "tests" have shown she still remembers.

In other counties, civil rights workers are supplying illiterates with marked sample ballots and teaching them to copy off the "X's" onto unmarked ballots.

The United States Department of Justice, however, expects some Negro illiterates to have difficulty in marking their ballots despite the instruction.

As a result, it is insisting that Federal voting observers have the right to watch any local voting official who might be called upon to help Negroes fill out their ballots.

As a result, it is insisting that Federal voting observers have the right to watch any local voting official who might be called upon to help Negroes fill out their ballots.

A department spokesman said "a few" white officials were resisting the idea of such observation, but added that department attorneys would hold last-minute conferences with them in an attempt to persuade them to comply with the Voting Rights Act.

Pool of Observers

The Justice Department will decide tomorrow how many observers it will send into the state from a pool of 350 in Atlanta.

The observers—plus from the Federal Bureau of Investigation and a team of 20 Justice Department attorneys — also will process any complaints of fraud received during the primary, the spokesman added.

The Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., the civil rights leader, charged during a three-day tour of the state last week that white officials may trie to "steal" the election to keep the segregationists in power and defeat Negro and liberal white candidates.

His aides said Dr. King made the charge because of "his knowledge" of Southern history. Some historians are convinced that widespread election fraud enabled white supremacist candidates to defeat the integrated Populist party in the late 19th century, and thus, paved the way for the disenfranchisement of many Negroes in the South.

Cooperation Cited

"But most counties are cooperating in this election," the Justice Department spokesman said. "One county named 37 Negroes—seven of them illiterates—to work at the polls, and when we objected that illiterate officials would be a case of the blind leading the blind, they replaced them with Negro school teachers."

In addition to the Negro election officials and Federal observers, many of the Negro candidates will have their own observers at the polls.

The Southern Regional Council and the N.A.A.C.P. Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc., recently trained 100 poll watchers at special classes in Montgomery.

Albert Turner, state director of Dr. King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference, presented this view of the primary:

"Our big concern is the Negro illiterates. About half of the old people in many rural counties can't read at all and a lot of others can't read very well.

"We had thought each voter could take some one to the polls to assist him in voting, but it turned out that this law applies only to the general election and not to the primary.

"That's why we are trying so hard to teach illiterate people to recognize the names on the ballots. I believe we are going to get the voters to the polls, but this won't do us any good if they can't figure out which candidate to vote for."

Negro Seeking Sheriff's Office Given Edge in Alabama Voting

5/2/66 ALABAMA

By ROY REED

Special to The New York Times

ANNISTON, Ala., May 1—Of the seven Negroes running for sheriff this year in Alabama, the Rev. Thomas E. Gilmore of Greene County has the best chance, mathematically, of winning.

Negroes outnumber whites 4 to 1 in that southwest Alabama county, and they outnumber them on the voter registration books by about 3,700 to 1,550. Negro registration has increased from 275 since the passage of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and since civil rights demonstrations began in Eutaw last year.

Sheriff William E. Lee, the white incumbent, observed today that he needed about 1,000 Negro votes to defeat Mr. Gilmore in Tuesday's Democratic primary. He said he thought he would get them.

"I'm a racial moderate," the sheriff said. "We've handled the niggers here for 45 years without a gun. They never saw Lee wearing a gun. We don't go out and arrest them; we just send for them."

In the Family Since '23

Sheriff Lee; his brother, A. F. Lee, now head of the State Corrections Department, and his father, the late J. F. Lee, have been the sheriffs of Greene County since 1923.

The sheriff said that he would take it calmly if defeated. Other whites—those with loose ties to the county and no property—will probably move away if Mr. Gilmore becomes sheriff, he said.

Sheriff Lee and four other sheriffs in the fertile area of the state known as the Black Belt are running for re-election in counties where Negroes, for the first time this century, have voting majorities.

In all, 54 Negroes are running for nomination to local offices or for seats in the Legislature in the primary.

About half of the Negro candidates live in 11 counties where Negroes have a population majority. In nine of those counties, according to the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Negroes now have a voting majority or a near majority.

Ten years ago, the refrain of a favorite freedom son in the civil rights movement was, "If you miss me at the back of the bus, and can't find me nowhere, just come on up to the front of the bus, I'll be riding up there."

Now at the mass meetings the Negroes sing the same tune but with new words:

"If you miss me in the jailhouse, and can't find me nowhere, just come on over to the sheriff's office, I'll be sheriffin' over there."

Politically, a generation has passed between the two verses. More and more white Alabamans, like Sheriff Lee, are aware of it.

The sheriff is obviously in earnest when he calls himself a moderate. In 1964, hedid something that few whites in the Black Belt would have done. He escorted four Negroes and ate lunch with them in Eutaw's two eating places the day after President Johnson signed the Civil Rights Act. Recently, he hired a prosperous Negro cattleman as a deputy.

The sheriff, who is 54 yars old, is a former football star at the University of Alabama. Later, he played seven years for the Green Bay Packers and worked as a wrestler in off seasons.

Mr. Gilmore, who turned 25 today, was once called by Sheriff Lee "a cottonpatch nigger."

"I recognize my stepfather," Mr. Gilmore said this week. "I haven't had much contact with my father. I was raised by my grandmother."

Mr. Gilmore has developed a rare eloquence through his leadership in the civil rights movement. When demonstrations began last year in Eutaw, he led them. A tall, well-built man, he would stride to the front of a line and people would fall in behind and march.

Negro Rated a Sure Bet To Be Alabama Sheriff

ALABAMA

AC 5/2/66

By SAM HOPKINS

Constitution Political Editor

SELMA, Ala.—Two adjoining counties in this Black Belt area will demonstrate the power of the new Negro vote in Alabama when the Democratic primary is held Tuesday.

Just a year ago there was not a single registered Negro voter in Wilcox County, located just south of this county of Dallas.

But after the violence connected with last year's Selma "freedom march" and the passage of the voting rights bill, there are now 3,700 Negro voters to only 2,100 white voters in Wilcox.

Walter J. Calhoun, a tall, raw-boned Negro who speaks softly and flashes a big, white-toothed smile to everyone he meets, is running for sheriff against a white incumbent, P. C. Jenkins.

There doesn't seem to be a way Calhoun could possibly lose.

"I can't conceive of a single Negro in Wilcox County not voting for Mr. Calhoun for sheriff," the Rev. Martin Luther King said Friday in Camden as hundreds of Negroes gathered in the street in front of the Antioch Baptist Church.

"If you elect me as sheriff," said the 30-year-old Calhoun, "you'll have good law and order. Some of the things that have happened in the past won't happen again if I'm elected."

Calhoun, dressed neatly in a dark suit, blue shirt and a tie with a stickpin in it, stood in the coolness of the old Negro church and told an Atlanta Constitution reporter that if he is elected he plans to "have both white and Negro deputies if the white ones will serve."

Wilcox Negroes are also running candidates for the state Senate, two county commission seats and two board of education posts.

"The eyes of America will be on Alabama, and particularly on Wilcox County, this coming Tuesday," Dr. King told the Negroes. "You must go to the highways and the byways to see that your brother votes."

Later that night King drove here to Selma to urge Dallas County Negroes to "get out the vote and unite" to unseat Sheriff Jim Clark, whom Negroes charge used intimidation and brutality last year during the Selma civil rights march.

"Retire him for ever and ever more," King declared.

There were only 314 Negro voters in Dallas County last year. Now there are 10,200. There are 11,800 white voters. If the Negroes stick together Clark likely will be defeated by another white candidate, Wilson Baker, Selma's former public safety director.

Although other out-of-state newsmen had been unable to get in touch with Sheriff Clark for two days, a jailer on the third floor of the jail house was talked into getting Clark to get up from his sick bed for an interview.

Dressed in a white terry-cloth robe open at the chest, Clark sat down at the big table in the center of the jail's kitchen and talked calmly and goo-naturedly for some 40 minutes — mostly about his Alabama ancesters of whom he is intensely proud. There was coffee brewing and cold biscuits and cornbread on the top of the stove.

Clark described his illness in detail and said it "first causes constipation and then diarrhea and then does this over and over again." Sheriff Clark looked a little pale.

MUD SLINGING

Clark charged Baker with "mud-slinging" in the campaign and that he "is criticizing me for a lot of things he was responsible for last year."

At one point the sheriff suddenly got up and pointed out the window to a building across the street. "Snick, Slick and the Black Panthers are all located over there. Look, you can see the black panthers pasted on the windows."

Clark seemed aware that he might well get defeated. But even if he beats Baker, a Negro is considering running for sheriff in the November general election, and by that time there may be more Negro voters registered than whites.

Although the Negroes are being urged to bloc-vote for Baker, they do not consider him an ideal candidate.

One speaker told a mass rally of Selma Negroes Friday night, "If I were voting for two rats I'd vote for the best rat."

Election day will take on new meaning for the people of Dallas and Wilcox counties Tuesday.

U.S. Watchers Off To Alabama Polls

A fleet of government cars carrying trained Civil Service Commission poll watchers moved out of Atlanta for various points in Alabama Sunday to "be in position" in case the Justice department requests their services for Tuesday's elections.

The poll observers, who declined to tell newsmen their destination or the purpose of their trip, began leaving the interagency motor pool shortly before noon, traveling singly and in pairs.

Government officials later said they did not know how many men had been sent into Alabama on a "standby" basis, but two reporters saw at least 30 leave the motor pool.

A number of them expressed concern about having to use marked governmental vehicles.

"That's typical of the government," one joked to a colleague. "Two days of closed-door sessions, and then they send us off in marked cars."

The poll watcher was referring to an unpublicized training session staged by the commission. It ended at the Atlanta Biltmore Saturday.

The session, described by the commission's Southern regional director, Hammond B. Smith, as probably the only one of its kind to be held in the country, was attended by an estimated 300 federal employes from all over the nation.

Questioned Sunday afternoon about how many observers were being sent to Alabama, Smith told The Constitution he did not "have any records" at home and could not give a specific number.

STANDBY BASIS

Smith acknowledged, however, that observers had been detailed to Alabama "on a standby basis."

"We have not been called upon officially to be observers," he said, "but if we are called on by the Justice department, then our men obviously have to be in position."

Smith said he had no idea when any such call from the Justice department might come. "Anytime between now and Tuesday morning," he said.

J. E. Doran, manager of the regional motor equipment division, also said he was unable to deal in specific numbers.

"We dispatched a number of vehicles to them, but whether they went out one in a vehicle or five, I just don't know," he said.

NOT AUTHORIZED

Efforts to determine the number of cars and men being used in the project from motor pool personnel also failed. The dispatcher issuing cars told reporters that he was not authorized to say "anything about anything."

He acknowledged, however, that the motor pool, which normally is closed on Sunday, was opened to allow the poll watchers to obtain vehicles for the trip.

Smith said if the services of the observers were not requested, the men would return to their regular jobs after the Tuesday elections. If they are called on, he said, they will perform their duties "openly and publicly."

The elections in Alabama are the first in which the Justice department could request poll watchers to prevent civil rights violations at polling places under the 1965 Voters Rights Act.

A 15 5/3/68

WASHINGTON, May 3 (AP)—Negroes — many voting for the first time—helped pile up a massive total of ballots Tuesday in the Alabama Democratic primary, focus of national attention on voting in six states.

It was the first major voting in the South since enactment of the 1965 Voting Rights Law and federal poll watchers were in seven counties to guard against election law infractions.

The earliest closing hour for any Alabama polls was 7 p.m., EDT. Some polls had a 9 p.m. EDT closing time and it could be well into the night hours before any clear picture developed of how Mrs. Lurleen Wallace did in her effort to win the Democratic nomination to succeed her husband, Gov. George C. Wallace. She was opposed by nine male opponents.

Most political analysts expected Mrs. Wallace to be the leader among the field. Advance questions were whether she could get a majority and, if not, who would be the runnerup, and contestant, in a runoff May 31.

IN FLORIDA, where there was also a contest for the Democratic nomination for governor, voting was heavy in some areas, moderate to light in others.

Mayor Robert King High of Miami was one of three contesting Gov. Haydon Burns for the Democratic nomination for governor. Closing time for most Florida polls is 8 p.m. EDT.

In other primaries:

OHIO—Balloting light. Republican Gov. James A. Rhodes was opposed for nomination by William L. White, a candidate who was overwhelmed four years ago. Frazier Reams Jr. of Toledo and Harry H. McIlwain of Cincinnati vied for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

OTHER CONTESTS of major interest in Ohio were between Robert Taft Jr. and William E. Flax, a member of the John Birch Society, for a Republican nomination to Congress, and a bid by James H. Bell of Cleveland, a Negro, for the Democratic nomination for secretary of state. Poll closing is 7:30 p.m. EDT.

Oklahoma — Twelve contestants sought the Democratic nomination for governor, and there were three candidates for the Republican nomination. There were contests also for Senate nominations.

Indiana—Principal national interest focused on a clash between Richard L. Roudebush, thrown into the same district by redistricting.

New Mexico—Contests for both Democratic and Republican nominations for governor.

These primaries are first round eliminations, removing within the parties hopefuls for Democratic or Republican nominations for the Nov. 8 elections when 435 House members, 35 senators and 35 governors will be elected.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 3 — Negroes and whites jammed polling places today to vote in Alabama Democratic primaries in which government segregation was the overriding issue.

Drawn to the polls by the hope of electing 54 Negro county officials and defeating Mrs. George C. Wallace in her bid to succeed her husband as Governor, Negroes began forming lines an hour before the polls opened at 8 A.M. Central Standard Time (10 A.M. Eastern Daylight time). They continued to turn out in large numbers until the polls closed.

Closing time varied from 5 to 7 P.M., with voting officials empowered to keep polling places open longer to admit persons still in line.

Whites also crowded the polling places under a warm spring sun. Racially mixed lines of voters stretched as long as three blocks in many of the state's 67 counties.

In seven counties, the first Federal voting observers since the Reconstruction period after the Civil War looked on as thousands of Negroes marked ballots and pulled voting-machine levels for the first time in their lives.

Sheriff Races Watched

The turnout underlined the importance of the primary, which could sweep white county officials and legislators out of office in as many as nine Alabama counties and give Negroes the Democratic nominations for such offices as sheriff, state representative, county comissioner and tax collector.

In the view of many voters, victories in any of seven Negro races for sheriff would mean a major social revolution. Most of the Negro candidates were not even allowed to vote in their counties before this year.

Because Alabama is the first state to feel the impact of mass Negro registrations under the new Voting Rights Act, Southern segregationists and civil rights leaders were watching the election for clues to what may lie ahead for Louisiana, Mississippi and other Deep South states.

The United States Department of Justice sent more than 200 observers into the state to enforce the Voting Rights Act of 1965, which guarantees Negroes in Alabama and five other Southern states the right to register and vote without interference.

Since the act was passed last August, 122,000 Negroes have registered in Alabama, raising the number of Negroes enrolled as voters in the state to 235,000.

The Birmingham News, which last Sunday predicted that 750,000 persons would vote, revised the forecast at noon to "more than 800,000." And this may have been a "conservative estimate," an editor said.

Such a total would shatter the previous record of 633,000 in 1962, when Governor Wallace was elected after having promised militant resistance to racial desegregation. Barred by the State Constitution from succeeding himself, the Governor entered his wife, Lurleen, in today's race.

Nine Opponents

Although her nine opponents conceded almost unanimously that she was the favorite, they predicted she would fail to get a majority and thus would face the second-place candidate in a runoff on May 31.

Nominees were also named today for the United States Senate seat held by John J. Sparkman, eight House seats (five of them contested) and hundreds of state and county offices.

All but one of Mrs. Wallace's opponents promises to steer the state toward a moderate course in race relations. But Negro political organizations urged Negroes to "make your vote count" by voting in a bloc for Richmond M. Flowers, the State AAttorney General.

Mr. Flowers broke with precedent in Alabama by appearing at civil rights rallies to promise that he would appoint civil rights activists to state posts if he were elected Governor.

"I'll appoint Negroes — and they will not be Toms," he said in the language of the civil rights movement. "I'll appoint Negroes who are active in the movement and know what it is all about."

Three other candidates—former United States Representative Carl Elliott, former Gov. John Patterson and State Senator Robert Gilchrist—charged that Governor Wallace's racial policies had tarnished the state's image, but they stopped short of promising to integrate state government offices.

They accused Mr. Wallace of "demagoguery" and of turning the State Constitution into a "sham" by entering his wife into the race.

Governor Wallace, who made the major campaign pronouncements for his wife, ignored opponents and concentrated his attacks on Northern newspapers, Senator Robert F. Kennedy, Federal courts and Communists.

"Stand up for Alabama," he said, "by standing up for the man who stood up for you."

Although Mrs. Wallace's candidacy initially prompted a rash of jokes — "Bedfellows make strange politics" and "We'll need 'him' and 'her' desks"—the laughter stopped as thousands showed up at her rallies.

A Word Avoided

Although Mr. Wallace pronounced the word "Negro" carefully and avoided the word "segregation" in the campaign, many persons remembered that he used state troopers in a futile effort to halt last year's civil rights demonstrations for Negro voting rights.

Only last week, he kept the segregation issue alive by rescinding a one-week-old desegregation program that the state's two mental hospitals had instituted in order to qualify for Federal aid.

Other Democratic candidates in the Governor race included former Gov. James Folsom; Charles Woods, a multimillionaire businessman; A. W. Todd, the State Agriculture Commissioner; Sherman Powell, a Decatur lawyer, and Eunice I. Gore, a retired office worker and outspoqen segregationist.

The Democratic nominee will face an aggressive campaign from United States Representative James D. Martin, a Republican who narrowly missed upsetting Senator Lister Hill in 1962.

In the Senate race, Mr. Sparkman was opposed by two men and one woman, none of them politically prominent in Alabama.

Republicans were watching the race closely, however, and were expected to nominate a former state Republican chairman, John Grenier, or a Republican member of the House to oppose Senator Sprkman should the primary show his voter appeal to be sagging.

A Negro political organization, the Alabama Democratic Conference, endorsed Frank Dixon, a Huntsville space engineer, over Senator Sparkman.

Another Negro organization, the Confederation of Alabama Political Organizations, refused to make an endorsement in the Senate race because none of the candidates had appeared before it to outline a program for Negroes.

Wallace Takes Over, Rips Poll Observers

AC 5/4/66

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI)—Gov. George Wallace Tuesday marked the Democratic primary victory of his wife in the governor's race with a blast at the federal government for sending federal poll observers into Alabama.

"I could have used some of those fellows in primary campaigns I was in," Wallace said referring to his presidential primaries in Indiana, Maryland, and Wisconsin, which he lost.

Wallace made the comments with his wife standing beside him at his campaign headquarters before more than 300 supporters who greeted them enthusiastically with deafening rebel yells and prolonged applause.

Mrs. Wallace, tears glistening in her eyes and with a wide grin, spoke first. She was introduced as "the next governor of Alabama."

She made a one minute statement saying, "This is a wonderful night for us. We are deeply grateful for the overwhelming endorsement to continue the type of government that we have had.

"We will continue to stand up for Alabama," Mrs. Wallace said, and then turned the microphone to her husband who was sporting a "Wallace for Governor" button.

NEXT FOUR YEARS

"We appreciate the splendid support and the endorsement of our administration and the desire of Alabamans who want to continue the same type of government the next four years as we have given the past three years and six months," Wallace said.

The governor denounced the federal observers who came into the state to make sure Negroes were able to cast ballots without difficulty.

"I guess they learned we have always had clean elections in our state," the governor said.

Wallace charged that sending the federal agents into Alabama was "against all the people of our state and nation."

"The next administration will concern itself with all the people of this state," Wallace pledged, "regardless of who they happen to be."

Crosscurrents in Alabama

The fact of overwhelming importance about Alabama's primary was its peacefulness. For the first time since Reconstruction, Negroes voted in large numbers, and there was no violence or disorder. Politics in a free society scored another impressive triumph.

That triumph is scarred but not basically altered by Mrs. George C. Wallace's easy success in winning the Democratic nomination for Governor. Her election, presuming she defeats her Republican opponent in November, will mean another four years of negative, backward-looking Government under the domination of her husband. Yet he cannot stop social change in Alabama any more than he has been able to prevent school desegregation or the registering of Negro voters in the past four years. Indeed, it can be argued —as the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. did yesterday—that "Negroes have made more strides in the face of Wallace's stubborn resistance and emotional reactions than under many so-called moderate administrations."

The tragedy is that violent repression, time-killing court suits and racist demagoguery by elected officials merely breed pointless conflict and civil strife. It is unfortunate that the majority of white Alabama voters did not have the courage and good sense to choose a Governor who would inculcate respect for law and begin the constructive work of racial cooperation that needs to be done. The Alabama whites voted instead to try to escape reality for another four years.

The results in the gubernatorial primary suggest two additional conclusions. One is that restrictions against the length of service of a state official are useless; in a democracy, the majority ultimately gets its way. In this instance, if a constitutional provision had not debarred Wallace from running for re-election, he might have polled fewer votes than he did through the shadow candidacy of his wife.

Secondly, the poor showing of former Representative Carl Elliott, the favorite of the white moderates, demonstrates that events have swept aside the old-fashioned strategy of the middle-of-the-roaders. It is too late to conciliate white racism with discreet silences while covertly courting the vote of Negroes. The stronger race run by State Attorney General Richmond M. Flowers, who openly campaigned for racial equality, suggests that candor is the better course—politically as well as morally.

Most Alabama Negroes eagerly and proudly exercised their hard-won right to vote, ignoring in most places the "go it alone" strategy of the Students Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. These new voters recognized that politics is no panacea for all life's problems, whether one lives in Alabama or New York. It is only one of several ways of building a better society. And politics, by its very nature, is a slow, disjointed, complicated way of making progress. In voting freely and in electing a few of their number to legislative and county offices, Alabama's Negroes have at last started on the adventure of democratic self-government. Their beginning on May 3, 1966, will be remembered long after the Wallaces have faded into oblivion.

Sheriff Election Row Flares at Selma

AC 5/6/66

SELMA, Ala. (UPI)—An election dispute flared Wednesday over the closely fought sheriff's race between Wilson Baker and incumbent Jim Clark, the man who became the symbol of resistance to the historic Selma-to-Montgomery civil rights march.

Baker, former Selma safety director, grabbed a slight lead over Clark and Clark filed a protest, claiming he had found several voting boxes unattended.

Meanwhile, tabulation of the race was halted. At last count, and on the basis of 74 of 80 boxes, Baker had 7,537 votes to 7,445 for Clark.

The two men once cooperated with each other on law enforcement in Selma. But they differed sharply over who was to blame for Selma's racial woes, and Baker quit his post to run against Clark.

Another man who worked with Clark during the hectic days of Selma, and who was unpopular with Negroes—former highway patrol director Al Lingo—lost a bid to win the nomination for sheriff in Montgomery County (Birmingham).

Lingo made an appeal for Negro votes, but lost out to incumbent Sheriff Mel Bailey.

Because of the new federal voting rights act, thousands of additional Negroes were able to vote in Tuesday's primary, but one of their most notable victories was watered-down by a late vote count.

This happened in a legislative race in the 31st District, where it earlier appeared that Negro attorney Fred Gray had defeated two white opponents in his bid for a seat in the Alabama Legislature. But the last ballot box — filled with absentee ballots — to be counted forced him into a runoff and kept him from becoming the first member of his race in 100 years to win nomination to the state Legislature.

The 23-year-old Gray, apparently had won the nomination early Wednesday with 74 of the district's 75 boxes reporting.

The 75th box however gave Gray only seven votes and split the remaining 264 votes between his two white opponents, Bill Neville Jr., and C. T. Milldrum.

Gray will face Neville May 31st in the runoff. The Negro received 8,318 votes to 5,820 for Neville. Milldrum had 3,029.

Several Negro candidates made strong showings in sheriffs' race in the Black Belt region and at least three of them made runoffs against white opponents.

Air Force Veteran Lucius D. Amerson led three white men—including incumbent Sheriff Harvey Sadler—in the Macon County race. Amerson had 2,608, Sadler 2,501. They also meet May 31.

In Hale County the Rev. Henry McCaskill received the most votes but was unable to clear the 50 per cent needed to avoid a runoff. McCaskill had 2,631 to 1,355 for former state trooper Ben Kizziah.

Negro Henry C. Williams pulled down 1,996 votes in the Bullock County sheriff's race and will meet incumbent C. M. Blue Jr., in the runoff. Blue polled 1,210. Rev. Newman had 1,096 for third place.

Another runoff possibility loomed in Perry County where Negro Pat Davis battled it out at the polls with Sheriff William U. Loftis. Two other whites were far behind.

Not all Negro candidates were as fortunate as Amerson, McCaskill and Williams.

Negro Wesley McNear finished a distant third to incumbent Barbour County Sheriff William J. Adams and another white man, Gerald Green. McNear received only 584 votes to 3,246 for Adams and 1,185 for Green.

Thomas Gilmore put up a strong fight at the polls before losing to incumbent Green County Sheriff William E. (Bill) Lee. Lee, a rugged ex-professional football player, polled 1,855 to 1,722 for Gilmore.

In another hotly contested race for sheriff, P. C. (Lummie) Jenkins won his eighth term in office in defeating Negro Walter J. Calhoun 2,923-2,451.

In other races for the state legislature it appeared as though five Negroes could join Gray at Montgomery if they win runoffs.

GOPs Vow to Beat Wallaces in Fall

Alabama

AC 5/5/66

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alabama Republicans took the view Wednesday that temporary emotional factors propelled Lurleen Wallace to her sweeping victory in the state Democratic primary and that their party's chances of winning the governorship are bright.

"I think there will be a different story in the fall," Rep. James H. Buchanan of Birmingham said in an interview. Buchanan is one of five Republicans elected to Congress from Alabama last year.

Mrs. Wallace, who made it clear Gov. George C. Wallace will continue to run things if she is elected, outdistanced nine male opponents and captured a majority vote for the Democratic nomination for governor in Tuesday's primary.

Baker ahead of Clark in Selma sheriff's race; at least nine Negroes make run-off for sheriff, legislator. Page 2.

FLOWERS FAR BEHIND

Runnerup but still far behind was State Atty. Gen. Richmond Flowers who had openly bid for the Negro vote and received strong support in Negro voting precincts.

It was the first major voting in the South since enactment of the 1965 voting rights law, and Negroes made their strength felt in many local offices.

The Republicans will nominate their candidate against Mrs. Wallace in a convention to be held July 29 at Montgomery. Unless plans go awry, the nomination will go to James D. Martin of Gadsden, now a representative in Congress.

CHALLENGED HILL

Martin tried for the Senate in 1962 and lost to Democrat Lister Hill by less than 7,000 votes. Martin, 47, is in the oil distribution business in Gadsden. He is a Methodist who teaches Sunday school and served in the Army during World War II, coming out as a major.

There is no general agreement among Republicans as to who may be named to run against Sen. John J. Sparkman, who won renomination in the Democratic primary over two opponents. There has been some talk of John Grenier of Birmingham, if he can be persuaded to make the race.

Buchanan said that the presence of federal registrars and federal referees in Alabama had, in his opinion, stirred up a great deal of emotion which generated support for the Wallaces from many voters with more moderate views on racial matters. He said he felt that there was something of a protest vote against what these people regarded as outside interference and that most of such votes went to Mrs. Wallace.

CALLED A LANDSLIDE

Wallace himself called the outcome a landslide endorsement of his policies and a repudiation of his critics.

Five other states also held primaries Tuesday.

In Indiana, Republican Congressman Ralph Harvey, 65, who first came to Congress in 1947, was beaten for the nomination by Richard L. Roudebush, also a member of the present Congress. A redistricting put them in the same district.

Robert Taft Jr., son of the late senator, won a Republican congressional nomination in Ohio with a 4-1 swamping of an opponent who supports the John Birch Society. Taft served in

U.S. Sues On Selma Vote Count

SELMA, Ala. (UPI) — Six boxes of predominantly Negro votes that could have beaten segregationist Sheriff Jim Clark were thrown out by local officials Thursday, spurring the Justice department to file suit to have Wilson Baker declared the primary winner.

Clark had protested that he found three of the six boxes unguarded before votes were counted in Tuesday's Democratic primary. They were voided by the Dallas County Democratic Executive Committee.

The Justice department immediately filed suit in federal court in Mobile, Ala. Assistant U.S. Atty. Gen. John Doar was in Selma awaiting the committee's decision and federal observers were present when the votes were counted.

Without the votes, Baker, Selma's former public safety director, would have won a plurality but not a majority. That would have put him in a runoff against Clark, who beat Baker in a runoff four years ago after trailing in the primary.

Alstin Keith, head of the executive committee, charged the Justice department would "do anything to stomp Jim Clark's guts.

"It's a personal vendetta between the Justice department and Jim Clark," Keith said.

During Selma's racial turmoil last year Clark, in the eyes of Negroes, became the symbol of resistance to their historic Selma-to-Montgomery civil-rights march. Baker took a more moderate stand during the demonstrations that rocked Selma.

The suit said the committee's decision had deprived voters of their rights under the 1965 federal Voting Rights Act.

Action Might Mean a Runoff May 31 in Sheriff Race in Dallas County, Ala.

By ROY REED
Special to The New York Times

SELMA, Ala., May 5 — The Justice Department charged today that local Democratic officials had disqualified 1,672 Negro votes to save Sheriff James G. Clark Jr., a segregationist leader, from defeat in Tuesday's Democratic primary.

The department, which had been watching the Democratic primary closely, filed a suit in the Federal District Court at Mobile asking the court to overturn the action of the Dallas County Democratic Executive Committee and declare Wilson Baker, Sheriff Clark's moderate opponent, the winner.

The suit asked for a preliminary injunction to prevent the disputed ballots from being destroyed or altered.

Enough to Win

With the disputed Negro votes, Mr. Baker would have won the Democratic primary by a majority of 376 votes over Mr. Clark and two minor opponents, thus avoiding a runoff with Sheriff Clark May 31.

A decision in the sheriff's race in Tuesday's primary had been delayed because Sheriff Clark had challenged the validity of the ballots in six of the county's 80 voting precincts.

The Democratic executive committee agreed with his contention that the six boxes, in predominantly Negro neighborhoods and supervised by Negroes working in an election for the first time, had been improperly handled.

M. A. Keith, chairman of the committee, said the boxes were "so infected with irregularities as to make it impossible to determine which were proper and valid ballots and which were not."

The election had been hotly contested and tempers had grown short on both sides after the results were delayed. Some of Mr. Clark's partisans talked of the possibility of violence last night.

The Justice Department's suit said that Mr. Baker had won the election with 8,994 votes to 7,537 for Sheriff Clark and 1,081 for two minor candidates.

It said that the six boxes challenged by Sheriff Clark contained 1,672 Negro votes and 162 white votes, of which 1,412 had been cast for Mr. Baker, 92 for Sheriff Clark and 21 for the other two men.

Mr. Doar sent a Justice Department lawyer with the lawsuit to Mobile in an airplane as soon as the Democratic committee announced its closed-door action. The suit had already been prepared.

It alleges that Dallas County voters were deprived of their right under the 1965 Voting Rights Act "to have their votes counted and the results declared in accordance with the votes as cast."

The preliminary injunction would order the local officials to comply also with Alabama law, which requires a party committee to declare the election results before permitting any challenges. The Dallas County committe did not announce the voting results.

Thousands of Negroes who had registered since passage of the Voting Rights Act went to the polls to try to unseat Sheriff Clark. He had become a symbol of segregationist resistance during the Selma civil rights movement when he and his men clubbed Negro demonstrators and jailed hundreds of them.

Sheriff Clark was one of the few white Alabama officials against whom Negroes voted as a bloc in the primary. Several other white candidates, including some incumbent sheriffs, were elected with Negro support.

Mr. Keith said the committee had found in studying the disputed ballot boxes that one had been left unattended for a period of time.

The Negro election officials had "walked off and left it," he said. "It was just too much for them."

He said some boxes had contained sample and duplicate ballots.

Another member of the committee said the vote on the challenge had been along political lines, with friends of Mr. Clark voting to throw out the boxes and friends of Mr. Baker voting against it. The committee has 42 members.

The delay in deciding the election has led to considerable ill temper, particularly among the Clark partisans.

A Los Angeles Times reporter tried to shake hands with Sheriff Clark at the Courthouse this afternoon and the sheriff said to him, "Why don't you go to hell."

A few minutes later, a Baltimore Sun reporter approached the sheriff to ask a question. A man standing beside Mr. Clark said, "Why don't you leave him alone?" and struck the reporter in the abdomen with his elbow. The sheriff restrained the man.

A few dozen friends of Mr. Clark, including armed deputies, talked grimly of "blood in the streets" last night as it appeared that the six ballot boxes might cost their man the election.

A special subcommittee of the County Democratic Committee was up all night last night counting and examining the disputed ballots.

Federal observers watched and helped at the invitation of County Probate Judge Bernard Reynolds, the official in charge of elections.

The Negro election officials of the six precincts had bogged down in their counting early Wednesday morning and Judge Reynolds asked the Federal observers to join a local crew of officials in finishing the count.

The exhausted group interrupted its work about 7 A.M. yesterday and Judge Reynolds impounded the boxes, locking them in a vault at the courthouse.

Federal guards stood watch at the vault, as well as at another room where the remaining 74 boxes of the county were stored.

The Democratic Committee met in emergency session last night and decided to appoint the subcommittee to resume the counting. This decision came over the protest of Sheriff Clark, who wanted the six boxes thrown out without a count.

Several of the sheriff's friends stood in the dark street outside until after midnight, complaining among themselves and warning of violence if the sheriff lost.

Mr. Baker needed more than 1,000 votes to win a clear majority and thus avoid a runoff May 31. The returns from the first 74 boxes gave him 7,537 to 7,443 for Clark. Two lesser candidates received about 1,000 votes between them.

Other Primary Results

Meanwhile, near - complete primary results from throughout the state showed that at least 24 of 54 Negro candidates achieved successes in Tuesday's Democratic primaries. They will be in runoffs against white legislators and county officials.

Eight of these contests will be for the State Legislature and four for sheriff. The others will be for tax assessor, tax collector, county commissioner and school board posts.

Many of the Negro candidates are banking on a "backlash" of Negro resentment against the landslide white vote for Mrs. George C. Wallace, who won the Democratic gubernatorial nomination to succeed her segregationist husband.

"Some Negroes voted for white candidates Tuesday," said Albert Turner of Perry County, a Negro candidate for the State House of Representatives. "But I don't think there will be as much of that on May 31. The vote that the Wallaces got will draw Negroes together much tighter."

One Negro legislative candidate, Fred D. Gray, said he was "looking into a 1,000-vote discrepancy" in the balloting in his three-county district.

Court Sets May 16 Session and Bars Tampering With Clark vs. Baker Ballots

NYT 5/7/66

By The Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 6—A Federal district judge ordered the Dallas County Democratic Executive Committee today to appear for a hearing May 16 to show why it should not count disputed ballots in the county sheriff's race.

The judge, Frank M. Johnson Jr., earlier issued a temporary injunction forbidding any tampering with the ballots.

The main candidates in the race are Sheriff James G. Clark Jr. and Wilson Baker, former Public Safety Commissioner of Selma, the seat of Dallas County.

Mr. Baker is a moderate on racial matters while Sheriff Clark has become a symbol for segregationists.

Votes Disqualified

In his order setting hearing date on a suit filed by the Justice Department, Judge Johnson also required the members of the committee to defend themselves against a request for an injunction. The injunction would forbid them to give any effect to Sheriff Clark's challenge of ballots cast in six boxes until the votes are counted and Mr. Baker is declared the nominee.

The Justice Department contends that almost 1,700 Negro voters were improperly disqualified in the primary Tuesday to prevent Mr. Baker from winning the nomination. The department says that these votes would give Mr. Baker a clear majority — and the nomination —in the four-man race.

In the earlier restraining order, Johnson temporarily enjoined the Democratic committee and its chairman, Alston Keith, from failing to have Federal observers present when further action is taken involving the six contested boxes.

The Government complaint, filed by John Doar, head of the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department, asserts the committee kilure to declare a winner "deprives persons entitled to vote in Dallas County of their right to vote under the 1965 Voting Rights Act."

Sheriff Clark had charged improper handling of the ballots in six of the county's 80 voting precincts, and the county committee upheld him.

Mr. Keith said today, "We were really leaning over backward to stay out of trouble." He said most of the officials handling the disputed ballots were inexperienced. Only two of the 18 poll officials were white.

According to Mr. Keith one box was found untended, another had 40 more ballots than the number of voters assigned to it and two others contained several ballots marked with the names of more than one candidate for the same office. At the other two polling places, he said, the officials were discovered sleeping.

If the predominantly Negro votes among the contested ballots are included, Mr. Baker would win the Democratic nomination and would not have to face Sheriff Clark in a runoff primary May 31.

The committee counted the votes in a secret session yesterday, which was watched by Federal observers, and then announced there were too many irregularities and a runoff must be held.

Mr. Keith said it was impossible to determine which were proper ballots and which were not.

The Justice Department complaint said Mr. Baker had received 1,412 of the votes in the six disputed boxes, Sheriff Clark 92. Including the disputed boxes, Mr. Baker would have 8,994 votes, a majority of the 17,618 cast. Sheriff Clark would have 7,537, with the two other candidates far behind.

U. S. Observers Restricted

By ROY REED

Special to The New York Times

SELMA, Ala., May 6 — Local officials in three Black Belt counties kept Federal observer from watching white poll work ers mark the ballots of illiterate Negroes in Tuesday's Demcratic primary.

The observers were sent to only seven counties. Thus, in almost half, their immediate effectiveness was curtainedl.

The observers encountered the restrictive policy in Greene, Sumter and Marengo Counties in western Alabama. Some precinct officials permitted them to watch in spite of the policy.

White candidates defeated Negro candidates in all three counties. Negro voters outnumber white voters in Green County by 2 to 1.

The restriction raised a question about the effectiveness of the section of the 1965 Voting Rights Act providing poll watch ers in areas where Negroes have traditionally been denied the right to vote.

The Justice Department said it had not been able to override the local officials because the Voting Rights Act does not explicitly authorize observers to watch the marking of ballots.

A department spokesman in Washington said, however, that the observers had copied the numbers on all ballots cast by illiterates and had interviewed the voters to find out hos they intended to vote.

The records are being studied and if they show that enough illiterates were incorrectly voted to change the outcome of an election, the department will ask a court to take action, he said.

Some Negro candidates and civil rights workers have expressed dismay over the observers' not being allowed to operate freely.

Albert Turner, a Negro candidate for the Legislature from the district comprising Perry, Sumter and Marengo Counties, said the observers had done a good job in his home county of Perry but had not been as effective in the two others.

Mr. Turner said he hoped the Justice Department would correct the situation before the runoff election May 31 in which Mr. Turner faces a white opponent.

A Justice Department spokesman said he did not know whether Federal observers wo be provided for the runoff.

Tells of Complaints

Mr. Turner said he had heard several complaints that election officials in Greene, Sumter and Marengo counties had marked illiterates' ballots for candidates other than those the voters specified.

The Justice Department spokesman said the policy of no allowing the observers near enough to watch the marking of illiterates' ballots had been laid down by the Circuit Solicitor (Prosecutor) of the judicial district made up of Marengo, Greene and Sumter counties. He said the department had ied to persuade him torelent, but failed.

Mayor Willie Gray Little of Linden in Marengo County threatened to arresthe observers if they got too close to the voters.

The Justice Department spokesman said that about 30 per cent of the 80 polling places in Dallas County (Selma) had been covered by Federal observers.

Many of the places not covered in Dallas and the other six counties were manned by Negro election officials and the department did not cover them because it felt that there was little chance of fraud by whites in those precincts, the spokesman said.

Observers did not watch at the six polling places involved in the dispute in the Dallas County sheriff's race.

The Justice Department spokesman said the observers in Greene, Sumter and Marengo, although restrained from watching illiterates vote, still carried out their other duties: watching to see whether state laws were followed, whether persons voted at the right place, whether the counting and tallying were correct, whether voters were challenged properly and whether intimidation was used at the polling places.

Nurses Vote to Resign

The Professional Public Health Nurses Association said last night that its members had voted overwhelmingly at a meeting to resign from their city jobs on May 23 if a new contract agreement were not reached by then. The association said that 450 of its 550 members attended a meeting at the Hotel Diplomat, 108 West 43d Street. The nurses' group has rejected a contract recommended by a mediation panel that would have raised the present annual starting salary to $6,400 from $6,050 and the maximum salary to $8,200 from $7,190.

Court Bans Destruction Of Ballots

Alabama
AP 5/1/66

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — U.S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. has issued a temporary restraining order barring destruction, mutilation or alteration of any ballot cast in the disputed Dallas County sheriffs race.

The Justice Department had charged that nearly 1,700 Negro voters were disqualified improperly in Tuesday's democratic primary to prevent Wilson Baker from winning the rac from Sheriff James G. Clark without a runoff.

Baker, the city's public safety director, is a racial moderate while Clark is known for his segregationists views.

Lurleen's Victory Pressures Martin

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 7—Long will the tale be told in the commonwealth.

Lurleen Burns Wallace, a farm girl who wanted to be a nurse but became a clerk in a dime store, married a bantam law student who came to call in a highway department dump truck.

She became First Lady of Alabama and, rising to an occasion in fairyland, won an incredible victory as a candidate for governor of Alabama.

Mrs. Wallace did what to many railbirds appeared impossible—she won without a runoff against the Negro bloc vote and nine male opponents, two of them former governors.

SHE CARRIED the home counties of each of her opponents. She ran powerfully in the Tennessee Valley, in the Birmingham area and by the sea in the Mobile area.

She carried all Alabama counties except a few Black Belt counties where Negro voters outnumbered whites. There was nothing sectional in her victory, it was an all-Alabama sweep.

But recently delivered of a cancer, Mrs. Wallace, 39, swiftly mastered the ways of a campaigner. She spoke briefly on the stump ahead of

ALABAMA

Gov. Wallace and she did it with poise and confidence.

THE NEGRO bloc vote in this case was an impotent wheeze. While it made Atty. Gen. Richmond Flowers a poor second, it also kept him from getting more than the merest handful of white votes.

It was a great day for George Wallace. Whereas most Alabama governors are dismally unpopular in the last year of their terms, the Wallaces ran far better than he himself had run in 1962.

Former Gov. John Patterson, who had defeated Wallace in 1958, made an unbelievably poor showing. Incomplete returns had him in sixth place.

Republican Congressman Jim Martin, who had expected to run against the Wallaces in November, said that it would be very difficult to defeat them.

The heat will now be on Martin to run against U.S. Sen. John Sparkman instead of Wallace. It will be argued that he can't defeat Wallace and he can't lose to Sparkman.

WHITES OVERCOME ODDS IN ALABAMA

Past Favors Won Votes of Some Negroes in Wilcox

NYT 5/8/66

BY GENE ROBERTS

Special to The New York Times

CAMDEN, Ala., May 7 — The chances of political survival looked slim for five white officials of Wilcox County when Negroes filed as candidates against them three months ago.

Only a year before, Negroes were not allowed to vote in the county, but passage of the Federal Voting Rights Act of 1965 changed all that, and now 3,691 Negroes were registered.

The total white population of voting age was only 2,624 in 1960, according the census, and, if a 50-year trend continued, it was still lower this year.

But with the aid of Negro votes, the white officials survived in the primary Tuesday election.

How did it happen? Why did avowedly segregationist white officials get Negro votes in Wilcox and other predominantly Negro counties throughout Alabama's fertile, cotton-and cattle-producing Black Belt?

"It was too early for us to have a colored sheriff," said Lee O. Taylor, a 54-year-old Negro house painter who also works for Wilcox's white officials as a school bus driver. "The white folks wouldn't have liked that a bit and it would have caused us some trouble."

Stays in His Place

"So," he went on "I voted for Mr. Lummie Jenkins to keep on being sheriff. He was well qualified for the job and some of the other white folks were, too, for their jobs. I don't have any kick about them because I stay in my place and try not to give them any trouble."

Buster Lawrence, who is 58 and farms on shares at Possum Bend four miles outside of Camden, the county seat, said he did not care who knew that he had voted for Pete Jones, the county tax assessor, over his Negro opponent. He said he and Mr. Jones had known each other "all our lives." He went on:

"I lived across the road a ways from him when he was little. He's loaned me his car before to go to Birmingham, and when I need borrow a little money, I can get it from him and his family. He helped me, so I helped him."

It was also a case of "doing smething for somebody that did something for me "that led Louis Handley, a 60-year-old farmer who cannot read or write, to bypass a Negro candidate in favor of County Road Commissioner J. C. Martin.

Sent 3 Loads of Gravel

"This little lane of a road that runs from my house to the highway was getting mighty rutty," he said. "And way before all this politics started I went to Mr. J. C. Martin about it and Mr. J. C. Martin sent three loads of gravel out here."

Sheriff P. C. (Lummie) Jenkins, who was the leading vote-afraid to vote with all of those white people working in the polling places as election officials. They were afraid they might lose their jobs, or something."

Sheriff Jenkins says, however, it was a "real fair election and it went real smooth—there wasn't any trouble at all." And he supports his statement by pointing out that Justice Department spokesmen told newsmen that Wilcox had cooperated fully with Federal observers dispatched there under the Voting Rights Act.

"I would have got even more nigger votes," Sheriff Jenkins says, "if some of those civil rights workers hadn't gone way out in the country and told people that I'd drop out of the race and that they would be wasting their vote if they next time it won't be so new to us and we'll win."

But Sheriff Jenkins, who at 66 is thinking of still more terms, believes his problems are over.

"This was something new to them [Negroes] and a lot of them voted," he says, "but next time of them won't bother."

my place and try not to give them any trouble."

Buster Lawrence, who is 58 and farms on shares at Possum Bend four miles outside of Camden, the county seat, said he did not care who knew that he had voted for Pete Jones, the county tax assessor, over his Negro opponent. He said he and Mr. Jones had known each other "all our lives." He went on:

"I lived across the road a ways from him when he was little. He's loaned me his car before to go to Birmingham, and when I need borrow a little money, I can get it from him and his family. He helped me, so I helped him."

It was also a case of "doing smething for somebody that did something for me "that led Louis Handley, a 60-year-old farmer who cannot read or write, to bypass a Negro candidate in favor of County Road Commissioner J. C. Martin.

Sent 3 Loads of Gravel

"This little lane of a road that runs from my house to the highway was getting mighty rutty," he said. "And way before all this politics started I went to Mr. J. C. Martin about it and Mr. J. C. Martin sent three loads of gravel out here."

Sheriff P. C. (Lummie) Jenkins, who was the leading vote-getter in Wilcox's primary with 3,460 votes against 2,738 for his Negro opponent, Walter Calhoun, is convinced that Negroes voted for him because he had "never mistreated them."

He had served 27 years as sheriff, refuses to wear a gun, and believes he owns a pair of handcuffs but cannot remember where he put them. When he needs to arrest a Negro, he almost never goes out and brings him in.

"I just send out word to the niggers and they generally come on in," the sheriff says.

After Mr. Calhoun filed to run against him, Sheriff Jenkins fought back by shaking hands with Negroes for the first time in his life.

'I've Always Been Fair'

"You know, I've always been fair to everbody in this county, now," the sheriff declared when he campaigned among Negroes.

Albert Gordon, director of the Wilcox County Civic League, an affiliate of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference, concedes that Sheriff Jenkins does not have a reputation for brutality. But he said that his organization wanted a Negro sheriff for protection against white segregationists who openly carried guns in their cars.

Mr. Gordon concedes that Sheriff Jenkins received Negro votes, but he says they totaled less than half as many as the "four to five hundred" the sheriff estimates he received.

Dr. King announced the day after the primary that his "suspicions" had aroused by results in some counties with Black Belt, an area of dark, rich soil and large Negro population. He said that his staff would file formal complaints with the Justice Department.

Mr. Gordon says the complaint from Wilcox County will charge among other things that the combined total of the votes Mr. Calhoun and Sheriff Jenkins received in their race "just don't add up."

The total vote in the sheriff's race comes to 6,198, or 127 fewer than the sum of the number of registered Negroes and the county's entire white, voting-age population as shown by the 1960 census. hisT amounts to a 98 per cent turnout.

The registration rolls in Wilcox list the names of 3,349 white voters and have not been purged in years of people who have died or moved away.

Mr. Gordon said that his organization would ask the Justice Department to "determine whether some of the people who voted in Wilcox are now official residents of other counties and states."

"For the vote to run as high as it did, we would have had to get almost all of the registered Negroes in the county out on Election Day, and we didn't come close," Mr. Gordon says. "We wish we had, but we didn't.

"A lot of Negroes were afraid to vote with all of those white people working in the polling places as election officials. They were afraid they might lose their jobs, or something."

Sheriff Jenkins says, however, it was a "real fair election and it went real smooth—there wasn't any trouble at all." And he supports his statement by pointing out that Justice Department spokesmen told newsmen that Wilcox had cooperated fully with Federal observers dispatched there under the Voting Rights Act.

"I would have got even more nigger votes," Sheriff Jenkins says, "if some of those civil rights workers hadn't gone way out in the country and told people that I'd drop out of the race and that they would be wasting their vote if they didn't vote for Calhoun."

Mr. Gordon denies this assertion and says instead that the primary points to "weaknesses" in the Voting Rights Act. It should have required Southern counties to purge their voting rolls and should have made provision for relatives and friends to hel pilliterates cast their ballots, he says.

Although Federal observers watched as local election officials marked ballots for a large number of Negroes who could not read, Mr. Gordon adds, some of the Negroes were afraid to call out the names of Negro candidates in the presence of whites.

Meanwhile, Mr. Gordon is consoling himself by saying that "we learned a lot about how to campaign this time, and next time it won't be so new to us and we'll win."

But Sheriff Jenkins, who at 66 is thinking of still more terms, believes his problems are over.

"This was something new to them [Negroes] and a lot of them voted," he says, "but next time of them won't bother."

Candidates, Parties Uneasily Yoked

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 14—Evidently the November election will begin with a summer storm and end with an autumn sale.

The Republicans are disputing the Democrats for the office of governor and a United States Senate seat, not to mention lesser offices at every level.

But for the phenomenon of Gov. George C. Wallace, the Republicans would expect to grind all and devour it. As it is, they start with their backs to the wall, for the final returns showed that Mrs. Wallace won 54 per cent of the vote — 480,841 to 407,977 for her nine opponents.

ALABAMA

THE CANDIDATES and the parties are unhappily and uneasily yoked. Gov. Wallace and Sen. John Sparkman are aligned only nominally as Democrats. Sparkman has clamped himself rigidly to the perch in their Democratic dovecote, but the Wallace coo is a growl.

Republican Congressman Jim Martin, who will oppose Wallace, and Atty. John Grenier, former executive director of the Republican National Committee, who seeks the nomination to oppose Sparkman, are wary of one another.

The national Republicans are uneasy over what the Alabama Republicans will say on race matters. The national Democrats see that Wallace may put the hellhacked state party back together, but only to run for President in 1968 on a third party ticket and melt the solder.

DEMOCRATIC officeholders of every rank are of a mind to heave together in the hope of blighting the Republican movement, hitherto a menace to all.

Republican officeholders, not least the four congressmen who seek re-election, are apprehensive over the effect if Wallace achieves another sweep in November.

The momentum of the state's Republican movement is subject to the Wallace peril. The paradox is that in 1964 Wallace made it certain that Alabama's electoral vote would be denied to President Johnson. And he aims to do it again in 1968.

The Republican nominating convention will not be held until July 29 and a lull in the combat might have been expected. But that assumption did not reckon with Wallace.

He telegraphed the two senators and the eight congressmen that he wanted them in his office at 2:30 p.m. Friday to discuss the effects of the new federal guidelines on Alabama's school system.

Talmadge Move Cheers Martin

By GROVER C. HALL JR.
Editor, The Montgomery Advertiser
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 21—Congressman Jim Martin, who expects to be the Republican candidate for governor, was stimulated and heartened over Sen. Talmadge's gubernatorial announcement.

ALABAMA

Picking up the phone in Washington, Martin called a newspaper supporter in Montgomery to alert him to the impending Talmadge announcement.

Martin felt that this development would fortify his theme that President Johnson feared the spread of the Republican contagion in the South and preferred the Wallaces to him.

MARTIN construed the Talmadge enterprise as an integral, Washington - blessed play to block that kick in the case of Congressman Howard Callaway. He argues that the President takes fright of the vision of a Republican South joining with those of other regions to carry the day for Richard M. Nixon.

A few minutes after this call, Gov. Wallace happened to ring the same newspaperman, who communicated the Talmadge tidings and its presumed relation to his race.

Wallace snorted and employed vivid, indecorous language to dissolve the notion that the President would prefer him to Republican Martin.

RECENTLY, Wallace addressed himself to the entire Alabama congressional delegation on this subject. He reminded Martin that in 1964 he withdrew as a candidate for President as a pro-Goldwater stroke and that Martin and other Republican leaders had gratefully called him "patriot," the telegrams being in his possession until this day.

It is widely understood in Alabama that Wallace means to run for President in a full-scale campaign effort in 1968.

MEANWHILE, John Grenier, of Birmingham, former Republican state chairman made a formal announcement that he sought the GOP nomination to oppose U.S. Senator John Sparkman.

"On May 3," Grenier said, "the voters of Alabama clearly called for the retirement of John Sparkman from the Senate. When a senator has been in Washington for 30 years and receives only 40 per cent of the total vote against three relatively unknown opponents; when he loses Alabama's largest urban area, Jefferson County, to those opponents by a margin of 60 per cent to 40 per cent; when he is defeated in the capital of our state by the same margin of 60 per cent to 40 per cent; when he barely carries Colbert County in Tennessee Valley — there can be no doubt manded a change."

Supreme Court Upholds Editorial on Election Day

WASHINGTON (AP) — The supreme Court ruled Monday that a state cannot make it a crime for a newspaper editor to publish an editorial on election day urging readers to vote a certain way.

Alabama thereby was barred from prosecuting James E. Mills of the Birmingham Post-Herald for a 1962 election-day editorial calling for abolition of the Alabama City's Commission form of government.

Justice Hugo L. Black said for the Supreme Court:

"Suppression of the right of the press to praise or criticize governmental agents and to clamor and contend for or against change, which is all that this editorial did, muzzles one of the very agencies the framers of our Constitution thoughtfully and deliberately selected to improve our society and keep it free."

ALL JUSTICES AGREE

All nine justices agreed Alabama's law could not be applied to Mills, although one justice, John M. Harlan, said the court should have delayed its decision until Mills was tried for the violation.

Harlan said if Mills were convicted he, too, would vote for reversal.

Rejecting "such a roundabout process" as a "completely unnecessary waste of time and energy," Black wrote:

"The Alabama Corrupt Practices Act by providing criminal penalties for publishing editorials such as the one here silences the press at a time when it can be most effective.

OPINION CONTINUES

"It is difficult to conceive of a more obvious and flagrant abridgement of the constitutionally guaranteed freedom of the press."

The court, which is expected to end its present term next month, announced several other significant decisions Monday.

Among them were:

1. A 7-1 ruling that the struck Florida East Coast Railway may make "reasonably necessary" changes in work conditions to keep its trains running, but the changes must be strictly limited and under supervision of a federal court in Jacksonville.

2. A unanimous decision permitting reinstatement of an indictment that charges comedian Ben Blue with evading more than $39,000 in income taxes for 1958 through 1960.

3. A 6-3 ruling that the government can move against the Standard Oil Co. for accidentally discharging 300 gallons of aviation gasoline into the St. Johns River from its Jacksonville terminal.

4. An unsigned order throwing out the federal obscenity conviction of a Nashville couple, William Hoyet Redmond and his wife, Dorothy Lucille Redmond, who took nude pictures of each other and later received prints of the films through the mail.

5. An unsigned order refusing to review the conviction of Joe Davis, a New York City phonograph dealer, on charges of mailing obscene records.

Clark expected to contest ballot

BN 5/26/66

BY HUGH MERRILL
News staff writer

SELMA, May 26 — Wilson Baker will officially be declared the Democratic nominee for sheriff of Dallas County, the Steering Committee of the Democratic Executive Committee said here Wednesday.

But the committee left the door open for "any interested party" to contest the results of the balloting. And Sheriff Jim Clark, Baker's opponent left little doubt about who the interested party will be.

The seven-man Steering Committee's unanimous agreement was merely an acknowledgement that it must accede to the Federal court's demands that it count the votes in all boxes, including the six which figured in the original vote count dispute.

But it doesn't mean that Baker is home free.

ATTORNEYS FOR Clark are expected to demand an examination of vote counting in all 80 Dallas County boxes within the next few days.

After a 45-minute meeting which committee chairman Alston Keith called "friendly," the group issued a statement saying the committee would certify Baker as the nominee "at an early date."

"THIS WILL BE done in full compliance with the decree of Judge Daniel H. Thomas, although we do not agree therewith and are acting under compulsion and duress," the statement, read by committee vice chairman Chris B. Heinz, former Selma mayor, said.

Heinz refused to answer further questions.

Even though Baker will be certified as the Democratic nominee, the committee carefully left the door open for a contest suit to be filed.

"THIS ACTION on the part of the court and the committee will in nowise detract from the right of any interested party to file a contest for the office of sheriff with the Dallas County Democratic Executive Committee," the statement said.

Dallas County Sheriff Jim Clark said he would contest the election on grounds of impropriety in all 80 boxes, rather than just the six ordered counted by federal court.

Lawyers for both Clark and Baker met briefly with the seven-man executive committee before the statement was issued.

Wednesday's meeting followed a decision a day earlier in which U. S. Dist. Judge Daniel H. Thomas ordered the executive committee to count the six contested boxes and declare Baker the winner without a runoff.

CLARK HAD previously filed suit contesting the entire election, but Tuesday's court order said a new contest suit must be filed after the results are certified.

Clark was unavailable for comment after the statement was issued by the committee.

Although there has been talk that Clark would run for sheriff as a Republican if he does not receive the Democratic nomination, a Democratic party official in Dallas County said Alabama law forbids him to become a candidate of another party.

Clark swore to a statement when he qualified as a Democrat saying he would support the nominee of the primary.

AND THE QUALIFYING date has passed for the sheriff to become an independent candidate. But Clark still insists his name will be on the ballot in November, "even if it's as a write-in candidate," he said.

There is also some expressed concern among the white community that a white Republican candidate running for sheriff against a white Democratic candidate might mean a victory for a Negro "Black Panther" candidate.

The Justice Department suit filed in the Selma sheriff's election was the first under the 1965 voting rights act.

One committee member said the official certification of the vote at the meeting expected next week would be little more than tallying the votes in the contested boxes and checking totals against totals found by the Justice Department.

Negro-Versus-White Races Highlight Run-Off Priority

By GENE ROBERTS
Special to The New York Times

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 31 —Voters turned out in heavy numbers today in 16 counties in which Negroes opposed whites for public office, but they showed little interest in Alabama's other Democratic primary run-off races.

By late afternoon, some Negro and white election workers were predicting that today's vote in the state's predominantly Negro and agricultural Black Belt would approach the record number of ballots cast in the initial primary on May 3.

Almost all white voters in the Black Belt were expected to vote against Negro candidates. Civil rights organizations fought back by bringing Negro voters to the polls in car pools.

It was a crucial election for Alabama, where the races have been aligned against each other in the long struggle over civil rights.

First Election Effort

By transferring their struggle from the picket line to the ballot box, civil rights organizations were hoping to put Negroes into such offices as sheriff, state legislator and tax collector for the first time since Reconstruction.

Segregationists, meanwhile, had urged whites to vote en masse to preserve white dominance in state and local government.

In all, 26 Negroes—eight candidates for the Legislature and 18 for county offices—were seeking Democratic nominations. Twenty-three of them were survivors from the first primary in which 54 Negro candidates had sought a voice in county government and the Legislature.

Two others, candidates for county commissioner in Bullock County, 30 miles from Montgomery, were put into the primary by a Federal court decision that said the county had discriminated against Negro voters by extending the terms of its white commissioners.

Federal Observers on Hand

As voters went to the polls under sunny skies, Federal voting observers watched in six counties to ensure that election officials accepted and tabulated Negro votes without discrimination.

Albert Turner, Alabama director of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s Southern Christian Leadership Conference, who is a candidate for the Legislature, said he had asked the Justice Department to pay especial attention to the absentee votes cast in today's election. He said whites had applied for absentee ballots in "unusually high numbers" in several counties.

Mr. Turner and other Negro candidates also contended that the Justice Department had not sent enough voting observers.

New Negro registrations under the Voting Rights Act of 1965 had given Negroes a voting majority in at least five Black Belt counties and two legislative districts in which members of their race are running against whites. But in the face of a unified white electorate, Negroes can win only if members of their race vote more solidly for them than they did four weeks ago.

In that primary, some Negroes voted for white candidates and, thus, prevented Negro candidates from getting enough votes to win nominations without a run-off.

Later, a survey of Negro voters showed that some voted for white candidates in return for past favors, while others had feared that the election of Negro officials might touch off a wave of economic retaliation and intimidation by white segregationists.

Irregularities Charged

Civil rights organizations in Greene County near the Mississippi state line also charged in a suit filed in Federal Court last week that election irregularities had caused the defeat of a Negro candidate for sheriff and forced candidates for tax collector and the Board of Education into a run-off with white opponents.

Civil rights workers contend, too, that many semiliterate Negroes were confused by the long list of names on the ballot earlier this month and could not complete the ballot within the three-minute time limit imposed by some election officials. In contrast, today's ballots were short.

To help prepare "poor readers" for today's election and to work for a bloc vote, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference converted 50 civil rights volunteers into election workers.

The workers pointed out repeatedly that only one of the state's counties, Macon, had Negro officials.

In Macon, the home of Tuskegee Institute and the county with the heaviest Negro population (84 per cent) in the United States, Negro voters desegregated the county commission and Board of Education two years ago, but have yet to elect a full-time public official.

Macon County, Ala., Whites Dismayed by Victory of Negro in Sheriff Race

By GENE ROBERTS
Special to The New York Times

TUSKEGEE, Ala., June 1—Macon County's white minority was dismayed today over the Democratic primary victory of a Negro candidate for sheriff.

There was vague talk of violence, of moving from the county, of depending on the all-white state highway patrol for protection, and of simply learning to adjust to the situation in peace.

But all agreed that yesterday's victory by Lucius D. Amerson, a 32-year-old former postal employe, was the most startling development yet in the Negroes' long drive for racial equality in Alabama.

In a county where the Democratic nomination is tantamount to victory, Mr. Amerson seems assured of becoming the first Negro sheriff in the state since Reconstruction. The office has broad powers and will give him authority to arrest and question whites and even to intervene in their domestic quarrels if one of the parties swears out a warrant.

Negroes were confident that in the end the whites would come to accept the idea of a Negro sheriff, but some thought that there would be a temporary setback in race relations.

School Setback Feared

"I'm worried that some whites will take their children out of the integrated public schools and put them in the private white schools here," said a Negro professor at Tuskegee Institute, a predominantly Negro college here. "Many whites just returned to the public schools this year and this could cause them to leave again."

Others thought that Mr. Amerson's defeat of the incumbent Sheriff Harvey Sadler, who had appointed a Negro deputy, would discourage white moderates in the county.

Most Negroes, however, cheered the victory in the belief that a Negro sheriff would afford maximum protection for their race as it presses for still greater gains in the area of civil rights.

Two aging men, one white and one Negro, seemed to voice the prevailing mood of their races as they talked on street corners under a warm June sun.

The white man was a 63-year-old county road worker, Robert Carr, who stroked a chin that was red and freckled from the sun.

"I don't like it," he said, "but there ain't nothing I can do about it."

Handyman Is Quoted

James Smith, a Negro handyman who thought he was "somewhere around 70 years old or better" tugged at his overall galluses and said he thought that he would "feel a lot easier" dealing with a Negro sheriff than he would with a white law enforcement officer.

Yesterday's primary results came as a surprise to the county's white minority because it marked a sudden change in the "go slow" policy followed by Negroes since they became a voting majority in the county two years ago after a long series of court battles.

In an election in 1964, the Tuskegee Civic Association for Negroes and its political affiliate, the Macon Democratic Club, sought to reassure the county's whites by trying only to desegregate, rather than to control, city and local government in a county that with 84 per cent has the highest Negro population ratio of any county in the United States.

Before yesterday's election, Negroes had put members of their race into only two out of five City Council seats in Tuskegee, one out of four elective positions on the Macon County Commission, and two out of five seats on the county school board. Yesterday, they nominated another Negro to the County Commission and a Negro as tax collector. In the initial primary on May 3, they won control of the Democratic County Executive Committee.

Races in 16 Counties

In 15 other counties where a total of 23 Negroes were running for State Legislature and county offices in yesterday's runoff Democratic primary, all but one went down in defeat. The one victory was for the Board of Education in Greene, a predominantly Negro county near the Mississippi state line.

What made Macon County Negroes decide to abandon their go-slow policy? Although opinion was divided, several Negro politicians, including Mr. Amerson, thought one major factor was the commanding victory of Mrs. Lurlene Wallace, wife of the state segregationist Gov. George C. Wallace, Democratic gubernatorial primary May 3.

"Negroes thought the whites were changing, and that they weren't as segregationist as they used to be, but they found out differently in the May 3 election," Mr. Amerson said. "In the local election here, Negroes helped elect a white woman to the school board, but most of the whites voted for Mrs. Wallace and for other segregationists right down the line."

In the first primary, Mr. Amerson failed to win a majority of the votes and as a result had been pessimistic about his chances in yesterday's runoff.

"I never thought it would happen," he said today. "I had all the whites against me and a lot of Negroes, too."

One leading Negro who opposed him was the Rev. K. L. Buford, a City Councilman in Tuskegee and vice president of the Tuskegee Civil Association, whose leaders were divided over whether to support a Negro for sheriff. Mr. Buford believed that Mr. Amerson's victory would be interpreted as a "kick in the teeth" by white moderates."

Lucius Davenport Amerson

Special to The New York Times

TUSKEGEE, Ala., June 1—Lucius Davenport Amerson's ambition did not sound unreasonable. He wanted to be a policeman.

But Mr. Amerson is a Negro, and in his home state of Alabama, enforcement of the law has always been the prerogative of white men. The state's largest city, Birmingham, hired its first Negro policeman only this spring. The state police has no Negro troopers and no Negro investigators. Very few Alabama towns have Negro policemen.

Man in the News

In spite of that, Mr. Amerson prepared himself. At two different periods in his life he felt the ambition so strongly that he went to night school to study police methods.

Then, when the chance came to run for sheriff of Macon County, he grabbed it—and won in yesterday's runoff primary.

Great Aspirations

Like the ram charging the dam in the song, "High Hopes," he professes to see nothing remarkable in having aspired to an office that no Negro had held in Alabama since Reconstruction.

Nevertheless, his first, inadvertent comment on his historic victory was, "I never thought it would happen."

Mr. Amerson was born Oct. 7, 1933, on a small farm in Greene County, the son of Henry and Lue Vinnie Amerson. Greene is near the Mississippi state line in a part of the South where thousands of Negroes have grown up, worked out their lives and died without ever having heard of Horatio Alger and the great American dream.

As a youth, he discovered the dream through the Army. He went into the Army at 17 and the Army took him far from Greene County—to Germany, to Korea, where he fought and won a soldier's medals.

He left the Army after 8½ years, then worked for the post office, first at Montgomery, Ala. and later at Denver. Last year, he worked in food service at the Veterans Administration Hospital at Tuskegee.

Mr. Amerson studied electronics at Tuskegee Institute and moved his wife and two young sons into an apartment at Simmons Gardens, which is, as he points out, not a public housing project but a regular apartment complex.

He dismounted today from a new Pontiac—one of two cars in his family—and stepped onto a busy sidewalk to accept the congratulations of Negro passersby. As he stood in his gray sharkskin suit, wearing a Masonic ring with a tremendous setting, he was approached by an old Negro in overalls who told him he was happy he had won.

"I never thought it would happen."

(Mr. Amerson after winning nomination for sheriff of Macon County.)

"If it hadn't been for you and people like you "I wouldn't have made it," Mr. Amerson replied. "Anytime I can help you, just call me up. It was the everyday masses of people—some of them very poor—that voted for me."

Not Quite Accepted

Mr. Amerson, a serious, quiet-mannered, stocky man, has lived in Tuskeegee 10 years and is still not accepted by some Negroes.

"There are three or four levels in this town," he said. "There is the Ph.D. circle, and the Ph.D.'s run around with each other."

The circles continue downward to include the Negro working people. He did not have to add that his own position is somewhere in the middle.

Already worried about his image, he was considerably upset to learn that white courthouse officials were saying that he had been arrested and had spent a night in jail last December for beating his 25-year-old wife, Windora. He contends the charge is false.

Macon County, Ala., Whites Dismayed by Victory of Negro in Sheriff Race

By GENE ROBERTS

Special to The New York Times

TUSKEGEE, Ala., June 1—Macon County's white minority was dismayed today over the Democratic primary victory of a Negro candidate for sheriff.

There was vague talk of violence, of moving from the county, of depending on the all-white state highway patrol for protection, and of simply learning to adjust to the situation in peace.

But all agreed that yesterday's victory by Lucius D. Amerson, a 32-year-old former postal employe, was the most startling development yet in the Negroes' long drive for racial equality in Alabama.

In a county where the Democratic nomination is tantamount to victory, Mr. Amerson seems assured of becoming the first Negro sheriff in the state since Reconstruction. The office has broad powers and will give him authority to arrest and question whites and even to intervene in their domestic quarrels if one of the parties swears out a warrant.

Negroes were confident that in the end the whites would come to accept the idea of a Negro sheriff, but some thought that there would be a temporary setback in race relations.

School Setback Feared

"I'm worried that some whites will take their children out of the integrated public schools and put them in the private white school here," said a Negro professor at Tuskegee Institute, a predominantly Negro college here. "Many whites just returned to the public schools this year and this could cause them to leave again."

Others thought that Mr. Amerson's defeat of the incumbent Sheriff Harvey Sadler, who had appointed a Negro deputy, would discourage white moderates in the county.

Most Negroes, however, cheered the victory in the belief that a Negro sheriff would afford maximum protection for their race as it presses for still greater gains in the area of civil rights.

Two aging men, one white and one Negro, seemed to voice the prevailing mood of their races as they talked on street corners under a warm June sun.

WASHINGTON, June 2 — Eight states are going to forfeit millions of dollars in anti-poverty funds unless they submit acceptable community action projects quickly.

As matters stand now, Alabama will forfeit the largest amount. It is the only Southern state that will probably not receive even the minimum sum due it. The forfeiture strikes hardest at the state's poorest counties.

The other states on the list are Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Nebraska, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

The end of the Federal fiscal year is four weeks away. The books will be closed on June 30 and money from the old appropriation not distributed by then will stay in the United States treasury. This leaves little time to process applications for grants unless they arrive in perfect order.

Total of Grants Flexible

There is no way to calculate exactly how much a state can get, or how much it forfeits for not acting aggressively. A distribution formula assigns specific amounts to each state, but these are minimums. If states do not claim their minimum the money is redistributed among the other states. In addition, the director of the Office of Economic Opportunity has about $100-million to distribute at his discretion.

As a result, the District of Columbia, for example, has received five times its minimum allotment. Before the fiscal year was half over, the city had filed applications for its mimimum allotment. It continued to file acceptable applications.

New York State may get nearly twice its minimum allotment provided New York City comes in before the deadline with an acceptable group of project applications.

The minimum allotments are based on three considerations: average income, unemployment, and public relief payments. The counties are the basic units used for these calculations.

Alabama's share of the community action funds available (not counting the director's discretionary fund) was calculated as 3.15 per cent, which is about $11.7-million. As of May 20, when the most recent calculation was made, Alabama had received $4.8-million.

Alabama Won't Get All

The approval of pending applications will raise that figure before June 30, but according to authoratitive estimates Alabama will fall $1.4-million short of its minimum allotment.

Other shortage estimates are: Idaho, $659,000; Indiana, $457,000; Iowa, $694,000; Maine, $406,000; Nebraska, $809,000; Wisconsin, $432,000; Wyoming, $193,000.

These are estimates, not final figures. They can change under the pressures generated by publication of the estimates. Governors may storm at the Office of Economic Opportunity as Gov. John B. Connally Jr. did last January when similar data showed Texas lagging. Pressures may be brought to force approval of substandard applications and the antipoverty agency will be criticized.

For these reasons, the O.E.O. staff is reluctant to make these estimates available and note that they can change from day to day.

Texas apparently is going to get its minimum allotment plus about $2-million. Some states will get more than that, proportionately, above their minimums. These include: California, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Kentucky, Michigan, Mississippi, and New Jersey.

Negro 'Bloc' Vote Proves Ineffective

6/5/66

By GROVER C. HALL JR.
Editor, The Montgomery Advertiser
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 4—Negro candidates and white candidates considered beneficiaries of the Negro bloc vote fared poorly in the Democratic runoff.

ALABAMA

A handful of Negro candidates was nominated in county races, but generally they were defeated even in the counties where there was a Negro majority.

In district and state races, a history of having received the Negro vote proved a fatal blight.

The potency of Gov. George C. Wallace was further witnessed in the destruction of two state senators who had filibustered against legislation to permit gubernatorial succession.

FOURTEEN senators filibustered against succession and, either because they did not run for reelection or were defeated, are all out of office.

In all of this campaigning in two primaries, the word "segregation" and its associates were never heard. But while the words were muted, it was business as usual.

Negro candidates fared best in Macon County, where Negroes have a two-to-one majority and wherein Tuskegee Institute is located. Lucius D. Amerson, 32, defeated Sheriff Harvey Sadler.

A Negro funeral home operator, L. A. Locklair, won nomination for Macon tax collector and Harold W. Webb unseated an incumbent white to win a seat on the Macon Board of Revenue.

HOWEVER, Negroes were in 22 races and they were generally defeated either because Negroes didn't vote or gave part of their votes to whites.

Perhaps the most remarkable victory of a white candidate was that of State Sen. Roland Cooper of Wilcox. In a district composed of Wilcox, Clarke, Monroe and Conecuh, Cooper defeated his Negro opponent 12,747 to 2,616.

Cooper is a bristling Wallace partisan and fully a symbol of a county that until this year had not a single Negro voter, but he plainly ran quite well among his Negro constituents.

In the race for state treasurer, Mrs. Agnes Baggett, a 61-year-old widow, overcame a deficit of 52,000 votes to defeat Mrs. Bettye Frink, hitherto an invincible winner. Mrs. Frink was credited with the Negro boxes in the first primary.

Wallace Begins Campaign For 1968 Presidential Effort

ALABAMA

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 18 — With this year's November general election to go, Gov. George C. Wallace began his 1968 campaign for president of the United States.

This occurred as most of the candidates defeated by Mrs. Wallace in one shot in the May primary said they would support the Democratic ticket in November. But characteristically their words were pale and pinched.

TICKETS were on sale in Baton Rouge, La., for a $25-a-plate fund-raising dinner for Gov. Wallace. He will address the dinner meeting after a speech to a joint session of the Louisiana Legislature June 22.

In response to the invitation by legislative resolution, Mrs. Wallace, the Democratic standard bearer in the governor's race, will accompany Wallace and speak briefly ahead of him.

Wallace's chief sponsor in Louisiana is Leander H. Perez. It was his resolution, adopted by the state's Democratic committee, 54-39, that established a preferential primary for Wallace and President Johnson.

In the primary, Louisianans will vote on whether Wallace or Johnson is to run in 1968 under the sign of rooster, the traditional Democratic party emblem.

THAT UNDOUBTEDLY MEANS that Wallace will campaign in Louisiana, as in other states. At the moment, he has no doubt that Mrs. Wallace will achieve another landslide victory in November over Jim Martin, the Republican congressman.

Wallace's conception of the 1968 presidential race is more daring and his ardor for combat in the national arena more intense than is generally comprehended outside of Alabama, and even within.

Atty. Gen. Richmond Flowers, a lost-ball second in the May primary, has so far declined to say that he will or won't support the Democratic ticket headed by Mrs. Wallace in November.

Flowers has always billed himself as an undeviating Democrat, but he won't even discuss his November voting directly. Reporters are referred to his press officer.

Former Gov. James E. (Big Jim) Folsom said: "Why, hell yes, I'll vote Democratic . . . I'll campaign for the ticket, too."

Most of the others have said or indicated they would swing into line, though they have said it grudgingly.

Rights Leader Named A Poverty War Director

AC 7/15/66

By DON McKEE
Associated Press Writer

An official of a civil rights organization has been named staff director of a $302,081 federal anti-poverty program in Wilcox County, Ala.

"This is probably the first time such funds have been made available where a civil rights organization was involved from a strictly educational standpoint," said Dr. Robert Green of Atlanta, who will be staff director of the project.

Green, 32, is education director for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), the civil rights organization headed by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Green is on leave from Michigan State University, where he is an associate professor of education.

The Wilcox grant and a $241,604 grant for a Lowndes County, Alabama, project have been approved by the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) in Washington, the OEO said Wednesday.

The grant to the Anti-poverty Coordinating Committee of Wilcox County was approved for an adult education program for 900 seasonal farm workers and an educational program for 300 children at day-care centers, OEO said.

The other grant was approved for the Lowndes County Christian Movement for Human Rights for a basic education program for 500 heads of households. This program will train season farm workers in the basic skills of reading, writing and arithmetic, OEO said.

Green, who took a leading role in the recent Mississippi civil rights march, said in an interview that both the recipient organizations were SCLC-related "in the sense that we have been working closely with them."

Probably part of his salary will now be paid from the federal grant, Green said, but no other SCLC employe or officer will be paid from the OEF funds.

"I'm on a private foundation grant," Green said. "Probably part of my salary will be paid by the education grant. But probably no one else on the SCLC staff will be paid out of this fund."

Green said efforts are under way to find a staff director for the Lowndes County program. He said his selection for the Wilcox post resulted from SCLC's work in organizing the programs and getting federal approval.

An SCLC staff member, Miss Mew Soong-Li, was very active in organizing the programs and spearheading the efforts in Washington, he said. "Here at SCLC, we jointly drafted the proposals," he said.

"But the local people had a tremendous hand in pulling the proposals together," Green said.

Poll Indicates Wallace Victory

By GROVER C. HALL JR.
Editor, The Montgomery Advertiser
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., July 16—The other shoe was dropped in the case of a general election poll and Congressman Jim Martin, Republican candidate for governor, reacted as though it had fallen on his toe.

John Grenier, GOP candidate against U.S. Sen. John J. Sparkman rejoiced in the thud.

For some time it was known that Republican leaders had ordered a professional poll to determine, among other things, the chances of Martin against Mrs. Lurleen Wallace, the Democratic nominee who won in one shot in May.

A capital city newspaper then published a partial revelation of the poll's finding. The poll, the paper said, showed that Mrs. Wallace had 56 per cent of the vote, which is about what she had when she vanquished nine male candidates in the primary.

The poll gave Martin 24 per cent, leaving 20 per cent undecided. The presumption is that undecideds divide in much the same proportion as the decideds.

The poll gave Sen. Sparkman 45 per cent and Grenier 24 per cent, with 31 per cent undecided. Grenier professed to be very pleased over this as he has yet to make himself and the issues pervasively known.

ALABAMA

Martin reacted swiftly to the poll revelation, saying:

"I don't believe it. I think that the race is much closer than the poll reveals."

He added that his own organization had made some polls and they registered dissimilar results, but he declined to disclose what they did say.

Grenier said for the record that he doubted the poll's 56 per cent finding for Mrs. Wallace, but chiefly his eyes were for the Senate element of the poll. Grenier's Birmingham headquarters released a statement from him:

"I know nothing of the accuracy of the poll mentioned in The Montgomery Advertiser. However, if it is correct, it must have been taken at least a month ago before my campaign had really begun and before I had been exposed to the voters. If this is true, I am encouraged by the results shown."

Wallace Accuses Poverty Aides Of Financing Black Power Drive

ALABAMA 7/20/66

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Gov. George Wallace accused federal poverty officials Tuesday of financing the "Black Power" movement. He said a convicted Negro killer is helping run the poverty program in one Alabama county.

Wallace told newsmen that Robert Strickland, who was recently assigned to direct the poverty program in adjoining Lowndes County, was convicted of first degree murder in Birmingham 25 years ago and sentenced to life in prison.

The Negro was paroled five years later, the governor said at a news conference, and in 1957 was given a pardon which restored his citizenship. Records show that pardon was granted because of good conduct.

PART OF PANTHERS

Strickland was not available for comment.

Wallace charged that the Lowndes County Christian Movement for Human Rights Inc., which was designated by the federal government to receive a $241,000 poverty grant in Lowndes County, is an "adjunct of the Black Panther party," a pro-civil rights faction which is running Negro candidates for office in Lowndes.

The governor said further that the leaders of the Black Panther party are the ones who took an active part in organizing the Christian movement. He distributed copies of a letter from four civil rights leaders recommending the movement as the agency to handle the poverty program.

CITES CARMICHAEL

Wallace said Stokely Carmichael, the new national chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee and an advocate of "Black Power," was active in setting up both in the Black Panther party and the Christian movement. And the chairman of the movement, John Hulett, was identified by the governor as a man who "is or was" president of the Black Panther group. Hulett was not available for comment, nor was Carmichael.

Wallace Charges Halt Poverty Cash

WASHINGTON (AP)—The head of the federal antipoverty program said Wednesday he has suspended more than $500,000 in grants to aid seasonal farm workers and migrants in Lowndes and Wilcox counties in Alabama pending an investigation of charges made by Gov. George C. Wallace.

Wallace charged at a news conference that the grant in Lowndes, made to Lowndes County Christian Movement for Human Rights, Inc., amounted to federal financing of the "Black Panther" political movement. He made no reference to Wilcox County at a news conference.

SHRIVER STATEMENT

Sargent Shriver, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity, said in a statement replying to a query from Gov. Wallace:

"In response to his telegram, I have ordered an investigation and report on all the allegations and objections contained therein.

"No funds have as yet been disbursed under these grants and I have asked that all disbursements be held up, pending completion of the investigation and submission of the report."

On June 28, the OEO signed grants allocating $241,604 to Lowndes County and $302,081 to Wilcox.

In his statement, Shriver said "To the best of our knowledge" the grants would not finance the "Black Panther" party.

FORMED YEAR AGO

"Both Lowndes and Wilcox organizations who have applied for these grants were organized more than a year ago, before the so-called Black Panther party came into existence," he said. "They are both nonprofit organizations, chartered under laws of Alabama to provide assistance for poor and needy families.

"I feel that it is unfortunate that Gov. Wallace has equated this self-help and training program with social and political movements he dislikes.

"OEO has regulations restricting political activities by any recipients of OEO money. Gov. Wallace can rest assured that these regulations will be enforced."

Alabama Areas Face Loss Of Aid Over Black Power

AC 7/23/66

By ED ROGERS

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Office of Economic Opportunity will refuse to finance a rural job-training program in Alabama if it proves to be a front for a "black power" organization, a spokesman said Friday.

Poverty program director Sargent Shriver this week halted disbursement of a $241,604 grant to the Lowndes County Christian Movement for Human Rights, Inc., after Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace charged the group was an agent of the militant Black Panther party.

Shriver also held up a $302,081 grant to the Antipoverty Coordinating Committee of the Wilcox County Southern Christian Leadership Conference in a nearby south Alabama area.

JUDGE ASKS DELAY

Probate Judge Bill Dannelly, chairman of the Wilcox County Commission, had wired Shriver last week urging the program be delayed "until it can be properly administered."

A spokesman said an investigator arrived Thursday to learn whether Wallace was correct in saying the Lowndes grant would be "financing the revolutionary black power movement in this country."

The investigation was extended to Wilcox although Dannelly did not mention black power in his telegram. The so-called Black Panther party was founded in the area.

A spokesman indicated the Office of Economic Opportunity which administers President Johnson's antipoverty program is aware of possible ticklish aspects of the case.

"I think it will be awfully difficult to pin down," the spokesman told United Press International. "Political affiliation is a matter of conscience."

NO PARTY FUNDING

"We would not fund a political party. But I suppose the Constitution provides for the right of people to be embued in a movement so long as it does not interfere with the regulations of the funding.

"There is no question that this adds to the problem of determining how the grant is going to be used."

Kenneth Vallis, program analyst for the migrant division of Community Action programs, said his office had received no prior hint that the proposed grants might be challenged.

Local government officials of both counties have encountered delays in setting up Community Action programs which could qualify to handle antipoverty projects, he said.

Meanwhile he said Negro farm workers are being forced from their seasonal farm work by acreage reductions and other factors and need training for jobs in new industries in the areaa.

Wilcox and Lowndes counties, both rated as 100 per cent rural because they have no cities of 5,000 population, are also said to be among the poorest in the state and in the nation.

Polls Show Party Lags for Senate and Governor

By GENE ROBERTS

Special to The New York Times

MONTGOMERY, Ala., July 29—Alabama Republicans, who only six months ago were favored to take control of the state, opened their nominating convention today in a new political climate that makes them underdogs in the November election.

Their own polls show that Mrs. George C. Wallace, the Democratic candidate and wife of the state's present Governor, is far ahead of United States Representative James Martin, who is expected to get the Republican nomination tomorrow without opposition.

The polls also show that John Grenier, who is almost certain to get the party's Senatorial nomination, is trailing United States Senator John J. Sparkman, the Demrocatic incumbent, with many of the state's voters still undecided.

To add to the Republican's frustration, their polls show that Representative Martin, an avowed segregationist and conservative, would be leading Senator Sparkman if he were in the Senate race.

Might Split Party

Representative Martin could not switch to the Senate race at this late date, however, without alienating Mr. Grenier's followers and thus splitting the party.

The current political confusion was set in motion late last year when Republicans were confident that Governor Wallace, an arden segregaionist, would run for the Senate.

Mr. Grenier, former state chairman and a top aide to Barry Goldwater in the 1964 Presidential campaign, felt that a Republican had an excellent chance to succeed Governor Wallace in the State House and let it be known he wanted to be the party's gubernatorial nominee.

Initially, there was little opposition to his proposal, but after a few weeks Representative Martin decided that he, too, wanted the Republican nomination.

Mr. Grenier, according to some of his supporters, then bowed out of the race after a behind-the-scenes struggle, and after receiving assurances that he could have the Senatorial nomination if he wanted it.

Caught by Surprise

After the agreement between Mr. Martin and Mr. Grenier had been reached, Governor Wallace caught both men by surprise by entering his wife in the Democratic gubernatorial primary as his "stand-in" candidate.

A provision in the state constitution prevented the Governor, a popular segregationist in this deep Southern state, from running to succeed himself.

Then, in the May primary, Mrs. Wallace rolled up more votes than her nine opponents combined, while Senator Sparkman was scoring a politically unimpressive victory over three relatively unknown opponents.

After studying the election returns, Mr. Grenier announced for the Senate race, leaving Representative Martin to face the politically powerful Wallace team.

Since Representative Martin had already announced for the Governor's race, he could not easily withdraw unless the Republican convention were to draft him for the Senate.

Delegates Reminded

This is a possibility that Mr. Grenier's supporters have been trying to head off. They reminded delegates that the party could not very well expect Mr. Grenier to defer twice in succession to Mr. Martin.

There is still some possibility of a floor fight over Mr. Grenier's nomination, although it appears certain, and today Mr. Grenier was busily greeting convention delegates with campaign literature showing that he intends to wage an aggressive campaign against Senator Sparkman.

In his militantly conservative literature, Mr. Grenier disassociates himself from the Liberal wing of the Republican party by declaring that Senator Sparkman is "more liberal" than Senator Jacob Javits, the New York Republican.

He also charged that Senator Sparkman is a "rubber stamp" for President Johnson and "occupies the same political ground as Wayne Morse and Bobby and Teddy Kennedy."

Representative Martin, however, was left without a major issue. Although Mr. Martin opposes racial integration, "creeping federalism" and the Johnson Administration, Governor Wallace has built his political reputation on exactly the same points.

Meanwhile, Alabama Democrats are confident that they will not only stop the Republican upsurge in Alabama, but will roll back some of the gains that the G.O.P. made during the Goldwater landslide in Alabama in 1964.

Negro Group's Suit Seeks U.S. Court Injunction

8/10/66

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9 — Some of the poorest people in the land—Negro sharecroppers and small-farm owners in Alabama—took the United States Government to court today.

Local farm elections — easily translatable into Federal dollars — are dominated by whites, who exploit ignorance and fear and, where necessary, use bribery, fraud, and violence, they complained in Federal Court here in seeking an injunction to bar an election scheduled for next week.

Peter Agee opened the testimony with his account of the approach of a white man who said:

"I'll give you 10 acres of the best farming land and show you how to get free loans if you get out and put some of those scared Negroes in."

Mr. Agee was running for a seat on the committee that administers local programs of the United States Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

Disburses Funds

Funds disbursed by the service "are so large that county government operations are dwarfed," the complainants say.

The committees decide such questions as the eligibility of farmers, the adjustment and program benefits between landlords and tenant farmers or sharecroppers, the appeals of farmers whose crop allotments have been cut, the setting of procedures for elections and the hiring of staff.

The Nergo framers and sharecroppers are supported in their suit by the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee.

They want the court to bar a Lowndes County election Aug. 16, and all other Alabama Conservation Service elections until the Department of Agriculture has informed and explained to these Negroes their rights and protects them in the exercise of these rights.

The suit is directed specifically at the Secretary of Agriculture, Orville L. Freeman; the administrator of the service, Horace Godfrey, and the state executive director of the service, B. L. Collins.

Gil Zimmerman, Assistant United States Attorney, representing the Government, argued that there were no differences in the goals of the plaintiffs and of Mr. Freeman, who "has sent his major advisers down there."

Mr. Zimmerman also questioned the court's authority to act in an administrative matter unless it was shown that the Secretary had been arbitrary and capricious and had abused his discretion.

Judge Howard F. Corcoran is hearing the action in district court. He served in the legal section of the Department of Agriculture in 1933 and 1934.

Wallace Asking Anti-Guideline Fund

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI) — Gov. George Wallace said Sunday he plans to ask the legislature to pass a bill which will give extra state money to public schools whose federal assistance is cut off for failure to comply with desegregation guidelines.

The governor said he hoped the measure would be ready for introduction when the legislature resumes its special session Tuesday.

Wallace conferred with numerous lawmakers last Thursday and Friday about the proposal and reports from some were that it would give him broad new powers, including, perhaps, the authority to take away state funds from school boards which complied with the federal guidelines.

Wallace said he decided to disclose the contents of the bill to correct the "misinformation."

"The proposal that will be offered to the legislature will declare in its preamble that it is the lgislature's determination that the integration guidelines drafted by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare are illegal in that they go beyond the law," the governor said.

"The preamble will further declare that the guidelines are null and void in this state.

"The bill itself will simply state that any school board which has federal funds withheld for refusing to sign these illegal guidelines will be appropriated a like amount of state funds from the surplus in the special education trust fund.

"We have reached a sad state of affairs in this country when we must agree to do something illegal to get money that is rightfully ours," Wallace said.

The governor denied reports the bill would withhold state funds from school districts which signed compliance forms, give him the sole authority to enter into agreements with federal authorities or abolish local school boards that abided by the guidelines.

A bill to replace lost federal money with state funds was seen as a move to encourage local educators to join the governor's fight.

EDUCATORS SCORE WALLACE'S PLAN

8/20/66

Key Alabama Groups Attack His Fight on Guidelines

Special to The New York Times

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 19—Gov. George C. Wallace's proposal to circumvent the desegregation guidelines of the United States Office of Education ran into unexpectedly stiff opposition of Alabama educators today.

Dr. Robert L. Saunders, president of the influential 23,000-member Alabama Education Assocition, which represents virtually all of the white teachers in the state, said his organization would fight the Governor's plan with all its resources.

Representatives of the state's two major colleges, the University of Alabama and Auburn University, joined in criticizing the Governor's proposal to appropriate additional state funds to make up for any loss of Federal revenue by the local schools' refusal to comply with the guidelines.

In his speech to the Legislature last night, the Governor also asked the lawmakers to declare the guidelines "null and void" in Alabama and to allow the Governor to take over the duties of local school boards in dealing with Federal agencies. boards.

Alabama schools are receiving about $38-million a year in Federal funds. The Governor said the state could make up this deficit without raising school taxes.

Never before in his three-and-a-half years as Governor has Mr. Wallace encountered such united opposition from the education community. Besides the education association and the universities, four other professional education organizations took a stand against the pending legislation.

Wallace Surprised

State Senator Ed Horton said he conferred with the Governor this morning and got the impression that the educators' opposition came as a complete surprise. "I think it hit him right between the eyes," said Senator Horton.

The A.E.A. president, Dr. Saunders, said the proposed legislation would usurp the authority of local boards and would not accomplish its goal of delaying desegregation. Also, he said, replacing Federal funds with state funds in effect costs double because the state money could be used to match Federal funds instead.

Dr. Jefferson Bennett, speaking for the University of Alabama, said, "The guidelines are either lawful or legal or they are not. Courts will have to decide. This bill won't change anything at all."

Dr. George Howard, executive secretary of the Alabama Association of School Boards, said, "Our educational program in Alabama has never had the frills — just the bread and butter. Here we had the opportunity to do for our children what others have had for years. This bill would do away with past improvements and preclude future ones."

Other education groups opposing the Governor's bill were the Alabama Association of School Administrators, the Alabama Association of Secondary Principals, and the Alabana Division of Classroom Teachers.

In the State Legislature, 80 of the 140 lawmakers have endorsed the Governor's proposal. Hearings on the plan will start next week.

Governor Wallace had no immediate coment today on the educators' opposition, but State Senator James S. Clark denounced the A.E.A. statement.

"It appears," he said, "that there are some school administrators and college presidents who are willing to sell out our children for a price. How many of this group has come out in trying to protect the people of Alabama and our children from the tyranny of those Federal guidelines?"

U. S. Vows Fund Cutoff

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19 (UPI) — The Department of Health, Education and Welfare will start proceedings to cut off funds for any Alabama school system that refuses to comply with desegregation guidelines, a spokesman said today.

Derrick Bell, Deputy Special Assistant Secretary in charge of civil rights, said the proposal of Gov. George C. Wallace would make things more difficult for systems that seek to comply.

"To date, 67 of 94 school districts in Alabama have given assurances that they will comply with the guidelines and others have indicated they will provide such assurances," Mr. Bell said.

"The department will continue to use the guidelines. If school districts fail to comply with provision of the Civil Rights Act as detailed in the guidelines the United States Office of Education would have no alternative but to initiate foenforcement procedures to terminate Federal financial assistance."

Mr. Bell added that Mr. Wallace's request to the Alabama legislature calling on defiance of the guidelines would "make more difficult the good faith efforts being made by Alabama school districts" that are seeking to comply with the guidelines.

Mr. Bell said Alabama schools during the fiscal year 1966 ending last June 30 were eligible for more than $41-million in Federal aid and similar amounts would be available for the current year.

Wallace Seeking New Confrontation

8/21/66

By RAY JENKINS
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 20—Gov. George C. Wallace set the stage this week for a massive new confrontation with the federal government over school desegregation.

The governor maintains his newest move is designed to rescue the local school systems from domination by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare desegregation guidelines.

But his critics say he is opening the door for the federal court to clamp a single desegregation order on all schools in the state and, thereby, bypass filing of individual suits against each system.

GOV. WALLACE'S call to battle came Thursday night in a speech to a joint session of the state legislature which was telecast statewide. He asked the legislature for a bill which would:

1. Declare "null and void" the guidelines for desegregation as laid down by the U.S. Office of Education and to invalidate any compliances already signed by local school boards.

2. Appropriate funds to reimburse school districts which lose federal funds by refusing to comply with the guidelines.

3. Give local boards the option to transfer to the governor and a state commission their right to enter into agreements with the Office of Education. The state commission would be composed of the entire membership of the state legislature.

THIS LATTER provision, the governor believes, would place the governor and the legislature between local school boards and the federal government in event of any desegregation guidelines.

Before he proposed the legislation, the governor held lengthy private conferences with his leading legislative enemies to get their assurance they will not fight the bill with filibusters. He is said to have gained this assurance.

But a number of legislators have expressed private fears that such an assertion of state control over local school boards would pave the way for a one-shot federal court injunction covering all state schools. A court order, they point out, could be a strait - jacket in contrast to the guidelines, which are but bureaucratic edicts. For proof, they point to a decision on desegregation of Mobile schools, handed down this week by Chief Judge Elbert Tuttle which stated emphatically that the guidelines are the minimum requirements the court will accept on the pace of desegregation.

Gov. Wallace's sudden new offensive may have been encouraged in part by claims of a victory in the fight against the guidelines by congressman Jim Martin, Republican candidate for governor against Mrs. Wallace. Martin claims he helped write a provision into the pending civil rights bill in Congress which would nullify the guidelines.

Martin Opens Campaign Today For Governorship of Alabama

G.O.P. Leader Is Confident That Goldwater Following Will Carry Him to Office

By MARTIN WALDRON

Special to The New York Times

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Aug. 25—Representative James D. Martin, Alabam's No. 1 Republican, will open his campaign for the Governorship tomorrow, confident that a lingering Barry Goldwater following in the state will enable him to defeat the Democratic candidate, Mrs. George C. Wallace Jr., wife of the Governor.

Mr. Martin, a freshman Congressman, and John E. Grenier, Republican candidate for Senate, have agreed to undertake identical campaigns patterned after Mr. Goldwater's Presidential race in 1964, when the G.O.P. standard-bearer got 70 per cent of the vote.

Mr. Goldwater has agreed to stump Alabama for Mr. Martin and Mr. Grenier during the week prior to the election on Nov. 3.

"We believe Alabama is still Goldwater country," said a campaign assistant to Mr. Grenier.

Mr. Grenier, who was executive director of the National Republican party in 1964, began his campaign against Senator John J. Sparkman on Aug. 8 in a ceremony at Fredonia, Ala., chosen for this purpose because Senator Goldwater ended his Presidential race at Fredonia, Ariz. "We picked up the torch," said Mr. Grenier.

Statewide Coverage

Mr. Martin's campaign will begin with a full poiltical production at the fairgrounds in Birmingham. It will be televised on a statewide network and on stations in Chattanooga, Tenn. and Columbus, Ga., which cover parts of Alabama.

Mr. Martin, who has been touring the state for two weeks, is scheduled to arrive at the fairgrounds rally by helicopter. There he will mount a horse and gallop to the speaker's platform where Mrs. Martin, a former Miss Alabama, will sing several love songs to the crowd.

Although Mr. Martin has proved to be one of the most popular Republicans in Alabama's history, most political experts in the state believe that Mr. Grenier has a better chance of winning in November.

"We know we have a tough job," said Ralph H. Marlatt, one of Mr. Martin's Congressional aides, who added:

"A woman candidate is always difficult to run against, especially in the South. You cannot slug it out toe to toe."

For this reason, most of the attacks will be against Governor Wallace, who proposed his wife to succeed him after he lost a legislative battle to repeal a state constitutional section that prohibits Alabama Governors from succeeding themselves.

Although Governor Wallace has been a frequent outspoken critic of President Johnson, Mr. Martin and Mr. Grenier said they would try to link the two men together because both are Democrats.

The New York Times

James D. Martin

The Republican candidates have already decided to label Senator Sparkman a "me too echo" of President Johnson.

The Governor and Mrs. Wallace and Senator Sparkman have not combined their campaigns.

Campaign headquarters for Mr. Martin and Mr. Grenier was a scene of confidence this week.

"The philosophy in this state has not changed' said Mr. Marlatt. "It stands for what Goldwater stood for."

"The people down here in Alabama plain don't like Lyndon Johnson," said R. J. Bennett Jr., campaign manager for Mr. Grenier.

Although segregation is still the paramount political issue in Alabama, the Republican candidates said they did not intend to bring up the race issue during their campaign.

Mr. Bennett said that Mr. Grenier would deliver speeches attacking "civil disobedience, riots in the streets, and anarchy" and a speech supporting the rights of private property.

Inflation, rising prices, and President Johnson's handling of the Vietnam war have also figured in pre-campaign strategy, even in the Governor's race.

Mr. Marlatt said that Governor Wallace could not escape the fact that he is a Democrat and that the Vietnam war policy was made by the head of his party.

"And the people of Alabama want to see this war brought to a successful conclusion, and not handled in the current wishy-washy fashion," Mr. Marlatt said.

By defeating Mrs. Wallace in November, the Republicans hope to forestall Governor Wallace's ambition to run for President on a third party ticket in 1968.

A third candidate for the governorship is Dr. Carl R. Robinson, a lawyer and physician, who is running as an independent and speaks of himself as a loyal Democrat. Dr. Robinson does not have an extensive campaign organization and political experts in Alabama do not give him any chance of winning.

SENATE IN ALABAMA PASSES SCHOOL BILL

~~Alabama~~

Special to The New York Times

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 31—The Alabama Senate approved tonight Gov. George C. Wallace's plan to prohibit the state's public schools from desegregating voluntarily under agreements with the Federal Government.

The vote was 28 to 7. The House, which had approved an earlier version of the legislation, is expected to pass the Senate bill on Friday.

Under the bill, Alabama would spurn more than $30-million in Federal aid, which voluntary desegregation of the public schools could have brought to the state. About $25-million of this had been allocated to help needy students, most of them Negroes.

The Wallace plan also would give the Governor almost unlimited power to take over the public schools if he found there was a threat to "the peace and order."

Governor Wallace drafted the legislation as 64 of the state's 106 school districts prepared to integrate students and teachers this fall. Twelve of these districts are under Federal Court orders to integrate and apparently will not be affected by the state legislation.

Wallace Signs Law Defying U.S. on Desegregation

9/3/66

Special to The New York Times

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 2—Gov. George C. Wallace signed today a bill that declares "null and void" the desegregation guidelines of the United States Office of Education and prohibits Alabama schools from signing any statements of compliance with the guidelines.

The Governor was so certain of passage of the bill he had requested that he called a news conference for the signing of the measure even before it had been approved by the House of Representatives, 70 to 16. The Senate approved the bill Wednesday, 25 to 7.

Many opponents of Mr. Wallace in the Legislature supported it.

Aside from nullifying the guidelines, the act allows local school boards to transfer to the Governor and a 160-member state commission their authority to negotiate with the Office of Education on desegregation.

Strategy Meeting Called

Shortly after passage, the Governor appointed the 141 members of the Legislature to the commission and called a meeting to map strategy. He said he would appoint 19 other members later.

At the meeting, Mr. Wallace was named chairman of the commission and Lieut. Gov. James B. Allen vice chairman. Twelve of Mr. Wallace's strongest supporters in the Legislature were chosen as a subcommittee to act for the commission because the legislature will not be constantly in session.

The new law also provides for the state to replace, in part, any funds that might be lost by the refusal of local school districts to sign forms of compliance with the guidelines.

The state's education leaders contend, however, that the act will replace only about 10 per cent of the estimated total of $40-million that Alabama schools are supposed to receive from Federal sources.

The state's education leaders contend, however, that the act will replace only about 10 per cent of the estimated total of $40-million that Alabama schools are supposed to receive from Federal sources.

The United States Commissioner of Education, Harold Howe 2d, indicated this week that Alabama school districts that proceeded with desegregation under the guidelines would continue to receive Federal revenues regardless of the state law. About half the state's 118 school districts have signed the compliance forms.

Governor Wallace conceded that the law carried no penalty for those systems that chose to carry out desegregation, but he said the school boards "are supposed to obey the law and I believe they will obey the law."

'Veil of Secrecy'

The Governor said that the law "rips away the veil of secrecy from the web of intrigue, bribery and blackmail by which the Health, Education and Welfare Bureau has invaded and destroyed the local autonomy of our schools."

He said the new law "stops the requirement of percentage quotas and prevents the busing of little children away from their neighborhood schools."

He said the guidelines were "trifling with the safety and security of your children and mine."

Representative James D. Martin, a Republican who is running against Mr. Wallace's wife, Lurleen, for Governor, called the new law "the strategy of massive defeat." He said it opened the door to a single Federal Court desegregation order that would cover all state schools.

But Mr. Wallace contended that no Federal Court order could go any further than the guidelines in requiring desegregation and said he would prefer to take his chances with a local Federal judge than "a bureaucrat 1,000 miles away."

As the bill was being enacted, Alabama schools were preparing to open with a greater amount of desegregation than ever before. Even so, less than 3 per cent of the state's estimated total of 250,000 Negro pupils were expected to enroll in previously all-white schools.

The Governor is said to believe that the new legislation will not result in the loss of any Federal funds but will pave the way for a court test of the guidelines. He contends that these ground rules for desegregation go beyond the intent of Congress in the Civil Rights Act of 1965, on which the guidelines are based.

While the Legislature was considering the Governor's proposal to circumvent the guidelines, Chief Judge Elbert P. Tuttle of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit issued a ruling in a Mobile school desegregation suit that emphasized that the guidelines were "the minimum standards" the Federal courts would accept in desegregation.

Presidential Aims Hinted by Wallace

ALABAMA

AC 9/4/66

By WARREN M. ATCHISON

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Gov. George Wallace said Monday that if the two major political parties "don't give us somebody to vote for" he may run for president in 1968.

Wallace, removing his coat for his speech before a crowd of about 500 at a Labor Day barbecue, said that he withdrew from the 1964 presidential race "to help conservatism."

However, Wallace said "if we get in the '68 race it won't be me doing the withdrawing."

Wallace said both parties have been "coming out with" statements that he could hurt their chances in the next presidential race if he decides to run. "I don't care if they do get hurt if they won't give us somebody to vote for," he said.

NO DIFFERENCE

Wallace said there was no difference between the Democrats and Republicans.

"You can put Lyndon Johnson, Hubert Humphrey and Robert Kennedy in a sack with Nelson Rockefeller, George Romney and Earl Warren, shake it up, and it wouldn't make any difference who you pulled out," he said.

The governor also took a shot at Republicans for the recent visits of House Minority Leader Gerald Ford and former Vice President Richard Nixon to the state.

Wallace said his wife, the Democratic nominee for governor, "doesn't need anybody to speak for her—she can speak for herself or I'll speak for her."

DEFENDS SCHOOL BILL

Wallace covered a variety of topics and defended his newly passed anti-guidelines bill that declares all school desegregation guidelines null and void in Alabama.

He said the guidelines, issued by the Health, Education and Welfare Department, were designed to "take over our children and destroy the neighborhood school."

"They (the federal government) may run over us and take over our children but they're not going to do it in the secret of the night," Wallace said. "If we make them come out in the open maybe it will wake some people up."

NAACP Slates Suit to Attack Alabama's Antiguidelines Law

ALABAMA

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP)—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said Thursday that it will file a suit attacking Gov. George Wallace's new school antiguidelines law.

The announcement came from Dr. John Nixon, president of the Birmingham chapter of the civil rights organization.

Nixon said an announcement of the nature of the legal attack will be made Friday by Robert Carter, general counsel of the NAACP and lecturer at New York University School of Law.

The Alabama Legislature passed the antiguidelines law last week.

The law declares illegal the school desegregation guidelines set forth by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare and nullifies all agreements made by local school districts with the department to comply with them.

Failure to follow the guidelines could result in loss of federal aid to the Alabama schools. The total could approach $40 million, although U.S. Education Commissioner Harold Howe II has said he will try to keep the federal money flowing to those Alabama local systems which disregard the state law and abide by the guidelines.

The Wallace law provides for reimbursement of part of the federal money with state funds, but these are estimated to total onyl about $3 million—less than one tenth of the potential loss.

Martin, Wallace Exchange Attacks

By GROVER C. HALL JR.
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 10—The punching and counterpunching between Gov. George C. Wallace, husband of the Democratic nominee for governor, and Republican Congressman Jim Martin became more vigorous.

Martin attacked Wallace frontally, but Wallace replied indirectly and in the posture of a candidate for President.

Wallace spoke to throngs and received ovations. Martin did not.

At this point, it is possible that there is not an established railbird in Alabama that thinks Martin has a chance to defeat Mrs. Lurleen Wallace.

The Republican candidate for U.S. senator, young John Grenier of Birmingham, was hacking away at Senator John Sparkman and doing splendid work in organization, but there were no surface signs that, to borrow a phrase, the bees were getting off Sparkman and settling on him.

Martin stuck to the theme that Wallace, however hostile Wallace might be to the Johnson Administration, was nevertheless an element of the national Democratic apparatus.

Martin then blamed the Johnson Administration, and Wallace by extension, for cost of living increases and the "riots and demonstrations in our cities."

ALABAMA

He taxed Wallace with signing a Democratic loyalty oath, then added:

"Jim Martin will not sign a loyalty oath to any party."

He said the Wallace administration had borrowed $250 million in the past three years without permitting the people to vote on it. And he contended that the bonds carried excessive interest rates which he said went to New York bankers when it could have been used in behalf of Alabamians.

Wallace said he wasn't committed to run for president, but that he was prepared to:

"I'm against Lyndon Baines Johnson, but I'm against Richard Milhous Nixon, too. Both national parties are worried about the movement we have started in Alabama. Let them worry. We want to hurt both of them. If they don't want us to hurt them, let them give us someone we can vote for."

Alabama Suit Filed By NAACP

AC 9/13/66

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asked a federal judge Monday for a temporary injunction to bar enforcement of the school guidelines law of Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama.

The suit also wants a three-judege federal panel to rule on constitutionality of the law.

The suit comes only three days after Wallace threatened to use state police power to back up the law.

At least two Alabama school systems — Tuscaloosa and Lauderdale counties — have integrated their faculties. Niether is under a federal court order.

The law under attack was signed Sept. 2. It sets up a 160-member governor's commission, empowered to act for school boards which refused to abide by the 1966 integration guidelines issued by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Wallace appointed the commission which in turn named him chairman. Included are all members of the legislature, although two said they were resigning.

The law declares null and void the federal integration outline which requires integration of faculty as well as students.

Wallace Doubts U.S. Jail Power

ALABAMA
AC 9/24/66

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Gov. George Wallace, facing possible contempt proceedings, challenged the power of the federal courts Friday to jail a governor for "his political and social beliefs."

Wallace declined to say what course he might take if a three-judge court holds him in contempt for violation of a two-year-old order against interference in school desegregation.

CALLED HYPOTHETICAL

That, he told reporters at a news conference, "is a hypothetical question."

He said a motion filed Thursday by attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asking for a contempt citation is "another step toward the eventual jailing of political prisoners in this country."

If federal judges "who are not elected by the people can assume the power of jailing a governor who is elected by the people," Wallace said in a prepared statement, they then in effect "invalidate the people's vote and their right of self-government."

TIME OF FEAR

And, he continued, if the courts can send a governor to jail "because of his political and social beliefs, then the time has come when the people must begin to fear the knock on the door in the darkness of the night."

The court has set no date for a hearing on the NAACP motion which asked for a civil contempt citation against the governor or, in the alternative, total statewide school integration.

Judges Veto Citation for Wallace

ALABAMA

AC 10/1/66

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Three federal judges refused Friday to order Gov. George Wallace to show cause why he should not be cited for contempt of court for alleged interference with school desegregation in Alabama.

A ruling the other way could have sent Wallace to jail.

The judges' ruling, filed in U.S. district court here, came in response to a motion filed by attorneys for the legal defense fund of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The NAACP attorneys filed the motion shortly after the state legislature, at Wallace's bidding, passed a law declaring federal school desegregation guidelines illegal. The law nullified compliance with the guidelines by local school boards.

The NAACP sought to have the governor cited as being in violation of a 1964 injunction, stemming from a Macon County school suit.

The original suit enjoined Wallace from interfering with school desegregation in his capacity as ex-officio chairman of the State Board of Education.

The Macon County suit was filed after the governor sent state troopers to the county when its schools were desegregated under a court order in 1963.

The judges Friday set a hearing for Nov. 30 on an alternate request that the court order immediate desegregation of all Alabama public schools.

WALLACE PLEDGES TO FIGHT PRESIDENT

Alabama

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 30 (AP)—Gov. George C. Wallace, campaigning for his wife, says people across the nation have turned sour on both major political parties.

Mr. Wallace promised thousands of followers last night that he would "keep on fighting Lyndon B. Johnson" and do it "in the states where it counts."

The speech was the formal start of Mrs. Lurleen Wallace's race for Governor. It brought loud and frequent rebel yells from a crowd estimated by police Capt. George Wall at from 8,000 to 10,000.

Hundreds unable to get into the City Auditorium got a glimpse of the Governor and his wife when they spoke briefly outside after the rally.

Mr. Wallace, who is reportedly considering heading a third-party ticket in the Presidential race in 1968, divided his criticism between President Johnson and former Vice President Richard M. Nixon. He said that "more people than ever before" were listening to him now when he deplored the trends toward centralized government prevalent in the nation.

Mr. Wallace pointed to Lester G. Maddox's victory in the Democratic gubernatorial runoff primary in Georgia this week as evidence that the states' rights movement was gaining momentum "day by day, hour by hour, across these United States."

The Governor made no mention of Mrs. Wallace's Republican opponent, Representative James D. Martin.

U.S. Panel Denies Plea to Cite Wallace Over School Case

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 30 (AP)—Three Federal judges refused today to order Gov. George C. Wallace to show cause why he should not be cited for contempt of court for alleged interference with school desegregation in Alabama.

The judges' ruling, filed in United States District Court here, came in response to a motion filed by lawyers for the N.A.A.C.P. Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc.

Clark Portrayed As Red Target In Disorders

Sheriff James G. Clark was portrayed last night at a "Write In Clark" for sheriff rally as a "principal target of the Communist conspiracy" during Selma's civil rights disorders in 1965.

Main speaker for the free barbecue feed was Rev. Ferrell Griswold of Birmingham, who said the only defense against Communist enslavement is to be "a determined people, proud of our Southern heritage without any apology to offer that we were born white".

During the meeting, Bill England, a Browns service station owner, and one of the organizers of the event, presented Sheriff Clark a citation for his "dedication, devotion to duty . . . and vision" in handling Selma's racial disorders about 18 months ago.

Occupying the speakers' stand with the sheriff, his wife and five children were Sen. W. C. Givhan, Judge James A. Hare, Judge Hugh Mallory, Lee Calame, chairman of the Dallas County Citizens' Council; Carl McQueen, president of the state Citizens' Council, Rev. C. O. Rhodes of Selma, and Mrs. John A. Fuller, Selma.

Former Mayor Chris Heinz of Selma emceed the program and said Clark "fought, bled and nearly died" to preserve the heritage of Dallas County's white citizens.

While he was mayor, Heinz said, he turned law enforcement over to Sheriff Clark during racial disturbances "because I knew the sheriff was a more powerful officer of the law than my chief of police was, and I was willing to abide by that."

While he was mayor, Heinz said, he turned law enforcement over to Sheriff Clark during racial disturbances "because I knew the sheriff was a more powerful officer of the law than my chief of police was, and I was willing to abide by that."

Heinz was defeated in his bid for re-election and was not in office when Selma experienced its major racial demonstrations. At that time, the Democratic nominee for Sheriff, Wilson Baker, was Selma Public Safety Director, under Mayor Joe Smitherman and the city did not surrender its police authority to county law enforcement.

Baker defeated Clark in the Democratic primary but Clark is attempting an unprecedented comeback via the write-in ballot.

Rev. Griswold, a Baptist and member of the American Opionion Speakers' Bureau asked the audience estimated at 800-1,000 persons:

"Why should you be embarrassed that you are white and that Jim Clark is a white man?"

The speaker warned his listeners that "we are in a life or death conflict as free people with the most well organized, criminal conspiracy the world has ever faced—communism." He said the movement is being led by intellectual liberals "working for social good."

"The main program of the Communist conspiracy is quote 'civil rights' unquote," he said.

But before the Communists can destroy this country, Rev. Griswold outlined, they must wipe out county government because it is the closest to the people, and, as such, most important. This, he explained was where Sheriff Clark "as a symbol of resistance," came into the forefront.

"He became a target that had to be destroyed," Rev. Griswold said in a warning that "the situation is more alarming than you or I care to admit."

Sheriff P. C. Jenkins of Wilcox County and Sheriff Taylor Wlkins of Baldwin County spoke briefly on Sheriff Clark's contributions to the Alabama Sheriff's Boys' Ranch and his humanitarian role in a record flood here several years ago. Mrs. Fuller also made brief comments of gratitude on behalf of local women.

"Never" buttons were passed out at the doorway.

Representatives of both the KKK and the National States Rights were in evidence at the meeting.

The Changing Times In Lowndes County: An All-Negro Ticket

ALABAMA 10/31/66

By JOHN CORRY

Special to The New York Times

HAYNEVILLE, Ala., Oct. 27 — There are seven candidates from the Lowndes County Freedom Organization in the election on Nov. 8. They are Negroes and their symbol is a toothy, crouching black panther. They probably will not win the county offices they seek, but it may not matter. What matters is that they are running.

Lowndes County is a place of long roads and empty spaces, where the mist rises from the scrub oaks before it is dark. Country stores lit by unshaded light bulbs sell things like grits and chimneys for kerosene lamps, and roadhouses cater to men in cowboy hats, who drink beer and swear a lot while they listen to country music.

The county is also a place of cotton and cattle and hand-hewn fenceposts, of elegant old homes and decrepit shacks. The flavor is passionately Southern, and there are whites and Negroes who would not live anywhere else.

Last night, John Hulett, the chairman of the Lowndes County Freedom Organization, stood on a red clay road and said that his party, which whites call the "panthers," would change things in Lowndes County.

Stokely Carmichael, who helped to organize the freedom organization, said in Atlanta last summer in a panel discussion of "black power" that "if you use the power to tax in Lowndes County, you can get some good schools and good roads."

Mr. Carmichael, chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, went on to say that "you have to control the government before you can get the right to tax the folks."

The fight, he said, is to "get black people the things they should have."

"And then they can decide," he said, "if they want to accept the white people in Lowndes County who've brutalized them, lo, these many, many years."

Mr. Hulett did not say precisely what would happen if his candidates won, but he said they would deal fairly with both whites and Negroes.

Mr. Hulett is a dark, friendly man who speaks very rapidly. He was born in Lowndes County, as were his parents, and he lives by a sandy road in a flimsy white house without a telephone.

He said no members of the student committee were members of the executive committee of the freedom organization, and that the organization officials and candidates were all Lowndes County Negroes.

He also said the organization had given Negroes a sense of participation in important things, and that the Alabama Democratic party, at least now, was hostile to Negro interests.

He said he thought his candidates could win, and that his chief problem on Election Day would be to get Negroes to the polls.

According to the census of 1960, there were 15,417 persons in the county, and 81 per cent of them were Negroes. Not one had ever voted in the county, and before this year only six were registered.

Now, 2,681 Negroes are registered, virtually all of them under the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Also, 2,519 whites are registered, although the list of white voters has not been purged of absentees, and the true figure is somewhat less.

Lowndes County had not intruded itself much in the news until March 25, 1965, when Mrs. Viola Gregg Liuzzo, a white civil rights worker from Detroit, was slain there after the "Freedom March" from Selma to Montgomery. Three Klansmen from Birmingham were charged with the murder and subsequently freed by Lowndes County juries.

The following August, Thomas L. Coleman, an occasional sheriff's deputy here, killed Johnathan Daniels, a white seminary student from New Hampshire, and wounded the Rev. Richard Morrisroe, a white Roman Catholic priest from Chicago.

Mr. Coleman said he had fired at the civil rights workers in self-defense. The charges against him were dismissed.

Temperament Held Changed

In the cool stone courthouse yesterday, Mac Champion, the county clerk, said that the "good Negroes in the county would help to elect the white ticket." He also complained that the newspapers had said that "we're all hoodlums here." Then he resumed his domino game with Mr. Coleman.

Upstairs, M. E. Marlette Jr. said the temperament had changed in Lowndes County and that whites were ready to accept a certain amount of integration.

Mr. Marlette, who was once a Presbyterian missionary in the Congo, now works for the County Board of Education. He said the panthers had caused no panic among whites, and that Negro schoolteachers had told him they would not vote for them.

A few miles away, a white politician, who declined to be identified, agreed with Mr. Champion and said that the "good niggers" opposed the panthers. He said whites were not concerned about the election. Indeed, he said, they did not even bother to "cover" meetings of the freedom organization any more.

The politician, who once led a group of whites armed with wrenches and tire irons in an assault on some young civil rights workers, said he still had no use for rights workers, but that he knew times were changing in Lowndes County.

The whites, he said, will now accept a "little integration."

The politician, however, seemed distrustful of Mr. Hulett. He said he had told "the Negro school in Lowndes County, to tell Mr. Hulett to meet with him, and that Mr. Hulett had never apepared.

Mr. Hulett, he said, is unlike most Lowndes County Negroes.

"My maid," he said, "chased the civil rights workers away from her house with a butcher knife. I asked her why she didn't take a shotgun to them, and she said she was sure she knew how to use the butcher knife, but that she just didn't know about the shotgun."

The politician declined to produce his maid, but he laughed a throaty laugh and said many Negroes in Lowndes County felt exactly as his maid did.

There are, in fact, Negroes who do oppose the freedom organization. A Negro property owner, who said he had known Mr. Hulett all his life, said he had no use for the panthers and even less for the young workers from the student committee who visited Mr. Hulett.

Once, he asserted, he threw Mr. Carmichael off his property. Then he said:

"The Snick workers will leave after the election, and the rest of us will have to stay. Now, I don't believe in going the third-party route. It's a foolish thing to do, and the people that John Hulett has running are unqualified anyway."

Another Negro, an old and dignified man who referred to the freedom organization as the "Christian movement," said he would vote for Mr. Hulett's candidates. But of the young people in the student committee, he said, "They're too fresh."

In May, Mr. Carmichael asked Lowndes County Negroes not to vote in the regular primary election. He said that if they did, Alabama law would rule out their participation in the freedom organization primary.

Nevertheless, Richmond Md. Flowers, the Alabama Attorney General, received 613 votes in the Democratic primary, and political observers say that virtually all of them were from Negroes.

Furthermore, only 813 Negroes voted in the primary for the freedom organization, while Mrs. George C. Wallace received 1,443 votes in the Democratic primary for Governor. Presumably, these votes were all from whites.

The freedom organization is seeking the offices of sheriff, coroner, tax assessor, tax collector and three seats on the board of education. The election is being watched by those in the South who see in it a hint of Reconstruction days, and advocates of black power who believe it is the most important election in the country.

Sidney Logan, the candidate for sheriff, said he had not thought much about what things would be like in Lowndes if the freedom organization won.

If he won, he said, his policy would be "honest, fair law enforcement" and he would try to appoint white deputies. Just a little self-consciously, he said:

"There are some good whites, you know."

WALLACE'S DRIVE STIRS G.O.P. FEARS

3d Party Plans for '68 May Hurt Them in Alabama Now

Special to The New York Times

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 4—What the Goldwater Presidential campaign gave to the Republicans of Alabama, the Wallace Presidential campaign is threatening to take away.

The G.O.P. picked up five seats in Congress in this state on the coattails of Senator Barry M. Goldwater in 1964, thanks to straight ticket Republican voting that gave the conservative Arizonan 70 per cent of the Alabama vote.

Now, Gov. George C. Wallace is running his wife Lurleen, for governor and preparing his Presidential campaign for 1968, and the possibility of a straight-ticket Wallace vote has the Republicans worried. They are likely to lose two of their Congressional seats and could lose all five.

Mr. Wallace's budding Presidential movement has caught fire in Alabama. The best response from his large audiences comes when he alludes to his plans for taking a third-party movement to other parts of the nation in 1968.

Five - hundred persons at Albertville last night burst into applause when he told them that "the Alabama movement" was having such effect already that the Mayor of Waukegan, Ill., now sounded like the Mayor of Albertville on the civil rights issue.

The style of his Presidential campaign is becoming clear.

"I'm no ultra-conservative," Mr. Wallace said over a hamburger steak before the rally at Albertville. "Those ultra-conservatives are conservative about just one thing—money."

Adopts Sharp Tone

At the rally, he sharpened his combative tone and said of the two national parties:

"It's the working man in this country that's got 'em all shook up. It's the working man that's going to change this country."

He said a group of top Republicans had met recently at the Chase Manhattan Bank in New York City to plot how to stop the Wallace movement and keep it from hurting the G.O.P.

"We're going to set the Chase Manhattan Bank back on its heels next Tuesday and teach it to keep its money and its mouth out of politics down here," he shouted, and the crowd, which sported business suits as well as blue jeans, laughed and clapped.

Mr. Wallace's enormous popularity is expected to sweep his wife into office by a large majority over her Republican opponent, United States Representative James D. Martin. The Governor is barred by the state constitution from succeeding himself.

Mr. Martin's leaving Congress to run for governor cost the Republicans one of their five seats, and Wayman Sherrer, the G.O.P. nominee to succeed him, is expected to lose to a Democrat, State Representative Tom Bevill.

A second Republican Congressman, Representative Glenn Andrews of Anniston, is in such difficulty that perhaps only a collapse of the Wallace bandwagon could save him. Mr. Andrews is being challenged by State Senator Bill Nichols of Sylacauga, a personal friend and legislative floor leader of Governor Wallace. The Governor has let it be known widely that he wants Mr. Nichols elected.

The other three Republican incumbents are somewhat stronger and are believed to be slightly leading their Democratic challengers.

Representative John Buchannan Jr., represents the Sixth District, comprising Metropolitan Birmingham, a stronghold of Goldwater Republicanism and the John Birch Society. He is opposed by State Representative Walter Emmett Perry Jr. Mr. Buchannan is popular in Birminham. He is a member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities and a member of the national advisory board of the Young Americans for Freedom, a conservative group.

Representative Jack Edwards is being opposed by Judge Warren L. Finch, an ultra-conservative Democrat, for the First District seat of which the port of Mobile is the heart.

Representative William Dickinson of Montgomery is being challenged by Robert F. Whaley, a salesman. Mr. Dickinson endeared himself to the white majority of the Second District by charging that the participants in the Selma-to-Montgomery rights march last year had engaged in drinking bouts and sexual orgies.

Governor Wallace has not spent much time campaigning for the Democratic candidates, but he has permitted them to stand on the speaker's platform with him while he reads a list of "good Democratic candidates who are supporting my wife's candidacy."

No Help for Sparkman

Senator John J. Sparkman is one Democratic candidate who has had no help from Governor Wallace, except that accruing from being on the same party list with the magic name.

It is common knowledge in Alabama that Governor Wallace has no use for Senator Sparkman. The Senator has voted conservatively in the last year or two, but prior to that he was considered a firm national Democrat on all except civil rights measures. He ran for vice president with the late Adlai E. Stevenson in 1952.

Senator Sparkman's Republican opponent, John Grenier, a New Orleans-born lawyer now living in Birmingham, is trying to widen the breach between Senator Sparkman and Governor Wallace. Mr. Grenier has begun to emphasize what he calls "the deep differences" between the two Democrats.

Mr. Grenier was executive director of the Republican National Committee during the Goldwater Presidential campaign. Despite his friendship with the Republican hero, he is the underdog in the race against Senator Sparkman.

One effect of Mr. Grenier's snuggling close to Governor Wallace has been to widen a division in his own party between himself, as its chief organizer, and Mr. Martin, its best vote-getter.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 9—Not even Ronald Reagan is safely enough conservative to make it unnecessary for Gov. George C. Wallace to run for President.

"He used to be a liberal," Mr. Wallace said when asked about the Reoublican Governor-elect of California. "Now he's a conservative, and he might change back again."

Governor Wallace and his wife, Lurleen, held a news conference at the Governor's Mansion here to discuss the implications of her stunning victory yesterday. She defeated United States Representative James D. Martin, her Republican opponent for Governor, by polling more than 63 per cent of the vote. She ran as her husband's stand-in. The State Constitution prohibits his succeeding himself.

She Thanks The Voters

Dressed in a knit, off-white suit, the 40-year-old blonde briefly thanked the voters, then sat silently while the news conference turned to the newsmen's dominant interest—the prospect that her husband, as her "dollar-a-year assistant," will tour the country seeking the Presidency on a third party platform while she and her advisers run the Governor's office.

During the news conference Mr. Wallace repeated his intention of running for President in 1968 if neither major party nominates a candidate suitable to him.

"I don't have any burning ambition to be President," Mr. Wallace said in an unusually benign tone. "My only interest is the restoration of local government."

But if neither major party provides "a clear choice," he said, "then we'll be in that race."

Senator Richard B. Russell, the conservative Democrat of Georgia, who was re-elected yesterday, was the only person he could think of who would meet his standards as a Presidential candidate.

Mr. Wallace asserted, as he had many times before, that he was not a racist.

Asked if he would accept the support of the Ku Klux Klan in his Presidential effort, he said, "I would accept the support of anyone who advocates states rights and strong local government. But anyone who advocates violence can look for a candidate somewhere else."

Mr. Wallace has frequently urged a continuation of segregation, but he contends that segregation does not reflect on one's "race, color or creed."

Mrs. Wallace received perhaps as many as one-third of the Negro votes yesterday. The others divided between Mr. Martin and an independent candidate, Dr. Carl Ray Robinson, who described himself as the only "real Democrat" in the race.

Mrs. Wallace was particularly strong in the Negro communities of Montgomery and other sections of south Alabama. Hugh Sparrow, a political writer for The Birmingham News, reported "a noticeable increase in Negro employment on Capitol Hill" in Montgomery recently.

Lauded on Education

Some Negro leaders, while decrying Mr. Wallace's racial policies, have spoken well of his liberal record in spending for education.

The Wallace triumph helped the entire Democratic ticket in Alabama. Senator John J. Sparkman was elected to a fourth term over John Grenier, a Birmingham lawyer who served as executive director of the Republican National Committee during Barry Goldwater' 1964 Presidential campaign. Senator Sparkman got more than 60 per cent of the vote, thanks to his own popularity as well as to the Wallace landslide.

The Democrats regained two of the five Congressional seats that they lost to Republicans when Senator Goldwater polled 70 per cent of the state's Presidential vote in 1964.

His Write-In Drive Fails—Wilson Baker Elected

SELMA, Ala., Nov. 9—Sheriff James G. Clark Jr., the controversial figure in the Selma civil rights demonstrations last year, was defeated yesterday in his bid to retain his post by write-in votes.

Elected sheriff of Dallas County was J. Wilson Baker, a former director of public safety, who received 7,249 votes to 6,742 for Mr. Clark. The defeated sheriff, who had been in office for eight years, and Mr. Baker had been at odds over a series of mass arrests that occurred during the Selma demonstrations in 1965. Mr. Baker took the stand that peaceful demonstrations should be permitted.

The two men had previously met in the Democratic primary race and Mr. Baker was the winner. Observers here said that the Negro vote, which has increased greatly since the demonstrations, was a major factor in bringing about Mr. Clark's defeat.

Seven Negro candidates running in neighboring Lowndes County on the Lowndes County Freedom County Organization ticket were defeated in their attempts to win posts ranging from sheriff to coroner and members of the school board.

The candidates, running under the emblem of a black panther, had opposed regular Democratic candidates and lost by margins that ran from 200 to 600 votes.

During the pre-election campaign, Stokely Carmichael, head of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, visited the county to urge election of the Negro slate.

Political observers contended that as many as 300 Negroes voted for the white candidates running on the Democratic ticket.

In Macon County, Lucius Amerson, a Negro who had won the Democratic primary against the incumbent, Sheriff Harvey Sadler, repeated his victory over Mr. Sadler, who was a write-in candidate.

Tuskegee Students Riot Over Acquittal In Negro's Slaying

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Dec. 9—Young Negroes smashed windows, looted a liquor store and painted a Confederate statue black today in protest over the acquittal of a white man accused of fatally shooting one of their fellow students.

About 700 Tuskegee Institute students rioted for three hours before dawn and then marched back to their campus.

The institute's president, Dr. L. H. Foster, said their action was "a very sad thing" and told them "mobs cannot be tolerated."

The Negroes were unhappy over the acquittal of Marvin Segrest, 68 years old, who had been accused of second-degree murder in the slaying of Samuel Younge Jr., 22, last Jan. 3.

Mr. Segrest's trial was held in Opelika, about 40 miles northeast of here in Lee County, because he contended he could not receive a fair trial in this Macon County city.

An all-white jury deliberated an hour and 15 minutes before returning its verdict yesterday.

Shortly after 1 A.M. today, according to the city of Tuskegee's Public Safety Director, Alton Taylor, Negroes gathered at a Confederate monument in the downtown square, listened to speeches, sang and chanted.

Then leaves in the square were set afire, bringing out the city fire department, and numerous false alarms were turned in. Black paint was poured on the monument to Confederate war dead and the words "black power" were smeared on it.

After about three hours, Mr. Taylor said, the students started back to Tuskegee Institute. Along the way, many of them tossed bottles and stones at white-owned establishments in a three-block area downtown.

Some 13 businesses suffered broken windows, including a bank and a state-owned liquor store. A glass door on the liquor store was smashed open and an undetermined amount of alcoholic beverages taken.

The store opened for business as usual today. Store officials said they had not yet determined how much was stolen.

No Arrests Made

The entire city force of 17 policemen, half of them Negro, watched over the demonstration but made no arrests.

Negroes heavily outnumbered whites in Macon County. A Negro, Lucious Amerso, was elected sheriff Nov. 8. He does not take office until next month.

Dr. Foster summoned the students to a meeting during the morning and told them:

"It is a very sad thing for the people of Tuskegee Institute to face this morning the evidence of wanton physical destruction caused by a very few people in a rather large group of students and others.

"All who were there share the blame. It is a reflection on the basic good sense of Tuskegee students and on our commitment as an educational institutional.

Students said that the president of the student government, Benny James, called a meeting last night to discuss M. Segrest's acquittal and to plan a demonstration for 9:30 A.M. today. However, an unidentified student suggested an immediate march and the demonstration began.

Mr. Segrest testified during hss two-day trial that he had fired two shots in Mr. Younge's direction "to bluff him." He said Mr. Younge argued with him over use of the rest room at the service station Mr. Segrest operated.

The elderly white man said the rest rooms were not segregated but that Mr. Younge had insisted on being permitted to use the women's rest room.

Mr. Younge started "cussing and raising hell," Mr. Segrest said and grabbed what "looked like a gun" from his car.

A golf club was found beside Mr. Younge's body.

Martin Strategy Is Direct Attack

By GROVER C. HALL JR.
Editor, The Montgomery Advertiser
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala. Sept. 3 — Congressman Jim Martin, the Republican candidate for governor, made a basic strategic decision: to attack Gov. George C. Wallace unsparingly.

ALABAMA

That this was a wise decision is not the belief of some Republican leaders and candidates.

John Grenier, the Republican candidate against U.S. Sen. John J. Sparkman, has sought to disassociate himself from the assault on Wallace by remaining away from Martin appearances.

Grenier sent a bouquet to Mrs. Martin when the congressman opened his campaign at a Birmingham rally. But Grenier's campaign business had him in Baldwin County, as remote as one can be from Birmingham without launching a boat in the Gulf of Mexico.

THOSE WHO believe that Martin erred in his assault strategy reason that the one-shot victory of Mrs. Lurleen Wallace in the primary is proof positive of Wallace's popularity.

They reason that the better course would have been an ungrudging tribute to the governor and the first lady and earnest persuasion based on the fact that the governor himself is not a candidate this year.

Martin, arriving at the speaker's stand by helicopter and horseback, centered his attack on the Wallace proposal to seek nullification of federal school guidelines. He followed this up with other attacks.

MARTIN SAID Wallace should be on the "NAACP payroll for all the help" he is giving the organization.

"I predicted when the school bill was first proposed by Gov. Wallace that it would only serve to speed integration of our schools," Martin said. "I maintained then and I maintain now that Gov. Wallace is playing into the hands of federal officials."

In another speech, Martin said:

"This ill-advised bill appears to be just another two-and-a-half-minute stand in the school house door while the whole state suffers to feed one man's ego and insatiable appetite for power."

Lurleen's Lead Appears Certain

By GROVER C. HALL JR.
Editor, The Montgomery Advertiser
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 30—On the eve of the May 3 primary, all hands agreed that Lurleen Wallace, First Lady of Alabama, would lead the field.

And a growing number of railbirds commenced to speculate that she would win without a runoff.

It was a reasonable guess that Atty. Gen. Richmond Flowers would get the largest part of the Negro vote and place No. 2. At least one professional poll indicated that.

Should Mrs. Wallace win without a runoff or have Flowers as a runoff adversary and win big, Congressman James D. Martin, the GOP standard bearer, would face an uphill fight.

At the moment, Gov. Wallace plans to enter most, if not all, presidential preferential primaries in 1968. This not unlikely would lead to his candidacy for President on a third party ticket.

SPEAKER OF THE House Albert Brewer, a young Decatur lawyer and Wallace apostle, is generally expected to have a wide lead in the race for lieutenant governor.

U.S. Sen. John Sparkman has two opponents but no problems in the primary. It will be otherwise if a competent Republican is nominated.

On a typical morning of the last week of the campaign,

ALABAMA

Alabamians read that a great throng had defied soaking rain to hear the Wallaces in Birmingham. One invalid in a wheel chair defied the soaking to shake the governor's hand, a typical vignette in this campaign.

THE VAST throng occurred in Alabama's most populous county, Jefferson, and one which Wallace has not previously carried.

As this happened, former Gov. John Patterson had to content himself with an audience of 28 in an address to the Young Men's Business Club of Alabama in Birmingham.

"I feel very confident, "Patterson said, "that we will be faced with a runoff with Mrs. Wallace and that we will win."

Sen. Bob Gilchrist, of Hartselle, said: "Wallace knows he could beat Flowers . . . but Wallace knows he can't beat Bob Gilchrist."

At the same time, former Congressman Carl Elliott, of Jasper, was attacking Wallace in Anniston.

And Flowers was speaking to the students at Tuskegee Institute.

NEGRO BISHOP CONSECRATED

On January 6th the Very Rev. Msgr. Harold R. Perry became the first Negro bishop in the Roman Catholic Church in the United States. In the words of Bishop Robert Tracy of Baton Rouge, Louisiana the ceremony occasioned "two principal sources of wonderment.....First, that we are witnessing the episcopal consecration of the first Negro ever to be raised to the high office of bishop in order to serve in a diocese of the U. S. .....And, second the fact that this bishop-elect has come through to the public - both here in the South as well as across the nation - as a highly cultivated person; a churchman with an impressive record of dedication and leadership in works of religion; a true 'man of God' in the modern tradition, fully in touch with the world around him, sensitive to such mundane things as public relations - an attractive winning person endowed with all the graces one would expect to find in one of his position.

Archbishop Egidio Vagnozzi, Apostolic Delegate to the United States who officiated at the consecration, called Bishop Perry's elevation to the hierarchy "not an honor bestowed upon the Negro people" but rather "a contribution of the Negro race to the episcopacy of the Church."

Bishop Perry is a member of the Conference Board and the second member to be appointed Bishop this year. Bishop Perry has been named pastor of St. Therese's, a traditionally "white" parish in New Orleans presently in an integrated residential section.

Conference Program Goals for 1966

The National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice has had general success with its program during the year of 1965. This, of course does not mean that we do not have a long way to go. To increase the commitment of the Church to civil rights the National Catholic Conference has outlined a broad-based expansion of its work in 1966. Among the specific goals are:

The development of more local Catholic human relations organizations, and the strengthening of existing local organizations. Through the expansion of Conference staff, services to Catholic human relations organizations has already been increased and the work of the Southern Field Service has been significantly strengthened. The Conference will focus additional energy on field work with the Councils in efforts to increase local level strength and relevancy to local issues and will provide occasion for regional leadership training and planning as well as staff development.

Conference Southern Field Service programs will rely more heavily on travel consultation in Southern dioceses, focused on response to local civil rights challenges. As a followup to two major regional conferences in 1965, the Conference will work to organize leadership conferences in sub-regions of the South to reach more deeply local Catholic leadership. The Southern Field Service and the Department of Educational Services will cooperate in staging a planning conference on hospital desegregation and will pursue specialized services for Catholic school superintendents, vocations directors, and religious orders largely serving Negro Catholics.

A heavy emphasis on Project Equality, designed to eliminate discrimination by Church institutions and their suppliers will reach out to cover construction, real estate insurance and banking, in addition to general purchasing. An expansion of this program is planned into 40 areas within the next two years. Plans of the Department of Employment Services will also include greater interreligious cooperation, with establishment of a national Project Equality organization on an interreligious basis.

Broad objectives for the Department of Educational Services organized one year ago will be continued and expanded. A steering committee of experts in curriculum, intergroup relations, theology, etc. will be formed to assist the Department. Operation Motherhouses will be launched in selected religious communities for the self-study of religious communities as they are relevant to problems of poverty and race. Project Cabrini and other summer volunteer work will be emphasized through a summer-work processing center in the Department. Based on 1965 experience, the Education Department will organize three summer 1966 Traveling Workshops in Human Relations, offering intensive in-service training to parochial and public school teachers and other personnel such as police officers.

Finally, the Conference plans to establish a Department of Urban Services if funds can be raised, to concentrate on housing discrimination and related problems. In broad perspective, the objectives of the National Catholic Conference and its affiliate groups will be to eliminate from within the Catholic community any remaining vestiges of racial discrimination and to encourage the flow of the resources of the Catholic community into efforts to secure interracial justice in the civic community.

Clergy Conference for the Interracial Apostolate

The Clergy Conference for the Interracial Apostolate in a meeting at the offices of the National Catholic Conference in executive sessions asked that the Conference act as secretariat for the group. The Clergy Conference is a group of priests organized for the purpose of creating a better understanding of problems of poverty and race among members of the clergy. Its president, the Reverend Matthew Gottschalk, O.F.M. Cap., pastor of St. Francis of Assisi parish in Milwaukee, Wisconsin also asked that the Conference assist the group in the publishing of a quarterly newsletter to members aimed at keeping them informed of important new developments across the country in parish work.

The Clergy and Social Justice

Auxiliary Bishop James P. Shannon of the St. Paul Diocese in a recent talk before the Stevenson Club in Minneapolis emphasized that the clergy should use public protest but use it carefully and judiciously. Bishop Shannon said there are some laymen who would like Catholic Clergymen to be more "sacristry priests" - to celebrate Mass and confine themselves to worship and teaching activities. But the whole thrust of the pontificate of the late Pope John XXIII and the Second Vatican Council has been in the opposite direction, stressing the need of the clergy and the laity to concern themselves with the troubles of mankind. Bishop Shannon took part in the Selma, Alabama demonstrations last year and spoke at the memorial service for the late Rev. James Reeb.

Vatican II on Christian-Jewish Relations

In company with the prophets and the Apostles, the Church awaits that day, known to God alone, on which all peoples will address the Lord in a single voice and serve Him shoulder to shoulder.....True, the Jewish authorities and those who followed their lead pressed for the death of Christ. Still, what happened in His passion cannot be charged against all the Jews, without distinction, then alive, nor against the Jews of today. Although the Church is the new people of God, the Jews should not be presented as rejected or accursed by God, as if this followed from the Holy Scriptures.....All should see to it then, that in catechetical work or in the preaching of the word of God they do not teach anything that does not conform to the truth of the Gospel.....the Church moved by the Gospel's spiritual love, decries hatred, persecutions, displays of anti-Semitism, directed against Jews at any time and by anyone.....We cannot truly call on God, the Father of all, if we refuse to treat in a brotherly way any man, created as he is in the image of God.

.....Lawrence Cardinal Shehan of Baltimore was awarded a national brotherhood award by the National Conference of Christians and Jews for his leadership in the ecumenical movement and his constant condemnation of bigotry. Cardinal Shehan will also receive on January 25th another award from the Har Sinai Brotherhood. It will be presented by Rabbi Abraham Shusterman, only non-Christian recipient of the Cardinal Gibbons Medal.

Striking Grape pickers of Negro, Chinese, Filipino and Mexican-American nationality were receiving $1.20 per hour are now demanding $1.40 as recommended for farm labor by Secretary of Labor Willard Wirtz. Civil rights, the whole range of anti-poverty efforts, and world affairs will be given top priority in the educational programs of the Washington, New York and Kentucky projects. "Democracy and social-economic development in the Western Hemisphere" will be the focus of the Puerto Rico Encampment's educational program. The Puerto Rico Encampment is for campers from throughout the Hemisphere.

As in the past, campers will represent a cross section of the nation, of many racial, religious, ethnic and economic backgrounds. Also in the Encampment tradition will be the educational approach: no partisan or sectarian ax to grind, emphasis on discussions and see-for-yourself fieldtrips, and insistence that even the most distinguished speakers take time, after their lectures, for questions and thorough discussion.

DIVERSITY THE KEY

Speakers will represent many points of view, and will include members of Congress and other political leaders, officials in the federal Administration, the Government of Puerto Rico and local governments. Outstanding and controversial social scientists, social workers, journalists, and spokesmen for business, labor and farm groups will

Congressman John V. Lindsay, Mayor-Elect of New York City:

"The Encampment for Citizenship . . . has established in the hearts and minds of thousands of young people enduring adherence to fundamental democratic principles.

"The Encampments have done much to build citizens, not only of this country, but of other countries of the world, and this achievement cannot be underestimated. They have been a distillation of democracy, and their work in carrying the cause of freedom to the young will gain increasing numbers of friends as time passes."

Encampment Impact Hits Record Number In '65

A record number of 261 campers took part in the Encampment for Citizenship's three Summer '65 projects, in New York City, Puerto Rico and Berkeley, California. Their enthusiastic letters to the projects' directors, this fall, testify once again to the educational and emotional impact of the Encampment experience.

Allard Lowenstein, lawyer-teacher-author (Brutal Mandate — the story of South West Africa) and alumnus of the 1947 Encampment, was director of the New York Encampment, held for the 20th year at the Fieldston School, Riverdale. The 110 campers, highly diverse in racial, religious, ethnic and economic backgrounds, represented a broad spectrum of political beliefs. Stimulating sessions with guest lecturers, intense, often marathon-length staff and camper discussions, and frequent fieldtrips to points throughout the New York area added up to a dynamic confrontation with the country's major public affairs issues.

Guest lecturers, who dealt with civil rights, foreign policy, and economic and social problems (examples: law in American slums; problems of the press; narcotics; innovation in higher education) were a distinguished lot. Congressmen and other spokesmen for the Democratic and Republican parties were included, along with Yale, Princeton and Harvard faculty members, the President of Antioch College, representatives of the Civil Rights Commission and the State Department, and spokesmen for civil rights organizations, the labor movement, and left and right-wing dissent groups.

The gubernatorial candidate of the Freedom Democratic Party of Mississippi was a speaker, as were two candidates for Mayor of New York City, the editors of the Lexington (Mississippi) Advertiser and the New York Post, Norman Thomas, UN Mediator Dr. Frank Graham and American Civil Liberties Union founder Roger Baldwin.

Workshops at the New York Encampment dealt with foreign policy, law and the poor, political and community organization, urban social problems, education, cultural affairs, and the New York City power structure. Another workshop enabled campers to take part in a tutorial project for disadvantaged youngsters, run by student volunteers on Harlem's West Side.

Workshop groups made frequent fieldtrips to the UN and various foreign missions to the UN, to the offices of a wide range of social agencies and community organizations, to the police and courts, treatment centers for drug addicts, Broadway and off-Broadway stage personalities and productions, bank, newspaper and trade union offices and television news studios.

Regional Action Groups Will Be Co-Sponsors

The Encampment's 1966 projects in Eastern Kentucky and in Puerto Rico will be co-sponsored by locally-based community action organizations.

The Encampment's high-school-age Center for Education in Democracy, in Eastern Kentucky, will be co-sponsored by the Council of the Southern Mountains and by the Southern Regional Council. The Council of the Southern Mountains, with headquarters at Berea, Kentucky, assists the work of hundreds of local agencies and individuals leading the anti-poverty struggle in Southern Appalachia. The Southern Regional Council, at Atlanta, aids and coordinates the work of local organizations throughout the South working toward equal rights and opportunities for all.

In Puerto Rico the Encampment for Citizenship will be co-sponsored by the Y.M.C.A. Cuerpo de Paz de Puerto Rico, a non-sectarian domestic Peace Corps supported by the federal anti-poverty program.

All three co-sponsoring organizations will assist the Encampment's staff in planning fieldtrips and community service work, and in locating outstanding guest lecturers, staff and campers.

After a year's service as a volunteer in the YMCA Peace Corps of Puerto Rico, Joe is now on the staff of that non-sectarian anti-poverty agency. He and his co-workers will help campers at the 1966 Encampment for Citizenship get first-hand community development experience in communities throughout the island.

After an afternoon there, they visited with the new Mayor-Elect at his home. Two other candidates for Mayor of New York City were among speakers at the Encampment, and other candidates' headquarters were also visited.

Folk music always ranks high among recreational activities at Encampment projects. Dancing, swimming, volleyball, softball and other sports, as well as attendance at local cultural events, will be free-time activities at all Summer '66 projects.

Encampment Projects Are Not Only For Students

"Active interest in public affairs, not merely educational status, is the factor we're most concerned with," says Mrs. Clara Kobrak, chairman of the Encampment's Admissions Committee.

"No one should be discouraged from applying for admission to one of the Encampment's 19 to 23-year-old projects because he's not in college. We're just as interested in the applicant who's active in his local union, or farm youth group, or in anti-poverty or civil rights work, for example, as we are in students."

Mrs. Kobrak also pointed out that the 15 to 18-year-old projects are not limited to high school students.

BERKELEY CENTER

Seventy-seven teen-agers from twenty states and Jamaica brought to life the Encampment's second annual "Center for Education in Democracy," at Berkeley, California. Their director, a staff veteran of the 1964 Center, was William T. Rogers, former New York City high school teacher, now Leader of the Ethical Society of Essex County, New Jersey.

Camper questions continued at a rapid rate throughout fieldtrips to a huge automated Standard Oil refinery, the Synanon treatment center for drug victims, migrant farm labor camps, a longshoremen's union hall and a Swedish merchant ship, ethnic areas and other points of interest in San Francisco, and several of the beaches, forests and other natural beauty spots of California.

Democratic and Republican speakers, a debate of Vietnam issues by University of California faculty members, lectures by spokesmen for the labor and cooperative movements, social agencies, civil rights groups and the Civil Liberties Union, a "rumor clinic," a selection of outstanding films—all these contributed to a stimulating program, a summer which many campers have written was the high point of their lives.

Two campers who had personally helped integrate the school at Americus, Georgia, made a unique contribution to the campers' understanding of race relations in the South. A closing week finale was a moving camper dramatic production of Martin Duberman's In White America.

Dear Friend:

Enclosed are announcements of the Encampment's four Summer '66 projects, and application forms for both the 19-23-year-old projects in Washington, D.C. and Puerto Rico, and the 15-18-year old projects in Kentucky and in New York City.

The new Washington Encampment will be on the University of Maryland campus; the Puerto Rico Encampment has a new and better site at Cayey; the new project in Kentucky will be at Union College, Barbourville; and in New York we will be at the Fieldston School again.

We hope you will be able to inform some young men and women about these exciting opportunities. As you know, we welcome applicants who have a keen interest in public affairs, people who want to "make a difference" in their communities. Some scholarships are available on the basis of need.

Could your organization, or another group in your community, offer one or more partial scholarships to encourage promising applicants from low-income backgrounds who might not otherwise apply?

Please let us know, on the enclosed card, if additional announcements or applications can be used.

Can one of the enclosed tabloids be posted on a bulletin board?

Thank you for your interest and help. We wish it were possible to write you on a more personal basis.

Best wishes,

Sincerely,

Douglas Kelley

A PROPOSAL FOR A CONFERENCE ON HEALTH AND WELFARE SERVICES FOR GEORGIA'S CHILDREN

Background Information

Responding to the War on Poverty's Economic Opportunity Act, the Southern Regional Office of the National Urban League sponsored a series of Southern Workshops on Poverty during the Spring of 1965. Community leaders were provided with pertinent information and were encouraged to develop resources for expanding services to low-income families by participating in the anti-poverty programs. These Workshops were followed by consultative and advisorial servicing to individual communities and to Urban League Affiliates in the thirteen Southern States.

During the course of this activity, community leaders expressed extreme concern not only towards the job-training and skill development aspect of the economic opportunity programs, but also for the related area of health and welfare services to children--the economic potential of tomorrow.

We became aware of the severe hunger that community leaders have for information and technical and consultative help from social welfare and health agencies. However, besides the over-all need for referral services and information centers, specific problems were brought to the forefront of our attention in the areas of mental retardation, unwed parenthood, and day care services.

Realizing the serious extent of these problems, this office determined to initiate action to improve and provide adequate health and welfare services to children. First, it was decided to initiate such action in a pilot project in the State of Georgia and to manifest action and concern from our Atlanta-based office. Not only is Atlanta the regional headquarters for most of the national organizations and agencies concerned with child health and welfare; but also, Georgia, specifically, has been experiencing a growing awareness of the need to improve such services. This awareness has been reflected in the reorganization of the State Departments of Public Health and Family and Children's Services, and has been seen in the passage of legislation applying to higher standards of operation for agencies serving children.

Secondly, a number of exploratory meetings were sponsored to consider methods which would initiate action towards improving services to children. These meetings, on an individual and/or group basis, were with directors and representatives of national, state, and local organizations, whose programming are relevant to children's services--Division of the Children's Bureau, Department of Health, Education and Welfare; Divisions of Georgia State Departments of Public Health, Education, and Family and Children's Services; Office of Economic Opportunity officials; the Child Welfare League of America; National and Georgia Chapt of the Association for Retarded Children; the National Council on Illegitimacy; Florence Crittenton Association; the National Association of Day Car Services; the Metropolitan Atlanta Citizens Committee on Day Care; State a local voters' leagues; the National and Georgia Council of Churches; the National Council of Christians and Jews; the Salvation Army; the American Friends Service Committee and other human relations agencies; and the Comm ity Council of Greater Atlanta, Inc.

The cumulative consensus of these meetings, which began last August at the National Urban League Annual Conference in Miami Beach, clarified and delineated the following aspects of program action and were presented to a group of potential advisors and co-sponsors in a meeting on November 9th:

A. Goals
B. Participation
C. Methods
D. Advisory Committee
   1. Action Assembly
      a. Purposes
      b. Sponsorship
      c. Budget
      d. Date and time
      e. Program
   2. Citizens Committee
E. Role of the Southern Regional Office of the National Urban League.

Goals

The goal of the Child Health and Welfare Program shall be to set in motion those forces which will work towards developing and providing adequate--quantitatively and qualitatively--specialized services for all children, and particularly those from low-income families, in the State of Georgia, with emphasis on the following interrelated areas:

1. State-wide maternal care and well- and sich-child clinics.

2. State-wide mental retardation testing, evaluation, and follow-up services, and publicly supported day care for retarded children.

3. State-wide licensed day care centers for children from low-income families.

Participants

Because a lack of adequate referral and information services is one of the greatest problems confronted by the public and those offering services in the above-mentioned areas, the focal point of attention shall be on reaching leading citizens from communities throughout the State of Georgia.

Hence, for the most effective fulfillment of the goals and purposes of this program, participation shall include not only responsive governmental agencies (at all levels) and private agencies having interests and responsibilities in these fields of services, but emphatic emphasis will be placed on the participation of leading responsible citizenry--leadership from citizen groups such as PTA's, teachers' organizations, fraternal orders, women's auxiliaries, professional organizations, civic clubs, church leaders (such as ministers, priests, and rabbis and leadership from their congregations), voter's leagues, etc., and other leading citizens with interest and concern in health and welfare services.

Methods

As an effective method for setting appropriate forces, or machinery into motion, a State-wide Action Assembly shall be held and a State-wide Citizen Committee shall be developed.

Advisory Committee

Following the goals and purposes of the Action Assembly--providing adequate health and welfare services to children by bringing pertinent information and guidelines for community action to leaders throughout Georgia--the Advisory Committee shall be composed of representatives and/or volunteer workers (non-salaried positions) of agencies, organizations, and associations with interest in the noted areas of concern. These "citizen-representatives" might include chairmen, presidents, board members, heads of organizational committees, etc.; in any case, the representative should hold a position of responsibility and decision-making within his organization.

The future position and purpose of the Advisory Committee would be dependent upon the accumulative decision of the Committee and the establishing of a State-wide Citizens Committee.

ACTION ASSEMBLY ON SERVICES FOR CHILDREN

Purposes:

1. Inform about current and proposed health and welfare programs.
2. Spotlight and define problem areas and establish public concern.
3. Consider the role of agencies of the federal government in interpreting its services and responsibilities under the law and in delineating standards.
4. Propose the forming of a State-wide Citizens Committee to implement resolutions passed by the Assembly.

Sponsorship

Sponsorship of the Assembly will be a cooperative effort provided by responsible governmental and private agencies and organizations having interest and responsibilities in services for children. However, based on the aims of the Assembly, sponsorship should especially represent state, regional, and local agencies and organizations with interest in Georgia and are designated as citizens groups.

Budget

Financing of the Assembly will be kept at a minimum. Anticipated major it of expenditure will include printing costs, postage, public relations, records and reports, telephone calls, supplies, staff for Assembly, and staf expenses related to the Assembly. Sponsoring agencies, organizations, and associations might be expected to participate with contributions, staff ti and/or other services as their resources permit.

Proposed Location

It is proposed that the Assembly be held in Atlanta because of its relativ central location in the State; it is the headquarters of most of the invol ved groups; and it is favorable in keeping staff and expenses at a minimum

Proposed Time and Date

An exact length of time and the specific date will be decided upon by the consensus of the Advisory Committee. It has already been suggested that t Assembly take place towards the end of January, and, in terms of the propo ed program, that it last for a day and a half.

Proposed Program

The program should allot time for a public forum, or "town hall" meeting, which would include keynote speakers and panel members, and which would pr vide information on programs, problem areas, and governmental policies and responsibilities. Keynote speakers and panel members would represent national and state figures who are well-known in the areas of concern.

The second part of the program would consist of workshops moderated by sta and local agencies and organizations with responsibilities in the areas of concern. In these workshops, resolutions would be passed and plans propos for local action.

STATE-WIDE CITIZENS COMMITTEE

This Committee will coordinate the services of the associations and agenci towards reaching throughout the communities in Georgia, and it will function to implement the resolutions passed at the Assembly by developing programs at the State and/or local levels. Such programs may include the following:

1. Planning of local, or regional state health and welfare workshops--perhaps throughout the State.

2. Providing information acquired at the Assembly to members of communitie such as (1) women's groups and civic clubs establishing information centers in low-income communities, or distributing such information; (2) church leaders acting as referral and information sources for thei congregations and communities.

3. Requesting and encouraging public support for needed health and welfar programs in the State, county, and/or local community.

4. Investigating and monitoring health and welfare services.

5. Establishing needed day care centers for low-income families.

6. Encouraging legislative changes that may be necessary in obtaining adequate health and welfare services.

Role of the Southern Regional Office of the National Urban League.

The Southern Regional Office, as a professionally staffed social service agency, would be one of the sponsoring agencies. Having acquired an additional staff person to work specifically on developing this program in the State of Georgia and the finances to cover direct program promotion a the minimal expenses of the Assembly, the Southern Regional Office is already in a position to coordinate the Action Assembly.

THE JULIAN BOND CASE

The Facts

Five days before the opening of the Georgia House, John Lewis, Chairman of SNCC issued a statement condemning U. S. "Aggression" in Viet Nam and claiming that America was responsible for the "murder" of Vietnamese peasants. He called upon Americans to refuse to participate in the war by any means.

Reporters, knowing that Julian Bond, as well as being a newly elected legislator, was also Public Relations Director of SNCC, sought him out to question him. Mr. Bond stated that he concurred "fully" with the statement. Asked about whether he advocated draft-card burning, Mr. Bond stated that he did not advocate this, that he had his own draft card which he had no intention of burning, but that he did "admire" the courage" of those who protested the war knowing they must face the legal consequences and community ostracism.

Some Georgia House members responded by signing a petition to deny Mr. Bond his seat because his statements "gave aid and comfort to the enemy." Mr. Bond was informed that this petition would be considered by the Georgia House on its opening day, Monday, January 10th.

On the eve of the opening House session, the Georgia ACLU issued a statement through its president, Hugh W. Gibert, which said in part:

"Disagreement over U. S. policies cannot be made the basis for ousting a duly elected public official from office. If it were, we would have precious few legislators, since many of them shouted defiance of the constitutional decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court only a few years ago.

"Individual members of the ACLU, myself included, consider that to characterize our policy in Viet Nam as "Aggression" and to say that the United States bears part of the responsibility for 'murder' of peasants' is reckless and unfair. These are not relevant considerations, however, since what is at stake is freedom of speech guaranteed by the First Amendment of the U. S. Constitution.

"To dissent from American policy is not to be disloyal. We are too great a country, and our freedom is too real and meaningful for us to think it necessary to pretend to the world that we are unanimous on any issue, either foreign or domestic..."

On Monday morning, at the opening session, Mr. Bond was not permitted by Speaker George T. Smith to take the oath of office given to other House members. At 11:30 a.m., Mr. Smith announced that the petition to oust Mr. Bond would be considered by a special twenty-eight member legislative committee with himself as chairman. The committee was to convene that same afternoon at 2:30 p.m. to consider the case in the House Chamber. The hearing was open to all House members, the press and the gallery.

The Hearing

The hearing began -- unpromptly at 3:30 p.m. -- before a packed house. Mr. Bond was represented by ACLU of Georgia Vice-President Howard Moore, Jr., assisted by ACLU Southern Regional Director Charles Morgan, Jr. The signers of the House petition brought Mr. Denmark Groover of Macon, a former House floor leader during the Griffin Administration, to present their case. Mr. Bond's attorneys called his two election rivals - one Republican and one Democrat - to testify that they felt he should take his seat, and that he would undoubtedly carry the 136th District again. This testimony was followed by statements from Senator LeRoy Johnson and Senator Horace Ward who also urged his seating. The chief witness for the petitioners was a Mr. Ed Spivey, a reporter for the state-owned radio station WGST, who produced a tape of an interview with Mr. Bond. The introduction of this tape by the petitioners was rather curious, since in it, Mr. Bond re-iterated several times that he did not advocate draft-card burning and would not burn his.

On cross examination of Mr. Spivey, Mr. Moore elicited the information that Mr. Spivey had no personal knowledge that Mr. Bond had been told that his telephone interview was being taped, and that there was no beeper on the telephone to apprise him that the telephone conversation was being recorded.

Mr. Morgan made the closing statement for Mr. Bond, stressing both the free speech aspects of the case, and pointing out the dangerous precedent which would be set for other state legislatures by the Georgia House action. Mr. Groover concluded for the petitioners by labelling Mr. Bond's statements as "treason" and by calling upon the House to refuse to seat him in the name of patriotism.

The special committee voted 26-3 against seating Mr. Bond, and an overwhelming 184 members of the House voted to follow their recommendation. Only twelve members dissented.

THE JULIAN BOND CASE, CON'T.

The Case

Following the House action, Mr. Bond's attorneys filed suit to enjoin the House from refusing to seat Mr. Bond. Or, as an alternative, the suit calls for the adjournment of the House until the 136th District can be represented. A three-Judge federal court has been impaneled to hear the case. (A three-Judge court is required by law whenever the constitutionality of statutes are brought into question.) The plaintiffs in the suit are Julian Bond, and two of the residents of the 136th District which he represents, one of them being Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

The suit is based chiefly on the following grounds:

1. Mr. Bond was denied the right of free speech as guaranteed in the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

2. His constituents have been denied their right of representation as guaranteed by the Fourteen and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution.

3. The House action amounts to a bill of attainder and ex post facto law -- i.e., a special act seeking purnishment for a particular named person, passed by a legislature against a named person subjecting him to a pain or penalty for something he did while not a member of the legislature.

4. Mr. Bond, was in fact, tried for treason and for violating the Selective Service Act. He was therefore, the suit contends, deprived of his right to be indicted by a Grand Jury under the Fifth Amendment, and to his right to a trial by jury under the Six and Fourteenth Amendment.

5. The statutes and provisions of the rules of the Georgia House of Representatives under which Mr. Bond was tried are vague. The ACLU contends that they are thus void for such vagueness under the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the Constitution.

This case is scheduled to be heard on January 28th. In the meantime, Governor Sanders has called a special election in the 136th District for February 23rd, five days after the Legislature adjourns.

The Advertisement

Seven hundred-fifty Georgians signed the advertisement to appear in the Atlanta Constitution on Wednesday, January 26th. With their signed ads they sent in dollar bills to pay for it. To meet the deadline, only Atlanta area ACLU members were contacted of whom almost 60% responded with a signature and a dollar, or more. But in spite of the limited circulation of the ad, signatures came also from Rome, Macon, Columbus, Savannah, Athens and Augusta.

THE JULIAN BOND CASE, CON'T

Over a third of the signers were students and faculty members. Among the rest were ministers, businessmen, lawyers, elementary and high school teachers, doctors, and of course, hundreds of citizens whose occupations could not be identified by their name or addresses.

To ACLU members and others who responded so promptly and generously -- many, many thanks.

ACLU TO SHOW POINT OF ORDER FEBRUARY 25

Circle this date on your calendar: - Friday, February 25th at 8:00 p.m. at Lenox Square Auditorium - an extra-special ACLU meeting, featuring the film Point of Order. This is a commercially made movie about the McCarthy erea, including the dramatic confrontation between Senator McCarthy and Attorney Joseph P. Welch.

We were apprehensive when we thought of scheduling the film that it might seem like ancient history. But in view of the Bond case, and the proposal to create a Georgia Un-American Activities Committee, it is, alas, all too timely. You won't want to miss this gripping movie!

YOUR RENEWAL NOTICES ARE COMING!

We picture all our ACLU members as anxiously questioning the postman each day: "Where is my ACLU renewal notice? I am so impatient to pay my dues that I can hardly wait."

This is to reassure all ACLU members -- except those who joined or renewed in the last two months of 1965 -- that they are on their way. We know you will all be relieved to get this information.

ACLU SUBMITS UPDATED CONSTITUTION TO MEMBERSHIP

We always wondered why it took so long for the Constitutional Convention to come up with such a simple little document as the United States Constitution. Now we know. The Georgia ACLU Committee on Revision of the Constitution, under the able chairmanship of Mrs. Neil Moran, has been laboring for many months to streamline our Constitution so that we can operate more effectively. The results of their efforts are enclosed.

You will note that immediately following each Article in which any revision has been recommended there is a footnote outlining the change and explaining the reason for it.

Two major changes are recommended in the Constitution:

1. An enlarged Advisory Board is created, with representatives from the major population centers where we have members. The expansion of the Advisory Board to a maximum of thirty members is recognition of the fact that our organization is growing all over the State, and we need the advice and counsel of community leaders as we attempt to make our program truly state wide.

2. We recognize that such a state-wide Advisory Board, scattered by hundreds of miles, cannot run the day-to-day business of the organization. Therefore, the revised Constitution creates an Executive Committee to make the on-the-spot decisions which will implement the general policies recommended by the Advisory Board when it meets once or twice a year, and when it is polled by mail for its judgments throughout the year.

Most of the other changes in the Constitution are minor, and stem from these two major ones.

We commend this revised Constitution to your careful study. We believe its adoption will permit the Georgia ACLU to grow throughout the State and to operate at top efficiency.

Enclosed with the revised Constitution is a ballot, Please fill it out, and return it in the enclosed self-addressed envelope. Do not sign the ballot itself, but make sure to sign the envelope (legibly please) and put your return address on it, too.

Immediately after the ballots on the revised Constitution have been tabulated, you will receive the recommendations of the Nominating Committee for officers and Board members.

If the membership accepts the revised Constitution, the recommendations of the Nominating Committee will be for the new, expanded Advisory Board and for the Executive Committee.

If the membership should reject the revised Constitution, the Nominating Committee recommendations will then be based on the present setup of a smaller Board of Directors without an Executive Committee.

It would be nice if time permitted leisurely contemplation by members of the revised Constitution. But prompt voting on these changes is essential, so that we can go on to the next step of submitting the Nominating Committee's recommendations to you. After that we must conduct the elections and have the results tabulated in time for our Annual Meeting, which will be in May.

YOUR VOTE MUST BE RECEIVED BY TUESDAY, MARCH 22.

So we urgently request that you study the Constitution and send back your ballot as soon as humanly possible.

One more note: Remember that unless you are a paid-up member for 1966, your vote will not count either for the revised Constitution or for the election of officers and Advisory Board members. So if your renewal notice is gathering dust, or buried under a stack of unpaid bills and free coupon offers, please fish it out and send it in right away. Otherwise you will be deprived of participating in the great, traditional American, democratic process of voting, and we will be deprived of your judgment of the recommended changes.

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION OF GEORGIA

PROPOSED REVISED CONSTITUTION

I. - Name

The name of this association shall be the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia. It shall be a non-profit association.

II. - Purpose

The purpose of the association shall be to further the objectives of the national American Civil Liberties Union and to advance the cause of civil liberties in the United States and the State of Georgia, with particular emphasis on the rights of free speech, free press, free assemblage, freedom of religion, due process of law, equal protection of the law, and to take all legitimate action in the furtherance and defense of such purposes. These objectives shall be sought without political partisanship.

III. - Headquarters

The association's headquarters shall be located at such place in Georgia as shall be determined by its Advisory Board from time to time.

IV. - Membership

The membership of the association shall consist of all members of the national American Civil Liberties Union (American Civil Liberties Union,Inc.) residing within the State of Georgia. Each member shall have one vote.

V. - Officers

1. The officers of the association shall consist of a President, first and second Vice-Presidents, Secretary and Treasurer. Each shall exercise duties relevant to his office as shall be prescribed by the Advisory Board. The term of office shall be for one year for each elected officer, but each officer may be reelected.

2. The officers of the association shall be elected at the Annual Meeting.

3. The Executive Committee shall fill any office which becomes vacant from among the members of the Advisory Board for the remainder of the unexpired term.

4. All officers and members of the Advisory Board and members of all committees shall conform to the requirements of the 1940 resolution of the American Civil Liberties Union, Inc., relating to governing personnel.

CHANGES: The office of Corresponding Secretary has been eliminated. The change from a volunteer operation to a professionally staffed office ends the need for this position.

The term "Advisory Board" is used instead of "Board of Directors" and the term "Executive Committee" is introduced. Both these changes are discussed fully in Articles VI and VII.

VI. - Advisory Board

1. The organization shall be under the guidance of an Advisory Board, consisting of no less than 25 members nor more than 30 members of the association, elected by the general membership. The term of office shall be two years, but each Advisory Board member may be re-elected. As far as practicable, membership on the Advisory Board shall include representation of each local ACLU chapter or of each major locus of membership in the State.

2. The Advisory Board shall meet as the occasion requires, but not less than once a year, at which times it may review the work of the organization and advise the Executive Committee regarding policy and program. Additional meetings may be called by the Executive Committee which shall also call a meeting within a reasonable period of time upon written request of any ten members of the Advisory Board (excluding those on the Executive Committee) or any twenty members of the association. Members of the Advisory Board shall receive adequate notice of each meeting.

3. A vacancy on the Advisory Board shall be filled by the Executive Committee until the next election of Board members when the vacancy shall be filled by the membership.

4. The election of the Advisory Board shall be held every other year at the Annual Meeting of the membership. At the same time, five members of the Advisory Board shall be elected to serve on the Executive Committee.

CHANGES: The Board of Directors has been replaced with an expanded Advisory Board. This is recognition of the fact that ACLU is a state-wide organization and should have the counsel of leading citizens from all over the State.

At the same time, it would be unrealistic to expect Advisory Board members from as far away as Savannah or Albany to attend monthly Board meetings (nor could ACLU afford the cost of paying travel expenses for 12 such state-wide meetings. Thus, the Advisory Board will set general policy, which will be carried out day to day by a newly created Executive Committee. The role of the Executive Committee is discussed in Article VII.

Since the Advisory Board will meet much less frequently, the terms of its members will be for two years, instead of the one year term for officers, which will help insure continuity. The somewhat unwieldy system of staggering terms will be discarded.

VII. - Executive Committee

1. Administration of the business and program of the organization shall be under the control of an Executive Committee to be composed of the duly elected officers, five members of the Advisory Board, and the chairmen of the Standing Committees. In addition, chairmen of no more than four of the ad hoc committees may be invited to serve as voting members of the Executive Committee by a two-thirds vote of its members. The Executive Committee chairman shall be president of the ACLU.

2. The Executive Committee shall, as it sees the need, employ an Executive Director and any necessary staff to carry out the program of the association, under its supervision.

3. The Executive Committee shall meet as the occasion requires, but not less than six times each year. Additional meetings may be called by the president. The president shall call a meeting within a reasonable period upon the written quest of any ten members of the Advisory Board (excluding those on the Executive Committee) or any twenty members of the association.

4. Members of the Executive Committee shall receive adequate advance notice of each meeting. Members who fail to attend three consecutive meetings without advance explanation to the Secretary (or Executive Director's office) may be dropped from Executive Committee membership by a majority vote of the Committee.

5. A vacancy on the Executive Committee shall be filled by the remaining members of the Executive Committee for the length of the unexpired term.

CHANGES: The Executive Committee, as noted above, is newly created to conduct the day-to-day business of the ACLU under the general guidance of the Advisory Board.

Empowering the Executive Committee to employ personnel is recognition of the fact that the organization has switched to a staffed operation, and as the Georgia affiliate grows, it is likely to continue as a staffed operation.

The inclusion of Committee Chairmen on the Executive Committee is recognition that those who accept Committee chairmanships have ipso facto demonstrated willingness to help conduct the day-to-day business of the organization.

VIII. - Meetings

1. The annual membership meeting shall be held during April of each year or such other time and in such place as shall be determined by the Executive Committee. Two weeks notice of the meeting shall be given to the members.

2. Other meetings of the membership may be called at the discretion of the Executive Committee.

CHANGES: In paragraphs one and two, substitution of "Executive Committee" for Board of Directors.

IX. - Nominations and Election of Officers and Advisory Board

1. The Executive Committee, by majority action, shall appoint a nominating committee at least three months before the annual meeting. The nominating committee shall consist of seven members, of whom not more than three shall be from the Executive Committee. At least two months before the annual meeting, the membership shall be notified by mail of the nominees proposed by the nominating committee. Additional nominations may be made by petition of any five members, provided there is attached to such a petition a signed statement expressing the nominee's willingness to serve if elected; any such petition to be filed with the Secretary not later than one month before the annual meeting.

2. At least two weeks before the annual meeting a ballot showing and distinguishing the candidates nominated by the nominating committee and those nominated by petition shall be mailed to every member.

3. Members may vote in person at the annual meeting or by mailing their ballots to the address designated thereon. No mailed ballots shall be counted unless received at such a place at least one day before the date of the annual meeting.

IX. - Nominations and Elections, continued

Ballots need not be signed, but the signature and address of each member voting must be placed on the envelope containing the ballot. Such ballots shall be opened in such a way as to preserve the secrecy of the ballot.

4. The count of mail ballots in the election to fill vacancies on the Advisory Board shall take place the day before the date of the annual meeting.

5. Officers of the organization shall be chosen by a majority vote of the membership; members of the Advisory Board by a plurality vote.

CHANGES: Appointment of the nominating committee is assigned to the Executive Committee instead of the old Board of Directors.

The nominating committee is enlarged from five to seven, and from three non-Board members to four non-Executive Committee members.

Paragraph 5. has been added to assure that officers, who carry the major responsibility for decisions, shall be elected by a majority. Advisory Board positions which may be contested by more than two candidates, call for a plurality vote to avoid the necessity of a run-off election.

X. - Committees

1. The Executive Committee shall establish such committees and delegate to them such powers and duties as in its judgment will best aid and promote the work of this association and its cooperation with the national ACLU.

2. In addition to ad hoc committees, the Advisory Board may establish standing committees to assist in the implementation of program and the chairmen of these standing committees shall serve on the Executive Committee.

CHANGES: Appointing standing committees is assigned to the Advisory Board instead of the old Board of Directors.

A distinction is made between ad hoc committees, which might deal with a specific program item as the need arose, and which are created by the Executive Committee; and standing committees to deal with the permanent, on-going concerns of the ACLU, such as litigation, legislation, educational activities and ACLU development, etc. These are created by the Advisory Board.

XI. - Local Chapters

1. The Advisory Board at its discretion may authorize the establishment of local ACLU chapters throughout the State.

2. The local chapters shall function in agreement with the State ACLU by-laws governing affiliation, withdrawal and degree of autonomy, as well as with the Constitution of the association.

CHANGES: Article XI is new, recognizing the fact that as the ACLU grows, a concentration of members in any population center will lead to the formation of local chapters, concentrating on local civil liberties problems. This would be a most desirable development, and the Constitution needs to set guidelines for local chapter affiliation.

XII. - Amendment of the Constitution

Proposed amendments shall be submitted by the Executive Committee to the entire membership of the association at least thirty days before it is to be voted upon. The vote may be by mail ballot to all members or by vote at the annual membership meeting. All amendments must be approved by two-thirds of the votes cast.

CHANGES: Substitution of "Executive Committee" for old Board of Directors.

ACLU FILES AMICUS CURIAE BRIEF IN BOND CASE

The American Civil Liberties Union, in a friend of the court brief filed with the United States Supreme Court, urged review of the three-judge federal court's decision upholding the barring of Julian Bond from his seat in the Georgia Legislature.

The ACLU brief contends that the issue which the Supreme Court must decide is "whether an individual elected by the people to represent them in a state legislature may be cast out by the legislature because it finds his views too unorthodox for its taste."

The brief argues that if left standing, the three-man court's decision "will seriously erode at least two fundamental constitutional principles which are directly served by the First Amendment: freedom of elected representatives to express themselves without hindrance on questions of public importance, and the right of voters freely to elect their legislative representatives.

The brief attacks the provision in the Georgia oath of office which requires legislators to state: "...on all questions and measures which may come before me, I will so conduct myself as will, in my judgment, be most conducive to the interest and prosperity of this state." Charging that the oath is "void for vagueness," the brief maintains that "the effect of the Georgia oath's uncertain requirements...is seriously to inhibit free and frank discussion of public issues by candidates and elected representatives. The brief argues that under the terms of the oath "a conscientious person who aspires to be a legislator must play a type of Russian routlette," adding: "He must speculate about the controversiality of his every statement and the intentions of his fellow legislators. If he guesses wrong, he loses his political life."

The ACLU had previously represented Mr. Bond, both at the special legislative hearing and before the three-judge Federal court. Since Mr. Bond chose to be represented by other counsel, the ACLU is raising these constitutional issues in its amicus brief. The ACLU brief was prepared by ACLU National Legal Director, Melvin L. Wulf; Charles Morgan, Jr., its Southern Regional Director; and Morris Brown, Chairman of the Georgia ACLU Lawyers Committee.

While not declining to review the case, the Supreme Court did refuse to hear it on an expedited basis at this Term, which runs until May. If heard, it will be argued at the next Term, beginning in October, 1966.

SUPREME COURT "EROS" DECISION CONFUSES CENSORSHIP PICTURE

The United States Supreme Court, by a 5-4 decision, has affirmed the lower court conviction of publisher Ralph Guinzberg for sending obscene literature through the mails, including such publications as Eros, Liaison, and The Housewives' Guide to Selected Promiscuity. Mr. Guinzberg faces a prison term.

In reaching its decision, the Court, for the first time, took into account factors other than the quality of the material itself. It took the position that where the material itself is questionable, the advertising and the setting in which the publication is merchandised may be used as criteria to determine whether or not a book or magazine is obscene. It also took into account whether the motivation or intent of the publication was to be pornographic.

Justice Brennan, speaking for the majority, noted that in the Fanny Hill case, the Massachussetts' ban on that book could not be upheld because the state had admitted that the book had a modicum of literary merit, and once literary merit is conceded, the book cannot by itself be considered obscene.

But this new decision now means that there is nothing to prevent Massachussetts from coming back into court and attacking the book for obscenity in the context of the way it is advertised or merchandised. Thus, a book like Fanny Hill, discreetly advertised and merchandised to a private men's club would not be judged obscene. The exact same book, however, flamboyantly advertised with a sexy cover, and displayed on a local newsstand, could be judged obscene.

By abandoning absolute standards of what is or is not obscene, and by adopting criteria unrelated to the content of the material, such as motivation and merchandising, the Supreme Court has opened the door for increased prosecution by state and local censorship groups. The State Literature Commission in Georgia, for example, could now ban books because of variable, extrinsic standards as well as for content.

We must point out that the Georgia State Literature Commission hardly needs this added incentive to its already overactive censorship activities; and that while the decision may prove an interesting challenge to the ingenuity of jacket designers and advertising men, it is a serious blow at the guarantees of free speech and free press contained in the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

ALABAMA JURY VICTORY SPURS GEORGIA ACTIVITY

Civil rights forces won a major victory last month in the decision of a three-judge federal court in Montgomery, Alabama, outlawing racial discrimination in the selection of jurors in Lowndes County. The case, White v. Crook, was brought by the ACLU as part of its "Operation Southern Justice" campaign.

This focus on systematic exclusion of Negroes from juries has spurred organizational activity in Georgia. The Fellowship of the Concerned will make jury exclusion a major project in the coming months. The Georgia Council on Human Relations is suggesting letters to both State and Federal jury clerks (the lists are kept separately) requesting inclusion on jury rolls.

We are hopeful that the letter writing idea will spread over the state. If you have been excluded from jury service because of race, or you know of someone who has, you might find the following useful as a guide:

For Federal Jury Service:

Hon. John P. Cowart, Clerk
U. S. District Court
Middle District of Georgia
Macon, Georgia

Dear Mr. Cowart:

I respectfully ask that my name be added to the jury lists for service in this District. I want to exercize my right and duty as a citizen to serve on juries in federal court./ Very truly yours, Name and Address.

For local jury service:

Clerk of the Jury Commission
(Your county name) County Court House
_____, Georgia

Dear Sir:

I respectfully request that you advise the Jury Commission at its next revision meeting that I would like my name considered for jury service. I am listed on the tax digests of _____ County and have all the qualifications for jury service. I want to exercize my right and duty as a citizen to serve on juries in this county./ Very truly yours, Name and Address.

Serving on a jury can be inconvenient -- a nuisance in fact -- and going out of your way to get on one may seem like carrying good citizenship to extremes. But unless we inconvenience both ourselves and the status quo jury selectors, the goal of Equal Justice Under Law will remain a slogan carved in stone instead of a reality written in the minds and hearts of our citizens.

NEW CONSTITUTION ADOPTED

The results read like a plebiscite in the Saar. Two hundred and one members voted for adoption of the new ACLU Constitution and one member voted against. And we have received an anonymous tip that the one "nay" vote was cast by a person with no criticism of the Constitution, just a pathological horror of unanimity.

This particular near-unanimity, however, is a healthy sign. It means that members feel we are ready to expand state-wide, and this is beginning to be reflected in our activities:

o The new Advisory Board -- you will receive your ballots around April 15th -- nominates eight Board members from Albany, Athens, Augusta, Gainesville, Macon, Rome, Savannah and Thomasville.

o A successful party in Athens, addressed by Hugh Gibert and Charles Morgan, netted 25 new members and new interest in the ACLU.

o We hope to have a similar affair in Augusta soon. Members in other communities who would like to hold a public meeting or a private party to get new ACLU members should write to our office -- 52 Fairlie Street, N. W., Atlanta. Our Executive Director, Mrs. Robin, will be glad to plan such an event with you in detail.

NATIONAL CIVIL LIBERTIES BRIEFS...ACLU scored the Johnson Administration for ordering the W.E.B. DuBois Clubs to register as a communist-front organization under the Subversive Activities Control Act. The action is "especially offensive", ACLU said, because the government knows that Supreme Court decisions "clearly indicate that if communist-front provisions of the law ever reach the Court, they would undoubtedly be found unconstitutional..."

The banning of two speakers at the University of North Carolina has re-opened a long-standing controversy about free speech on the campus. Although the University President and several faculty spokesmen favored appearances by Herbert Aptheker and Frank Wilkinson, the Trustees' Executive Committee, chaired by North Carolina Governor Moore, overruled them. As a result, however, future speaking invitations will be reviewed by chancellors of state campuses, not trustees. This is a partial victory, but falls short of the position of student leaders and the AAUP, which sought no restriction on the selection of campus speakers.

The ACLU has launched a legal attack to rid the new Medicare law of a non-Communist oath required to qualify for hospital insurance benefits. One of the plaintiffs in the ACLU suit is Mrs. Sigmund K. Pollitzer, 95, a widely known educator and a founder of the Encampment for Citizenship. Another is Mrs. Alice C. Evans, 85, for 35 years an outstanding government bacteriologist. The ACLU complaint charges that the oath is a violation of the Fifth Amendment, is a bill of attainder becauses it imposes penalties without benefit of a judicial trial, is an ex post facto law, and is an invasion of the right of privacy.

High Court Asked to Rule on Confessions

The ACLU has urged the U.S. Supreme Court to rule that confessions obtained in police stations are illegal if, during interrogation, the defendant is denied the right to a lawyer. In February the Union filed an amicus brief asking the Court to throw out a series of police station confessions where counsel was denied. Five cases — from Arizona, California, New Jersey, and New York — all raising the same point were joined for argument before the high court on March 1.

The Union's brief urges the Supreme Court to extend its 1965 decision in Escobedo v. Illinois which held that incriminating statements elicited from a 22-year-old murder suspect during a police interrogation designed to "get him" to confess his guilt, were inadmissable at trial. Escobedo's several requests to see his attorney were ignored by the police. The Court ruled that Escobedo had been denied "the Assistance of Counsel" in violation of the Sixth Amendment.

Fifth Amendment Privilege

In its current brief the ACLU says that in weighing the right of the suspect to a lawyer during police interrogation against the alleged police "need" to get confessions, the Court in its Escobedo decision struck the balance "in favor of the accused." It urged the Court to do so again, explaining that to give real meaning to the privilege against self-incrimination a suspect's lawyer must be available to him in the police station.

The Union's position is in sharp contrast with that of the Justice Department, which urged the high court not to extend the right of counsel into the police station, lest it curb interrogation of suspects.

The ACLU brief was prepared by Professors Anthony G. Amsterdam and Paul J. Mishkin of the University of Pennsylvania Law School; Cooperating Attorneys Raymond J. Bradley, H. Robert Fiebach, and Peter Hearn; and Legal Director Melvin L. Wulf.

HUMAN FAMILY

Every human being has the right to freedom of movement and of residence within the confines of his own country; and, when there are just reasons for it, the right to emigrate to other countries and take up residence there. The fact that one is a citizen of a particular state does not detract in any way from his membership in the human family as a whole, nor from his citizenship in the world community.

ACLU Representing Lynd, Hayden In Action vs. Department of State

The American Civil Liberties Union announced on March 10 that it would represent Staughton Lynd and Thomas Hayden, prominent critics of U.S. policy in Vietnam, in a new legal challenge of the State Department's authority to cancel citizens' passports as a penalty for traveling to prohibited areas.

Lynd, an assistant professor of history at Yale, and Hayden, a founder of Students for a Democratic Society, with Herbert Aptheker, director of the Institute for Marxist Studies, flew last December to Hanoi and Peking on a private peace-seeking mission. Their passports were revoked in February following their return.

ACLU General Counsel Edward J. Ennis and Cooperating Attorney David Carliner, both members of the Union's Board, will represent Lynd and Hayden. Aptheker be represented by his attorney, John Abt.

The Union will challenge the State Department's right to withdraw the war critics' passports and to forbid them from traveling anywhere outside the U.S. because they have gone where the Secretary of State said they may not.

Union to Reargue Zemel Case

The ACLU will also reargue the position it asserted in the U.S. Supreme Court last May, that the State Department's refusal to validate a Connecticut businessman's passport for tourist travel to Cuba in 1962 was a deprivation of the "liberty of personal movement protected by both the First and Fifth Amendments." The high court ruled against the Union, 6-3.

President's Role Limited

"According to the U.S. Constitution," Executive Director John de J. Pemberton Jr. noted in announcing the Union's defense of Lynd and Hayden, "laws restricting the liberty of the people can be enacted only by the Congress. The President's role in representing the nation in the conduct of foreign affairs cannot be transmuted into a constitutional power to abridge the exercise of the individual's freedom of movement, a personal liberty which itself is granted by the Constitution."

The case was scheduled for trial March 30 in federal court in Washington, D.C.

Immediate Use of Passport Sought

In a separate action, the ACLU on March 16 asked the U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C., to compel the State Department to return Staughton Lynd's passport so that he could meet overseas speaking commitments in April. Lynd has accepted invitations from the Committee on Nuclear Disarmament to speak at an April 9 meeting in London, and from the Norwegian Students' Association to participate in a Vietnam "teach-in" in Oslo.

Union Challenges Medicare Loyalty Oath On Behalf of Three Women—70, 85, 95

The ACLU in late February launched a legal attack to rid the Medicare law of a provision that requires some two million elderly persons to take a non-Communist oath in order to qualify for benefits. Suit was filed in New York and Washington, D.C., federal court.

The New York action is on behalf of Mrs. Louis B. Weiss, 70, and her mother, Mrs. Sigmund K. Pollitzer, 95. Mrs. Weiss, a social worker, is vice-president of the Wiltwyck School for Boys. Mrs. Pollitzer, long a civic leader, is a founder of the Encampment for Citizenship.

The Washington suit was filed on behalf of Miss Alice C. Evans, 85, a retired senior bacteriologist in the U.S. Public Health Service and a former president of the Society of American Bacteriologists.

Mrs. Weiss, Mrs. Pollitzer, and Miss Evans have refused on principle to sign the Medicare application which includes this question: "Are you now, or have you been during the past 12 months, a member of any organization which is required to register under the Internal Security Act of 1950 as a communist-action organization, a communist-front organization, or a communist-infiltrated organization?"

The ACLU charges that both the disclaimer oath and the related Section 103 (b) of the Medicare law abridge the two women's freedom of speech and association, deprive them of due process, and contravene the Ninth Amendment, which protects the individual from governmental infringement of rights not specifically mentioned in the first eight amendments of the Bill or Rights. Adding that the oath curtails their Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination, the Union contends that Section 103 (b) is a bill of attainder, imposing a penalty on the two women without a judicial trial, and is an ex post facto law. The ACLU further charges that the Section imposes cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Eighth Amendment and is an invasion of privacy.

The Union's suits were prepared by ACLU Cooperating Attorney William D. Zabel, Legal Director Melvin L. Wulf, and Washington Director Lawrence Speiser.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTION TO PARTICULAR WARS

BY ROBERT BIERSTEDT

Robert Bierstedt

A member of the ACLU's Board of Directors since 1962, Dr. Bierstedt is chairman of the Department of Sociology and anthropology at New York University. He got his A.B. at the University of Iowa in 1934, and did his graduate work at Columbia and Harvard. Before joining the N.Y.U. faculty he taught and lectured at Columbia, Bennington, Bard, the University of Washington, Wellesley, the University of Illinois, C.C. N.Y., Stanford, the University of Edinburgh, and Oxford. During World War II he served in the Navy. This article appeared originally in the New York University Heights Daily News.

Conscientious objection to participation in any and all wars, based upon religious conviction, has during most of the lifetime of this nation been accepted as a ground for exemption from military service. It is accepted now.

The man who registers for the draft and who wants to claim exemption on the grounds of conscience is asked two questions, the first of which is whether he believes in a Supreme Being and the second whether he is so convinced a pacifist that he would oppose all wars. If he can answer both of these questions in the affirmative and if, in addition, he can claim bona fide membership in a pacifist religious organization (The Society of Friends, Mennonites, Jehovah's Witnesses, for example) then, although his sincerity will properly be tested, he has a chance of winning his plea. He has an additional chance if he is willing to accept noncombatant service.

Principle Counts as God

The first of these questions, however (although it still appears on the form), is unconstitutional as a result of the Supreme Court decision in the Seeger case. The attorneys for Seeger, formerly a dedicated Catholic, managed to convince the Court that his objection to war was built on the highest moral principle and that this belief, though now non-theistic, was a central part of his being. In addition, although the Government has no constitutional obligation to grant exemption of any kind, once it does so it may not discriminate between classes of objectors on religious grounds, because such discrimination would violate the principle of separation of church and state as guaranteed in the First Amendment.

Non-Pacifist Objector

The second question, which requires conscientious refusal to serve in all wars as a condition of exemption, has recently risen to public attention because of the United States engagement in Vietnam. Is is possible to object to Vietnam on conscientious grounds and still retain the right conscientiously to participate in some other war? Does selective scruple make sense? The answer so far has been in the negative.

The argument for the negative view rests on the conviction that no citizen, in a nation where all are subject to a rule of law and not of men, can be permitted to pick and choose the wars in which he will participate. To permit this privilege would be to make an administrative chaos out of the draft and would introduce intolerable inequities (themselves immoral) into the treatment of citizens. It would furthermore permit those subject to the draft to make their decisions on political rather than on moral grounds. An earnest Communist, for example, might use this exemption, in a hypothetical case, to fight against Spain but not against the Soviet Union, to fight against Nazi oppression before the Nazi-Soviet Pact of 1939 and to decline to do so afterward, and thus make his objection a matter of political expediency rather than of morality. Such a man would represent a threat to the security of the country that the objector to all wars does not.

These arguments have an indubitable cogency. No one, I take it, would contend that the prerogative of decisions on whether or not to serve can rest on political grounds. To do so would be to assert the will of a minority over a majority, and this is unthinkable in a democracy except in the exercise of constitutionally protected rights. It is still possible to contend, however, that there are moral reasons for refusal to participate in some wars and that these reasons do not apply to all wars.

Moral Context of War

One can adopt the view, for example, that it is possible conscientiously to participate in just wars but not in unjust wars, and this is a distinction that finds support in most American religious groups. On this view it was morally right and proper to join the military effort against Hitler in World War II because Hitler was an international criminal who could be controlled and stopped in no other way.

One can similarly argue the possibility of conscientious participation in defensive war but not in offensive war. Thus, it would be proper to spring to the defense of one's country when it is in imminent danger of invasion or attack by a foreign army near its borders but not to join an army which is engaged 10,000 miles away from the borders of its own country—because the latter conforms to an almost classic definition of aggression no matter what political or ideological issues may be involved.

One can say that, on grounds of conscience, he would participate in some wars but not in atomic wars, not in wars in which bacteriological weapons are employed, not in wars in which poison gas is used against the enemy, not in wars in which peasant villages are levelled by napalm bombs, not in wars in which toxic chemicals are sprayed on the rice fields of civilians, and not in wars in which there is indiscriminate aerial bombing of civilian population.

Finally, one might agree to serve in a United Nations police force even, let us say, in a place where killing might be required, because this would be legitimate use of force as a peace-keeping device, but not in the armed services of his own country in the same place because the latter lack the sanction of legitimacy. In this case, in short, one can assert the moral right not to participate in an illegal enterprise.

For these reasons, all of them defensible on moral grounds, it would appear that conscientious objection to particular wars can be as valid, and as truly entertained, as conscientious objection to all wars.

To these contentions two criticisms can be offered. The first of these is that claims for conscientious objection to particular wars would be difficult if not impossible to administer. The answer to this is that so are claims to conscientious objection to all wars. Attorneys active in these cases find no justification for the view that the former would be more difficult than the latter.

Nobility of Conscience

The second concerns the ubiquitous question of slackers, some of whom appear in every situation of this kind and who are willing to use false claims of conscience in order to escape military service. The answer to this is that such people constitute an insignificant minority of those whose claims for conscientious exemption are granted. The reason is simple: to claim exemption on the grounds of conscience, in opposition to the public opinion of a large and powerful nation, is to accept a stigma which only the most courageous can sustain. In order to do so one must endure the derision of the community and suffer the ultimate sanction of ostracism. This too requires a kind of bravery—a bravery the more noble because it is rare.

As John F. Kennedy once wrote, "War will exist until that distant day when the conscientious objector enjoys the same reputation and prestige that the warrior does today."

ACLU Backs Self-Rule for People of Guam and V.I.

The ACLU went on record last month as wholeheartedly supporting the following bills being considered by the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

¶ H.R. 8250, H.R. 8322, and H.R. 11775, to provide for the popular election of the Governor of Guam.

¶ H.R. 13294 and H.R. 13298, to amend the Guam Organic Act to provide for the election of members of the Legislature of Guam by districts.

¶ H.R. 11777, to provide for the popular election of the Governor of the Virgin Islands.

¶ H.R. 13277, to amend the Virgin Islands Organic Act to provide for the reapportionment of the V.I. Legislature.

Brennan Addressing Liberties Assembly

Supreme Court Justice William J. Brennan Jr. will speak on "The Supreme Court and the Bill of Rights over Fifty Years" at the dinner meeting of the 18th annual National Civil Liberties Clearing House Conference, to be held at the Hilton in Washington, D.C., on April 21 and 22.

Lawrence Speiser, Director of the Union's Washington Office, is chairman of the Clearing House and will preside at the Conference.

Questions to be taken up include segregated justice in the South; whether our free society can cope with the rising crime rate without sacrificing our concepts of justice and due process; and how our expanding cities can avert the threat of violence implicit in their spreading slums, increasing racial isolation, and growing tensions.

Speakers scheduled include John Doar, Assistant Attorney General and head of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division; Roger Wilkins, new director of the government's Community Relations Service; James Farmer, director-designate of the new National Center for Community Action Education; Joseph L. Rauh Jr., counsel to the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights; and James Vorenberg, director of the President's National Crime Commission and of the Justice Department's Office of Criminal Justice.

SICK POSSUM

Pointing to the rising tide of Klan violence in Bogalusa and elsewhere in the state, Louisiana ACLU Board member Steven H. Rubin told the Baton Rouge Council on Human Relations in January that "on the clearest night of the year the Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities couldn't spot the difference between an un-American activity and a sick possum."

Arizona ACLU Hits 'Pro-Negro' Bill as Endangering Textbooks

The Arizona Civil Liberties Union is opposing a bill before the State Legislature that would prohibit the use of textbooks in public schools thought to portray inaccurately the contribution of Negroes and other ethnic groups to the development of the U.S. and Arizona. The Union's affiliate holds that it would lead to the censorship of school books and that there are more appropriate methods of developing racial and ethnic understanding in the public schools.

Union Scores Government for Ordering DuBois Clubs to Register as Subversive

The ACLU denounced the Johnson Administration last month for ordering the W. E. B. DuBois Clubs to register as a "communist-front" organization under the Subversive Activities Control Act. In a March 7 telegram to Attorney General Katzenbach, Executive Director John de J. Pemberton Jr. said the government's action is an attack on political dissent and "seems to be an effort to intimidate the organization from carrying on its unpopular program."

The Union said that the historical roots of the subversive activities law are "planted deep in McCarthyism, a period of national disgrace in which constitutional guarantees were so flatly abrogated.

"One would have hoped that the passage of 16 years would have instructed this Administration that the evil of McCarthyism can be prevented only when the government takes affirmative steps to protect the right of all political opinions to be heard. But this hope is dimmed when the government takes affirmative steps, through the device of a registration order, to suppress a minority point of view."

The Administration's action, the ACLU continued, "is a signal to the emotionally unstable elements of the population to give vent to their belief in McCarthyism by physical attacks against the DuBois Clubs. The bombing of the group's headquarters in San Francisco and the physical abuse to which the Clubs' supporters in Brooklyn were subjected, without any assistance from the police, illustrates the great harms which the government's action can provoke."

Pemberton directed special fire against the registration order because the DuBois Clubs have been identified as one of the leading groups opposed to U.S. policy in Vietnam. "The inevitable inference of the measures you have taken is that the government is now beginning to impose sanctions on critics of its Vietnam policy. We know of no more dangerous step that could be taken in the course of the national debate now going on. It is precisely at such a time that we need to hear the comments of all citizens, to assure that the national policies pursued will reflect the will of the people those policies will so drastically affect."

The Union added that it found the order "especially offensive" because the government knows that Supreme Court decisions "clearly indicate that if the communist-front provisions of the law ever reach the Court on the merits, they would undoubtedly be held unconstitutional or made effectively unenforceable."

Assistant Attorney General J. Walter Yeagley replied to the ACLU that "all Americans have the freedom to organize and express their dissent against government policies. However, young people who might consider joining the DuBois Clubs are entitled to know the nature and sponsorship of the organization."

Denial of Counsel in Draft Work Decried

A Selective Service regulation which explicitly deprives a draft registrant of the right to counsel when he appears before a local draft board was scored in February by the ACLU as a violation of due process of law. In an action bulletin to its 36 affiliates, the Union attacked the constitutionality of the regulation and urged that legal attacks be mounted against it.

The bulletin was prepared as a guide for ACLU attorneys aiding students involved in anti-Vietnam war demonstrations who may face reclassification to 1-A. It emphasizes that Section 1624.1(b) of the regulations is the only known regulation of a major federal agency which specifically denies the right to counsel. The regulation, which states that "no registrant may be represented before the local draft board by anyone acting as attorney or legal counsel," presumably was adopted to insure that the hearings, often conducted by draft board members who are laymen, be informal and non-technical.

Arguing for the right of the draft registrant to be accompanied by counsel, the Union says that "there would be no other way of getting into the record important and relevant facts or of keeping out irrelevant and prejudicial material that would forever be a part of the registrant's record, even on review in the courts."

The ACLU adds that "the local board hearing is the only opportunity the registrant has for building a factual record. It is at the local hearing, therefore, that the right to counsel—to be effective—must be observed."

"Draft boards," the Union points out, "are almost always composed of laymen unlearned in the law. Yet, a local board must decide such clearly legal questions as the basis for reclassification of a registrant for delinquency or when a registrant qualifies as a minister or a conscientious objector under the revised case law."

The result, notes the ACLU, "is that a virtually final decision which may subject a registrant to imprisonment if disobeyed is made by a local board which does not enjoy the advice of counsel committed solely to the protection of the rights of the registrant."

Copies of the Union's 3000-word memorandum, prepared by Assistant Legal Director Eleanor Holmes Norton for ACLU attorneys, are available on request.

Oregon ACLU Backs Suit to Stop Sale to Church School

Action to block the sale of 24 acres of federally-owned land at ten percent of its fair market value at Concordia College, a Lutheran institution in Portland, was instituted last month in a suit backed by Oregon affiliate of the ACLU.

The suit, brought by the local public school district and four taxpayers, contends that such a sale would violate the First Amendment in that the effect would be to contribute approximately $108,000 of tax-raised funds to support a college whose purpose is to advance religion.

RULE OF REASON

"The function of the ACLU is simply to make sure that submission is made only to the rule of reason, not to some reductio ad absurdum miscalled reason. Being controlled by fallible men it has undoubtedly made errors, and presumably will make more. But the factual record of forty-five years . . . shows that it has done such service as to justify and far more than justify its existence, warranting its support by lovers of American liberty."

NYCLU-Backed Bill to Amend Adoptions Passes Assembly

By a vote of 91 to 58 New York State's Assembly last month approved a bill, strongly approved by the Union's New York affiliate, which would end the mandatory matching of religions in the adoption of children.

Under New York's present law, all adoption placements must be made, if practicable, with persons of the same religion as the child's natural parent.

The bill passed by the Assembly would change this by giving the natural parent the absolute right to determine the religion in which the child shall be raised, but also permitting placement to be made without regard to religion in the absence of such parental mandate.

Vietnam Crisis Revives Mass. Constitutional Rights Council

With the cooperation of the Union's Bay State affiliate, the Massachusetts Council for Constitutional Rights was revived last month to help counter threats to free speech and assembly brought on by protests against U.S. policies in Vietnam.

The Council, which played an active part in the resistance to McCarthyism a dozen years ago, is made up of leaders of twenty or more community organizations in Boston.

Correction: Wisconsin ACLU Did Not Back KKK Organizer

Last November CIVIL LIBERTIES reported that the Wisconsin ACLU had protested the refusal of the Wisconsin Secretary of State to grant a charter of incorporation to a chapter of the Klan.

The story was based on an erroneous editorial in the Madison Capital Times.

What happened was that WCLU Chairman William G. Rice received by phone a complaint from a would-be KKK-incorporator; Rice said the WCLU would investigate; the Ku Kluxer gave a press interview and was reported to have said (which he later denied) that the Wisconsin ACLU would support him if he sued the Secretary of State.

"Meanwhile," reports Rice, "the complainant resigned in wrath from the KKK. And our Board tabled the issue."

MESSAGE TO 47%

Fifty-three percent of the Union's members have responded so far to the 1966 Key Year Drive. Many members have doubled their 1965 contributions.

ACLU Development Director Gordon K. Haskell says that the remaining 47% will have to respond with renewals averaging no less than last year's average contribution—$17.28—if the Union is to achieve its goal for 1966.

With the tensions of war, the continuing civil rights revolution, and mounting pressures to curb due process rights in connection with the "war on crime," the ACLU's responsibilities for the defense of freedom have never been greater—nor its need of financial commitment from its members.

If you are one of the 47%, will you renew now? And be as generous as you can!

Statement Released On Iowa Child Case

The February 8 decision of the Iowa Supreme Court awarding custody of seven-year-old Mark Painter to his maternal grand-parents rather than to his father attracted national attention. Press reports gave the impression that the decision was based primarily on the Court's assessment of the grand-parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Bannister, as possessing a "stable, dependable, conventional, middle-class, Middle West background," while holding the father, Harold W. Painter, unfit as an "arty Bohemian . . . an agnostic or atheist . . . a political liberal who got into difficulty in a job at the University of Washington for his support of the activities of the American Civil Liberties Union."

What the press did not report was that the Court said it placed "a great deal of reliance" upon the testimony of Dr. Glenn R. Hawkes, a child psychologist, head of the Department of Child Development at Iowa State University. Dr. Hawkes, after extensive interviews and tests with Mark and the Bannisters, concluded that it was not in Mark's best interests to be removed from his grandparent's home where he has lived for the past few years.

The Union last month issued a statement on the case, which concludes:

"The ACLU does not function, nor does it possess the expertise, to evaluate the psychological and emotional foundations of the Iowa Supreme Court's ruling. Together with our affiliate, the Iowa Civil Liberties Union, we have carefully studied the civil liberties aspects of the Court's opinion—its observations concerning Mr. Painter's political and religious affiliations, beliefs, and activities which, as grounds for decision, would raise serious constitutional questions. Though profoundly disturbed by the language in which these observations are cast, we are unable to conclude that the decision was premised on them, rather than upon the Court's finding—independently of them—as to the welfare and best interests of the child.

"The Court might properly look at the whole life and circumstances of the child's father and of his grandparents in judging the effect of a change in his home upon his welfare. It may not, in our view, prefer the political or religious orientation of one over the other, and we do not find from the opinion that it has done so.

"Mr. Painter is filing a petition for rehearing in the Iowa Supreme Court, and the Union will give careful attention to subsequent developments in the case. It will not participate at this stage."

Copies of the ACLU's full five-page statement are available on request.

Caribbean Institute Offers Roger Baldwin Scholarship

The Caribbean Institute and Study Center for Latin America, at the Inter American University of Puerto Rico, has established a series of Roger N. Baldwin Scholarships for Students-in-Exile. Named for the founder of the ACLU, these competitive awards for undergraduate study in the arts and sciences vary from full tuition to room, board, and tuition. Only students denied an education for political reasons are eligible.

Courses are taught in Spanish and English. Applications will be received up to May 1 for entrance August 15, 1966. For further information write CISCLA, P.O. Box 422, Inter American University, San German, P.R.

Clifford Durr of Alabama Wins NYCLU Lasker Award

Clifford J. Durr, of Montgomery, Alabama, former Federal Communications Commissioner, received the Florina Lasker Civil Liberties Award for 1966 and the $1000 that goes with it, at the NYCLU's annual luncheon on February 22.

Durr was honored not only for his defense of civil liberties while with the FCC but also because for the past twenty years he has been one of the handful of Southern attorneys who have consistently defended civil liberties and civil rights. "He has stayed in the South," the Union's New York affiliate said, "despite tremendous social and economic pressures and has been a guiding light to young attorneys who are fighting for Southern justice today."

David L. Bazelon, Chief Judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, was the luncheon speaker. He attacked current proposals to strengthen law and order by depriving accused persons of basic due process rights.

CHIEF JENKINS, COMMUNITY LEADERS, SET FOR ANNUAL MEETING, JUNE 2ND

The Annual Meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia will take place on Thursday, June 2nd at 8 p.m. at the Jewish Community Center, 1745 Peachtree Street, N. W., Atlanta.

The theme of the meeting will be: Police Powers - Constructively Used or Unconstitutionally Abused? A panel of experts will participate in a free-wheeling discussion of this subject: Atlanta Police Chief Herbert T. Jenkins; Q. V. Williamson, member of the Police Aldermanic Committee; Howard Moore, Jr., and Glenn Zell, attorneys. The Panel moderator will be Don McEvoy, Director of the Georgia Region of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, which sponsors the nation-wide Police Institute each year.

Police procedures should prove an especially timely topic, since the Georgia ACLU will release a 57-page study, Police Procedures in Atlanta, on May 14th. (see page 2) This should provide background material for a lively -- perhaps heated -- discussion, with time for participation from the floor.

Our Annual Meeting will also be the occasion for presenting the First Annual Georgia Civil Liberties Award, voted by the Board of Directors. The recipient's identity will be a closely-guarded secret until the moment of presentation. Even he -- or she -- will not know until the announcement is made.

We need your help: Although the seats are not reserved, and there is no admission charge, we need to know in advance how many members will attend, so we can estimate how much space will be available when we invite the press, television and representatives from other organizations. Please fill out the coupon on the last page and tell us whether or not you plan to come, and how many non-members you will bring as guests. Please return it to us promptly.

REMEMBER THE DATE: THURSDAY, JUNE 2ND, 8 P.M.

GEORGIA ACLU RELEASES POLICE PROCEDURES STUDY

On May 14th, the Georgia ACLU released a 57-page study, Police Procedures in Atlanta, dealing with police practices in arrests, searches, seizures and interrogations as they are directed against the poor and against minority group members. One section discusses the treatment of alcoholics, prostitutes and homosexuals. Another chapter examines how citizens' complaints of police misconduct are handled, and the concluding chapter presents the case for and against a Civilian Review Board.

The purpose of the study is spelled out in the Introduction as follows:

"...Police attitudes and procedures toward all who are poor, Negro, unprotected by competent legal counsel, and who have no public channel of redress against injustice need to be examined and understood in terms of their effect not only on the individual in his encounter with the police, but on the social health of the entire community.

"Let it be clearly understood that our goal is not a sensational expose of the Atlanta Police Department, nor is it to make invidious comparisons between it and other police departments. The Atlanta Department is trying to maintain order and apprehend lawbreakers. It numbers among its leaders some outstanding, dedicated men. It is faced with the same problems as many other city police departments: accelerating urbanization which inevitably means accelerating urban crime; inadequate staff, inadequate salaries and inadequate budget, for now and in the foreseeable future.

"Most of all, we must point out that the Atlanta Police Department does not operate in a vacuum. Its attitudes and activities stem from the customs, the traditions and the goals of the general community and its leadership....If (for example) a large section of the public is indifferent to discrimination against Negroes in jobs, housing and the administration of courtroom justice, then it follows that illegal police practices against Negroes will be sanctioned as well.

"The activities of the police are selected for special study ...not because the police stand alone in their attitudes, but simply because police activities are in the area of the special competence of the ACLU, whereas some other social phenomena are not; and because it is around the police that community resentments seem to crystallize. This makes understanding of police methods a matter of immediate and urgent concern."

A limited number of copies of Police Procedures in Atlanta are available to members on request.

GEORGIA CIVIL LIBERTIES BRIEFS:

Racial Classifications Queried: ACLU wrote Mayor Allen: "It has come to our attention that the Application for Examination Form distributed to prospective employees by the Atlanta Personnel Department asks for the race of the applicant." Although not illegal, the letter pointed out, since local government is exempt from the classification prohibition of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, "it is surely against public policy and is harmful to good community relations..."

A member of the Mayor's staff replied by telephone that classification was used for statistical purposes and was not used in a discriminatory way. We responded by pointing out that whatever the intent, it was bound to be interpreted by applicants as discrimination; that the more important statistic was how many Negroes the city had actually employed and this could be determined without classification questions. The exchange was shared with human relations groups in the employment field for further investigation.

ACLU Counsel Provided: A) In the case of a white lady arrested by Macon Police after neighbors stated they had seen two Negro teen-agers enter her home; B) In the case of a white lady arrested by DeKalb County Police when seen driving in a car with a Negro couple.

ACLU Testifies before School Board on Prayer: A minority School Board move in DeKalb County to introduce a resolution which would permit prayer in school was challenged by an ACLU statement presented to the Board by Dr. Alexander McPhedran. Although the resolution was dropped for the present, there have been many reports that individual schools in the metropolitan area have resumed classroom prayers. An ACLU questionnaire on this practice is now being prepared.

Georgia Membership Renewals Lag: Most ACLU affiliates, according to National figures recently released, have virtually completed membership renewals. The Georgia affiliate has fallen dangerously behind, with more than eighty members still not renewed. When your renewal reminder arrives, within the next few days, please pay promptly, and help us catch up.

Re-Hearing Is Urged In Ginzburg Decision

The ACLU asked the U.S. Supreme Court on April 17 to reconsider its newly announced standard for judging obscenity — which is based on the advertising matter regarding the allegedly obscene publication.

Five Years in Prison

The Union filed an amicus brief with the high court supporting the petition for rehearing sought by Ralph Ginzburg. Publisher of Eros magazine, Liaison — a biweekly newsletter, and "The Housewife's Handbook on Selective Promiscuity," Ginzburg was convicted and sentenced to spend five years in prison and pay a $28,000 fine for violating the federal obscenity law. The conviction was upheld, 5-4, by the Supreme Court on March 21.

In their brief, the ACLU and its Pennsylvania affiliate warned that the decision as it stands "is replete with dangerous implications for freedom of expression." And the Court's unprecedented inclusion of advertising as a ground for obscenity, the brief contends, "further obscures the already muddied waters of the law of obscenity."

The Union's brief terms the new guideline an "ill-conceived amendment" to the still existent obscenity test established eight years ago in Roth v. U.S. The three part Roth standard defined obscenity in these terms: (1) "the dominant theme of the material taken as a whole appeals to prurient interest in sex;" (2) "the material is patently offensive because it affronts contemporary community standards; (3) "the material is utterly without redeeming social value."

Roth Decision Nullified

The Union goes on to charge that the new formula of "pandering" as proof of obscenity "makes it possible to find obscenity without any of the three Roth elements." Where prurient interest is not "clearly demonstrable from the publications themselves," the brief points out, the Court now holds that "erotically arousing advertising" can stimulate the reader "to accept them as prurient." Where the "patent offensiveness of the material is dubious," the Court now says the "brazenness" of the advertising "heightens the offensiveness of the publications to those who are offended by such material." And the third Roth standard, of "redeeming social value," is nullified by the Court's ruling that "the circumstances of presentation and dissemination of material are equally relevant to determining whether social importance claimed for the material was pretence or reality."

The brief argues that the "sole justification in Roth for removing obscene expression from the protections of the First Amendment was that it was worthless to society." The Ginzburg obscenity rule, the Union contends, "for the first time operates to suppress publications with conceded social importance. And it does so on the basis of advertising which was itself not obscene and which described materials which were by definition not obscene either."

New Obscenity Standard Asked

In addition to asking for a new review of the Ginzburg case, the ACLU brief once again calls on the Court to adopt an obscenity standard protecting all published material under the First Amendment unless it creates a "clear and present danger" of anti-social conduct.

The ACLU's friend-of-the-court brief was prepared by Cooperating Attorneys Bernard A. Berkman and Murray Powlen, and Legal Director Melvin L. Wulf.

THE LAST MILE

Seven Americans were put to death by legal authorities in 1965. It was the first year on record that the number of executions fell below 10. In 1954 the total was 81; in 1962, 47; in 1963, 21; in 1964, 15.

Four states—New York, Vermont, Iowa, and West Virginia — last year abolished the death penalty except for special crimes. Capital punishment has been all but ended in thirteen states.

War on Poverty's Birth Control Rules Unlawful, Charges ACLU

The American Civil Liberties Union on March 29 charged that the government's restrictions on the use of federal funds in anti-poverty birth control programs violate certain basic indvidual rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

The Union said three Office of Economic Opportunity guidelines run counter to equal protection of the law. The main target of the attack is the OEO's prohibition on the distribution of funds for contraceptive aid to unmarried women or women living apart from their husbands.

In a letter to OEO Director Sargent Shriver, the Union's Executive Director John deJ. Pemberton Jr. asserted that when the government decides to pursue such a social objective as anti-poverty, "we believe its program should adhere to civil liberties standards. Adherence to these standards, particularly the guarantee of equality, is of vital significance in the family planning aspect of the program because family planning has such a central effect on the lives of the poor."

"Just as a criterion of race or religion would be regarded as unrelated to the purposes of the Anti-Poverty Act," Pemberton continued, "so a distinction drawn between married women living with their husbands and other women is discriminatory and a denial of equal protection of the law."

"It is evident from available studies," the ACLU spokesman continued, "that persons in higher income groups, married and unmarried alike, have access to medical contraceptive guidance. . . . It is equally evident that the poor, who are the concern of the program, do not have such access. In view of this fact and of the apparently high rate of illegitimacy in the low-income group, it seems clear that unmarried women or women living apart from their husbands have need for birth control guidance that is at least equal to that of similarly-situated women in higher income groups. Thus, we believe the OEO's limitation is an unwarranted discrimination against a class of persons which requires and should be eligible for the benefits of the Act."

Sterilization

The Union charged further discrimination against the poor in the OEO's guideline denying fund grants for "surgical procedures intended to result in sterilization." Pemberton declared that "the arbitrary denial of federal funds for surgical birth control (voluntary sterilization) when such treatment is indicated for health reasons and when the patient is made fully aware of the implications of sterilization, cannot be justified in view of the ease with which a wealthy person can obtain this treatment privately."

Censorship Charged

Finally, the Union challenged the OEO's prohibition on the use of its funds to publicize through the mass media the availability of the birth control program, as constituting "action on the part of a government agency that intentionally restricts dissemination of information to the public" and as amounting to "censorship."

Union Gets Howe Out of Fort Leavenworth on Bail

In late March the Union won a round in its legal battle on behalf of Lt. Henry Howe Jr. Following the ACLU's request to Supreme Court Justice Hugo F. Black, the Army Lieutenant was released on bail from Fort Leavenworth military prison pending the Union's appeal of his court-martial conviction.

His release was decided after high level consultation in Washington. Observers have indicated that the extreme concern of Army officials over the ACLU's double appeal on the lieutenant's behalf provided the impetus for his release.

Lt. Howe was convicted of disrespect for the President and conduct unbecoming an officer because of his participation—in off-duty hours and in civilian clothes —in an El Paso demonstration protesting the government's Vietnam policies. The Union is appealing his case to the Army Board of Review and, if necessary, to the final Court of Military Appeals.

INDEX DYING

Pope Paul VI in February abolised an agency that for four centuries placed books considered objectionable on the Roman Catholic Index. The Index itself was not abolished, but the section of the Holy Office for the censure of books was done away with.

Florida's Governor Haydon Burns has informed the state ACLU that his agreement to serve as a sponsor of the affiliate's tenth anniversary dinner (as reported in the February CIVIL LIBERTIES) was a mistake.

"Had my staff carefully reviewed the background of this organization," he explained, "my name would not have been associated with it."

ACLU Files Suit on Thompson's Burial

The ACLU has asked the U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C. to order the Defense Department to permit burial in Arlington National Cemetery of the ashes of Robert G. Thompson, a World War II soldier who was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, honorably discharged, and later convicted as a Communist Party leader under the Smith Act. The Union charged that the Pentagon had acted "beyond all statutory and constitutional authority" in barring the interment.

Sergeant Thompson received the nation's second highest military honor for valor in the 1943 New Guinea campaign. He was also recommended for promotion to the rank of captain—but was honorably discharged when he became ill the same year. He died in October 1965.

After cremation, his widow, Sylvia H. Thompson, on whose behalf the ACLU has filed suit, requested burial at Arlington. Cemetery officials approved the request and scheduled the interment for January 31. However, Mrs. Thompson's announcement of the planned burial set off protests from veterans' groups and led to an attack on the floor of Congress by Rep. Charles E. Bennett of Florida.

The protests prompted the Defense Department to ask the Attorney General for a legal opinion on whether the burial could be refused. On January 27 Katzenbach said that refusal would be justified under an Army regulation barring interment in a national cemetery of any veteran who has received a federal sentence of five or more years in prison.

Thompson was sentenced to a three-year term in 1949 for conspiring to teach and advocate the violent overthrow of the government. He jumped bail in 1951 when the conviction was affirmed by the Supreme Court. Two years later he was apprehended, convicted of contempt of court for jumping bail and sentenced to an additional four-year term. According to Attorney General Katzenbach's seven-page legal memorandum, the two sentences resulted from a "single proceeding" and, therefore, they meet the five-year provision of the Army regulation.

After receiving the Katzenbach opinion, the Defense Department further tightened national cemetery restrictions by barring burial of all persons convicted under various federal anti-subversive laws, including those sentenced to less than five years.

The Union asked the court to rule on the constitutionality of both the basic regulation and the 1966 amendment. It charges that their effect is to penalize the exercise of rights guaranteed by the First Amendment, and that the Defense Department has no authority to condition the right to burial upon conduct of the deceased after his honorable discharge from active duty.

THE LAWYER IN THE POLICE STATION

The Supreme Court is now weighing its decision in five important cases from Arizona, California, New Jersey, and New York. All raising the same issue—the right of a suspect to have counsel present while undergoing police interrogation—they were joined together and argued before the Court in March. What follows is the Summary of the ACLU's Argument as it appears in the Union's 67-page brief. Authors of the brief are Professors Anthony G. Amsterdam and Paul J. Mishkin of the University of Pennsylvania; Cooperating Attorneys Raymond J. Bradley, H. Robert Fiebach, and Peter Hearn of Philadelphia; and American Civil Liberties Union Legal Director Melvin L. Wulf of New York.

In Escobedo v. Illinois (1965), this Court held that the privilege against self-incrimination was violated when an accused's confession was obtained through police in-custody interrogation designed to elicit incriminating statements from him at a time when he was denied the presence of counsel, since the presence of counsel was necessary to protect the constitutional privilege. In so holding, the Court reached the natural culmination of its "involuntary" confession decisions, in light of its application of the privilege against self-incrimination to the States. The determination that Escobedo rests upon effective enforcement of the privilege against self-incrimination is not of mere academic interest, but vitally affects the proper application of the decision.

There can be no doubt that police custodial interrogation designed to elicit a confession is inherently violative of the privilege against self-incrimination. Therefore confessions obtained under such circumstances cannot be constitutionally admitted in State or federal criminal proceedings unless it has been shown that adequate safeguards were present to protect the privilege.

For reasons spelled out at length in this brief, under the present circumstances of police custodial interrogation designed to elicit a confession, the required safeguard is the presence of counsel.

A police warning of the subject's right to remain silent is not adequate. Neither is the granting of prior access to counsel, as distinguished from the presence of counsel. For these reasons it is immaterial that a subject of police custodial interrogation asked for or was able to obtain retained counsel. Effectuation of the privilege against self-incrimination, in these circumstances, requires the providing of counsel to all.

This does not mean that the effectuation of the privilege requires the presence of counsel in other than police custodial interrogation designed to elicit a confession. Nor does it mean that if other protective devices are devised and put into effect which effectively secure the privilege even in the police custodial situation, the presence of counsel would still be required.

A holding that, under the conditions of police interrogation as they normally exist today, the presence of counsel is necessary to protect the privilege against self-incrimination, should not foreclose a determination that other protective devices are acceptable when and if such devices are put into effective use.

Finally, the Court must reject the argument that the privilege against self-incrimination should not be enforced in the face of a police "need" for its nonenforcement. Even if such "need" conflicting with the privilege were shown to exist, the Constitution requires that the conflict be resolved in favor of effective enforcement of the constitutional privilege.

However, this issue need not be reached as the asserted police "need" has not been shown to exist, and the burden of production of evidence clearly rests on the prosecution. Not only have prosecutors not produced any convincing evidence, the assertions which they make are not even supported by considered legislative determination of police need.

Thus in a scale which opposes unsupported assertions of necessity by police and prosecutors on the one side, and effectuation of the individual's constitutional right not to be compelled to incriminate himself on the other, the balance must be struck on the side of the constitutional right.

ACLU Succeeds in Obtaining A 90-Day Passport for Lynd

Through Cooperating Attorney David Carliner, who is also a member of the Union's Board of Directors, the ACLU was successful last month in persuading the State Department to issue Staughton Lynd a temporary passport. This allowed the Yale history professor to fill his anti-Vietnam war speaking engagements in London and Oslo.

No decision has yet been rendered in the Union's basic challenge — on behalf of Lynd and Thomas Hayden — of the State Department's power to revoke a passport because its owner travels to certain proscribed countries. The two men flew to Hanoi and Peking last December.

SOUTHERN JOB

The ACLU seeks to add to its Southern Regional Office staff a Field Development Officer, charged with organizing local chapters and with assisting existing affiliates throughout the South in fund-raising and membership promotion.

Pasadena Chapter Honors A Founder: Upton Sinclair

The Southern California affiliate of the ACLU was founded in 1923, shortly after Upton Sinclair was arrested for attempting to read the Constitution of the United States at a mass meeting during a strike.

On March 20 the Pasadena Chapter gathered to honor the 86-year-old battler for social justice at a garden party. Sinclair reminisced about how the affiliate had quickly acquired "respectability" by naming a Congregational minister, the Rev. Clinton J. Taft, as its Executive Director. Taft, who resigned his pulpit, remained on the ACLU's staff for twenty years.

Sinclair was reminded how, after the organization had been in existence a couple of weeks, the editor of the Los Angeles Examiner had phoned him and asked, "Sinclair, how long is this thing going on?" The already world-famous author answered, "Until we have civil liberties in Los Angeles."

NYCLU Defends SDS Anti-WarSubwayAd

The NYCLU filed a complaint in Federal District Court on March 23 challenging the New York City Transit Authority's refusal to carry paid political advertising in subway trains protesting the U.S. actions in Vietnam.

The complaint asserts the Authority denied Students for a Democratic Society its free speech and equal-protection-of-the-law rights when it refused to accept posters which pictured a Vietnamese child with napalm burns. The poster's text reads:

> "WHY ARE WE BURNING, TORTURING, KILLING THE PEOPLE OF VIETNAM? . . . TO PREVENT FREE ELECTIONS. PROTEST this anti-democratic war. WRITE President Lyndon B. The ACLU's New York affiliate noted that "the same poster was prominently displayed on the cover of the New York Times Magazine of November 7, 1965. Surely what the Times deems fit to print, the Transit Authority cannot suppress."

The NYCLU also charged that the Transit Authority has frequently accepted advertising which expresses strong political views. It cited a recent ad for Readers Digest attacking opponents of U.S. policy in Vietnam.

LIBERTIES CENTER

Columbia University and Teachers College have announced the formation of the Center for Research and Education in American Liberties.

Director of the Center is Alan F. Westin, a member of the Union's Board of Directors and associate professor of law and government at Columbia.

The Center will lead a national program for improving the teaching of civil liberties.

ACLU Files Brief in Bond's Appeal to Supreme Court

In a brief filed March 28 with the U.S. Supreme Court, the ACLU denounced as an unconstitutional violation of free speech and association the ouster of civil rights leader Julian Bond from his seat in the Georgia Legislature because of his expressed pacifist opposition to U.S. participation in the Vietnam war. The Union urged the Court to strike down the 2-1 decision of a lower court upholding the Georgia Representatives' action.

Bond, elected last fall to the Georgia House, is an officer of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee. Because he had supported a SNCC statement critical of U.S. policies in Vietnam, he was expelled from his seat by a 184-12 vote—and was charged with treason by one of his fellow legislators.

The ACLU represented him before the special three-man federal court in Atlanta, but after its 2-1 verdict Bond chose different counsel for his appeal. The Union presented its civil liberties arguments to the Supreme Court in an amicus curiae brief prepared by Southern Regional Office Director Charles Morgan Jr., Legal Director Melvin L. Wulf, and Morris Brown, Chairman of the Georgia ACLU Lawyers Committee.

8 Labor Unions Join ACLU In Appeal v. Taft-Hartley

In a friend-of-the-court brief filed on March 24, the ACLU, joined by eight national labor unions, asked the U.S. Supreme Court to hold unconstitutional the non-Communist affidavit provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The brief supported six officers and employees of the International Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers Union who were convicted of conspiring to defraud the government by falsely denying that they were members of or affiliated with the Communist Party.

Associated with the ACLU on the brief are the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Amalgamated Meat Cutters, American Federation of Teachers, International Typographical Union, National Farmers Union, Transport Workers, United Automobile Workers, and the United Packinghouse Workers Union.

The brief attacks the non-Communist oath provision as a bill of attainder—legislative punishment without judicial trial.

Union Hails Bail Reform Bill as Big Advance Step

ACLU Washington Director Lawrence Speiser testified in mid-March before a Subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee in favor of a Bail Reform Bill now before Congress.

One version has passed the Senate and another is being considered by the House. Both embody sweeping reforms, endorsed by the Union, regarding the imprisonment of accused persons prior to trial in federal courts.

Speiser suggested a number of amendments but told the Subcommittee that even without his recommended changes "both bills would represent a giant step forward in alleviating the injustices which have occurred under our present bail practices."

Union Battles HUAC In High Court Appeal

In mid-March the ACLU renewed its decades-long attack on the House Un-American Activities Committee by filing an amicus brief with the U.S. Supreme Court in the 11-year-old case of John T. Gojack.

Gojack, then an officer of the United Electrical, Radio, and Machine Workers of America, was convicted of contempt of Congress for refusing to answer some of the Committee's questions during an investigation of alleged Communist influence in labor unions. He was originally indicted in 1955, but after extended proceedings the Supreme Court threw out the indictment. A few months later he was reindicted for refusing to answer at the original hearing questions about his own and others' membership in the Communist Party, his association with alleged Party members, and his activities with the American Peace Crusade. Convicted, his conviction was upheld last year by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

The Union's brief challenges the constitutionality of the HUAC's proceedings and stresses the vagueness of the resolution creating the Committee—empowering it to investigate the "Un-American propaganda"—which, the brief says, abridges First Amendment rights. Contending that the HUAC was not investigating for the purpose of preparing legislation, the Union points to the Committee's deliberate exposure of suspected Communists. This procedure the brief likens to an "attainder," prohibited by the Constitution.

The brief was prepared by ACLU General Counsel Osmond K. Fraenkel and Edward J. Ennis, Legal Director Melvin L. Wulf, and Cooperating Attorneys Frank J. Donner and David Rein.

Massachusetts ACLU Executive Observes South Boston Beating; Meets with Mayor

Luther Macnair, Executive Director of the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts, was present as an observer at the March 31 beating of eleven young pacifists on the steps of the South Boston Courthouse. Here are excerpts from his eye-witness report:

"The young demonstrators appeared at the Courthouse just before 8:30 A.M. Four men burned their draft cards. About 100-150 people had gathered—mostly of high-school age—though there were some adults. There were no police. I telephoned to Station 6 and told the officer on duty that there was an extremely dangerous situation developing and that no police were present.

"Several young men attacked the demonstrators and knocked them down on the Courthouse steps. One was so beaten that he bled profusely from the head and face. There was blood on the Courthouse steps.

"The demonstrators (including two girls) made their way into the Courthouse, though with difficulty. Thirty to fifty toughs followed them. A deputy arrived ten or fifteen minutes after I had called—but without any patrolmen. He went into an office in the Courthouse to telephone for men. While he was phoning, the crowd inside the Courthouse and right around the demonstrators got uglier and uglier. Two of them attacked one boy, knocked him to the floor and beat him.

"I called the deputy away from the phone. He ordered the crowd back and got the two boys off the one they had attacked.

"Only then did the patrolmen arrive. A few moments more, and I'm sure there would have been a general attack on the demonstrators and somebody would have been badly injured or killed—probably more than one."

Macnair then arranged for a meeting of leaders of the Massachusetts Council for Constitutional Rights with Boston's Mayor John F. Collins on April 6. After hearing Macnair's account of what had happened, the Mayor held a press conference before TV cameras. He reminded all Boston—including the police—of existing police orders to protect the rights of all persons to assemble. Collins concluded his statement by saying:

"Precisely because any protest against United States foreign policy in Vietnam is unpopular among some citizens of Boston, it is even more urgent to protect this right. A law-abiding city cannot tolerate violence on its streets against those who embrace unpopular causes without undermining our very society."

CIVIL LIBERTIES around the nation

Missouri: Congressman Richard Ichord of Missouri on March 17 attacked "destructive criticism" and "negativism" which he said "so many" U.S. newsmen in Vietnam display; he coupled this with a not very veiled threat of censorship.

Ohio: Ross Eckler, director of the Census, said in Cleveland last month that the Bureau is considering questioning people about their religious beliefs in the 1970 Census.

Arkansas: Mrs. Susan Epperson, a 24-year-old biology teacher at Central High School in Little Rock, brought suit in April challenging the constitutionality of the state's law prohibiting the teaching the theory of evolution in the public schools.

New Jersey: The leader of the New Jersey Ku Klux Klan disclosed last month that the organization was planning a cross-burning rally outside Bridgeton on May 23.

Illinois: The American Bar Association announced at its Chicago headquarters in March the creation of a new Section of Individual Rights and Responsibilities.

Connecticut: David H. Mitchell III, who refused to report for induction into the Army because he felt the U.S. was committing war crimes in Vietnam, was sentenced in April to five years in prison by the federal district court in Hartford.

Florida: The U.S. Supreme Court on March 28 declined to consider an appeal from William B. Craig, a Florida Negro sentenced to die for raping a white woman.

Louisiana: Louisiana's Attorney General Jack Gremillion, in denouncing the Supreme Court's March decision upholding the 1965 Voting Rights Act, said it meant "total destruction" of states rights and "will undoubtedly lead to universal sufferage."

Pennsylvania: In the April Readers Digest, former President Eisenhower, of Gettysburg, recommended sending draft card burners to jail "for the war's duration."

Michigan: In connection with the recent "flying saucer" scare in southern Michigan, an Armed Forces Committee spokesman wryly suggested that the HUAC investigate, because "it is un-American to have unidentified objects flying over this country."

LCDC Sues Insurance Firm To Reform Southern Police

The application of financial pressure against national insurance companies that bond Southern police officers—in an effort to step up civil rights progress—was announced last month by the Lawyers Constitutional Defense Committee of the ACLU.

Lawsuits to obtain money damages for deprivation of rights and for personal injuries sustained at the hands of Mississippi sheriffs were filed on behalf of several Southern Negroes and a New Hampshire civil rights worker. The suits, against a number of law enforcement officers and the U.S. Fidelity and Guaranty Company, a Baltimore-based firm, seek damages totalling almost $10,000,000.

The suits are the first in which a national insurance company is sought to be held liable for the acts of its principals who have deprived citizens of their rights.

In announcing the damage actions. LCDC Executive Secretary Henry Schwarzchild said in New York: "Perhaps police repression and brutality in Mississippi will be reduced when it costs money. We suspect that the bonding companies may exercise a restraining influence over Mississippi policemen when they find money verdicts rendered against them. Mere appeals to a sense of fairness and to principles of equality don't seem to have been very effective."

SIXTY PAMPHLETS

The current edition of the Union's publication list includes over sixty pamphlets and reprints (including seven new ones) on a variety of civil liberties issues. Single copies of most of them are free, on request, to paid-up regular members of the ACLU (dues of $6 or more). A postcard will bring you the list.

H.E.W. Softens Administration Of Oath; ACLU Continues Suits

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare announced in Washington on April 13 that failure to fill out the loyalty oath on the Medicare application would not by itself disqualify elderly persons from benefits under the new program.

The ACLU is continuing to press its New York suit on behalf of Mrs. Louis B. Weiss and Mrs. Sigmund K. Pollitzer. Its Washington action has been thrown out for technical reasons. The Pennsylvania and Southern California affiliates have filed cases of their own.

East Tennessee CLU Is Union's 37th Branch

The national ACLU announced last month the chartering of the East Tennessee Civil Liberties Union as the organization's 37th affiliate.

The 160 ACLU members in the 35 counties in the eastern end of the state have elected a Board of fifteen (all residents of Knoxville, unless otherwise noted):

Harry Wiersema, President, a consulting engineer formerly with the TVA; Dr. Murray Evans, Vice-President, assistant professor of botany at the University of Tennessee; Dr. Ronald Petersen, Secretary, associate professor of botany at the University of Tennessee; Mrs. Walter Bishop, Treasurer, member of the Mayor of Knoxville's Human Relations Council; Walter Howard Bishop, project engineer with the Rohm and Haas Company; John Wilson Cleland, physicist, Oak Ridge National Laboratory; Dr. J. Vivian Gibbs, physician; William Guy Harrell Jr., attorney, Tazewell; Dr. Robert Henry Harvey, assistant professor of mathematics at Knoxville College; Nicholas Howard Kurko, AFL-CIO organizer; Dr. Forrest W. Lacey, professor of law at the University of Tennessee; Jack O. LeFlore, businessman; the Rev. Kenneth Torquil MacLean, a Unitarian minister; Mrs. Phyllis Stine Schultz, child welfare worker, Maryville; and Martin Holmes Southern, attorney.

Harry Wiersema, head of the new ACLU branch, noted that formation of the affiliate had been stimulated by two current problems: (1) the elimination and prevention of infringements on civil rights in Knoxville; and (2) the protection of civil liberties in the functioning of the poverty program in the Appalachian area of Tennessee.

Iowa ACLU Backs Painter's Court Action in Child Case

At its meetings on March 16, the Iowa Civil Liberties Union's Board decided to back Harold W. Painter's petition to the Supreme Court of Iowa for a rehearing of its February 8 decision awarding Mr. Painter's 8-year-old son, Mark, to his maternal grandparents. His mother died in an automobile accident four years ago.

The petition supported by the Iowa ACLU contends that:

¶ The Court overlooked the applicable Iowa statute, which requires that a fit parent "shall be preferred over all others," and cited instead one that the applicable law had repealed and replaced in 1964.

¶ The ruling deprived father and son of their family relationship without constitutionally-guaranteed due process of law and equal protection of the laws.

¶ The decision "rests on irrational, arbitrary grounds" and infringes the father's right to freedom of belief and association.

'66 KEY YEAR DRIVE PASSES HALF-WAY MARK

The ACLU's Key Year for Civil Liberties drive passed the half-way mark in the last week of April when contributions reached a total of $700,000.

Membership & Development Director Gordon K. Haskell expressed gratification at the response of the Union's members across the country to the appeal for funds with which to expand ACLU work. However, he pointed out that programs which have been initiated could be endangered if there is any dropoff in the rate of giving by members who have not yet renewed for 1966.

"Tensions engendered by opposition to U.S. participation in the Vietnam war have added to our financial problem," Haskell pointed out. "We are sure our members would not wish the Union to let down its guard for a moment in this period, or to curtail the very important civil liberties defense work we started in the South last year.

"Reports from our 37 affiliates indicate that ACLU members are going all-out to achieve the program and financial goals the Union has set for itself this year."

California High Court Endorses ACLU Stand on Pay Television

The California Supreme Court in March declared, in a 6-1 decision, that the state's ban on pay television, adopted in a popular referendum in 1964, was unconstitutional.

The decision represented a victory for the ACLU and its Northern California affiliate which had filed an amicus brief charging that the ban abridged free speech.

CIVIL LIBERTIES AWARD GOES TO WALTER JONES OF ALBANY

"For his service and devotion to the cause of justice;
For his pursuit of fair play in the courtroom;
For his personal sacrifice in behalf of the ideals
we share in common

The American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia gratefully acknowledges its debt."

This is the text of the scroll presented to attorney P. Walter Jones of Albany as the Georgia Civil Liberties Award at the ACLU Annual Meeting in Atlanta, June 2nd.

The award was voted by the outgoing Georgia Board of Directors in recognition of Mr. Jones' lonely, six-year battle to save the life of his client, Phil Whitus. Mr. Whitus was condemned to death, although the prosecution acknowledged that he had been forced at gun point to race the motor of a car to muffle the sound of the shot which killed the victim. The ACLU entered the case because Negroes had been systematically excluded from the Whitus grand and trial juries.

The story of Mr. Jones' defense of Phil Whitus started when he was appointed by the court as his lawyer. It was expected that he would make the perfunctory defense customary for court-appointed lawyers of indigent Negro defendants. Instead, he fought vigorously for his client's rights. The white community of Albany has retaliated by threats of physical violence, a boycott of his legal service, and social ostracism.

When ACLU President Hugh Gibert presented the award to Mr. Jones, he responded to the audience's prolonged applause by saying wistfully: "I sure wish you folks were on my jury."

ANNUAL MEETING AIRS POLICE PROCEDURES

The theme of the Georgia ACLU Annual Meeting - Police Powers: Constructively Used or Unconstitutionally Abused? was conscientiously explored by a panel consisting of Richard Freeman, Chairman of the Aldermanic Police Committee; Howard Moore, Jr., attorney; Superintendent Fred Bierman and Captain M. G. Redding of the Atlanta Police Department; and Glenn Zell, attorney. The moderator was Don McEvoy, Director of the Georgia National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Summarizing a panel discussion is a chancy business -- the interplay of personalities and nuances of expression are inevitably lost. So what follows is a capsule report of the main points made by each participant:

Alderman Freeman began with a very human and disarming acknowledgment that he had "blown up" when questioned by reporters about the ACLU's Police Procedures report which he had not yet seen. He stated that he felt ACLU was making a valuable social contribution by acting as a watchdog on police matters. He stated that some police malpractice did exist -- the Department -- like every other institution attracting both good and bad officers, and conceded that the present system of handling complaints against police officers was not entirely satisfactory. He felt, however, that the Aldermanic Committee did in fact act as a Civilian Review Board, with the advantage that its members were elected officials responsible to the public, whereas an appointed Civilian Review Board would not be.

Mr. Zell felt that by and large police officers did a good job and that there was a lack of understanding by the public of the problems of police work.

Mr. Moore stated that Negroes and poor whites do not receive the same treatment at the hands of the police that middle and upper-class whites do. He charged that the police are discourteous, even abusive, that they do not advise arrested individuals of their rights that they use unnecessary force, and that their methods of interrogation and securing confessions are devious or threatening or both. He looked for the day when police officers would be unarmed, as they are in England. He noted also that violence by police officers was a reflection of the approval of violence in the general community which sanctions war.

Superintendent Bierman and Captain Redding defending police practices, stated that every complaint was carefully investigated, and attacked the idea of a Civilian Review Board because civilians would lack specialized knowledge of police problems, would be bad for police morale, and would place power in the hands of people who did not have the accompanying responsibilities.

While questioning from the audience was hostile to police practices and the present system for handling complaints, the greatest applause was given to a suggestion that police officers deserved much higher pay and prestige than they are now getting.

Nothing, of course, was resolved by the panel, but the audience seemed to feel that they presented a revealing exploration of one of society's knottiest problems.

TESTIMONIAL DINNER FOR DON HOLLOWELL, JUNE 23RD.

Former ACLU Vice-President Donald Hollowell (and now an Advisory Board member) will be given a testimonial dinner on Thursday, June 23rd, to mark his appointment as District Director of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

This dinner is sponsored by Operation Breadbasket, a state-wide organization which seeks more and better jobs for Negroes. The dinner will also honor the Atlanta Braves for their employment policies. We are delighted to see the Braves honored for something, because certainly a dinner in honor of their won-lost record at this point would be slightly premature, to put it as tactfully as possible.

In any case, we hope as many members as possible will turn out to salute Don, for the dinner recognizes not only his new appointment, but his contribution over the years to making Georgia a better place for all its citizens.

Tickets are $5.00 each and reservations can be made by calling the chairman of the dinner, Dr. Gerald Reed, at 873-2771.

ACLU BIENNIAL CONFERENCE, JUNE 18-22ND

Delegates from all thirty-eight ACLU affiliates will meet in Stony Brook, Long Island for the Union's Biennial Conference. It is at these conferences that major policy decisions are made, and program guidelines for the coming two years are determined.

Working papers already distributed to delegates make it clear that two major themes of the conference will be the civil liberties implications in social welfare legislation and the increasing use of mechanical devices to invade personal privacy.

In Social Welfare, some of the questions raised are: How can we prevent welfare officials from making arbitrary "moral" judgments about welfare recipients, e.g. the denial of access to public housing for the parent of an illegitimate child; the midnight raid upon the recipient of Aid to Dependent Children to make sure there is no sign of male occupancy which would disqualify her from receiving a relief check? Is there a civil liberties issue in compulsory medical procedures which might be prescribed under federally sponsored health legislation?

In Personal Privacy: What can be done to counter the growing use of privacy-invading devices by local police, government agencies and business? What are the courter-measures which individual citizens and voluntary agencies can apply? What are the legislative remedies?

In addition to the substantive issues, the conference will be concerned with strengthening the organizational structure of ACLU. The National Development Council will meet to consider grant applications for developing affiliates, Georgia among them. At this time what Georgia has accomplished, what it has failed to accomplish and what its future potential is will be weighed by the Council.

The Executive Director will serve as Georgia's delegate to this conference and her assignments will be to act as secretary for the workshop on Civil Liberties and Mass Communications, and chairman of the workshop on Education. We are looking forward eagerly to attending, and to benefitting from the program and development ideas of older, more established affiliates. Our one mild complaint is that the Stony Brook setting -- bucolic, even idyllic -- is two and a hours from New York City, far enough to prevent getting into town to enjoy the bright lights.

The Georgia ACLU office will be closed from the 18th to the 23rd. We'll let you know in next month's newsletter how it all came out.

ATLANTA MAGAZINE TO PROFILE GEORGIA ACLU

The July issue of Atlanta Magazine, published by the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, will have a story on the Georgia ACLU.

We recommend the story to you a little tentatively. Or perhaps "nervously" would be a better adverb. We haven't seen any advance on the piece, and all we can re ort is that when the photographer came to take pictures of the office, he remarked: "Gee, lady, you don't look as much like an ogre as I thought you would." Hmm.

The issue will be on the stands around the first week in July.

ACLU SCORES ARMY'S PRESSURE ON LIEUTENANT'S FREE SPEECH RIGHTS

Threats of renewed prosecution against a paroled Army lieutenant unless he ceases making statements critical of government policy in Vietnam were sharply scored on July 15 by the American Civil Liberties Union. The lieutenant is appealing a court-martial conviction arising out of his participation in an anti-Vietnam war demonstration last winter.

The civil liberties group, which is providing counsel to Lt. Henry H. Howe, Jr., of Boulder, Col., attacked the Army's pressure which "would so brazenly undertake to suppress Mr. Howe's right of free speech solely because he is critical of the Army and of government policy in Vietnam," and warned against "the growing dangers to freedom which are being spawned by the war in Vietnam."

The ACLU's statement was prompted by a letter sent by Army General Counsel Alfred B. Fitt on July 7 to Melvin L. Wulf, the Union's legal director, warning that public statements made by Lt. Howe in May about "President Johnson, the policies of the United States toward Vietnam,the quality of military and civilian justice in this country...raised the possibility of violation" of provisions of the Uniform Code of Military Justice. Fitt also suggested possible prosecution under a section of the U.S. Code providing up to 10 years imprisonment for whoever "with intent to interfere with...the loyalty, morale, or discipline" of the military "advises, counsels, urges... insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny or refusal of duty by any member of the military or naval forces...."

Lt. Howe is currently on parole pending the appeal of his court-martial conviction last December for demonstrating against U.S. policy in Vietnam. He was convicted of using contemptuous words against President Johnson and of conduct unbecoming an officer, and was sentenced to two years at hard labor (later reduced to one year), dismissal from the service, and forfeiture of all pay and allowances. During off-duty hours and in civilian clothes, Lt. Howe had participated in an El Paso, Texas, demonstration, carrying a placard denouncing President Johnson's leadership and war policies.

Responding to Fitt, Wulf, who is serving as Lt. Howe's counsel, argued that "it seems perfectly clear...that it is not public statements as such to which the Army objects, but only those statements which presume to criticize official policy." The ACLU letter added that the national press had carried "more than one letter...from officers and enlisted men which support the government's Vietnam policy but the Department of the Army has never suggested that such public statements are improper, no less illegal."

The threat to prosecute Lt. Howe for violation of the federal law barring interference with the loyalty, morale, or discipline of the armed forces or advising their disaffection was called "fatuous" and "futile" in the ACLU letter. Emphasizing the law's dubious constitutionality which is widely acknowledged by lawyers, the Union asserted that "the mere suggestion that it might be invoked against Lt. Howe is a reflection of an incipient tendency towards the suppression of freedom" reminiscent of "the period of McCarthyism." The civil liberties group noted that the "inevitable effect" of the threats against Lt. Howe "is to impair the debate over government policy," adding that "debate is precisely what the First Amendment is intended not only to protect, but to foster as well."

The ACLU noted Army Counsel Fitt's warning that "so long as he is subject to military jurisdiction, Howe should refrain from pamphleteering or participation in meetings, rallies, conferences and the like where it might reasonably be expected that his personal views concerning the President, our presence in Vietnam, the obligations of soldiers and related topics would come to public attention." Fitt added that "revocation of his parole and other appropriate disciplinary action" would be the consequences if Lt. Howe does not heed the warning. Pointing to the "fallacy of that position," the ACLU argued in its letter that the "assumption that all serving officers, including junior officers, are forbidden to express political views...inconsistent with government policy" is "not supported by law, nor supportable on any policy grounds."

Asserting the "responsibility" of the Army "to society to adopt policies that are consonant with the First Amendment," the Union called the need "particularly compelling" where "a large part of the military establishment, including Lt. Howe, is in service not out of choice but by compulsion." The ACLU urged the Army to "recognize the fact that suppression of free political speech of its basically civilian members is hardly calculated to encourage that freedom after the completion of required service."

SOUTHERN ARIZONA CLU OPPOSES POLICE-IN-SCHOOL PROGRAM

The civil liberties threats in a government-financed program which places police officers in Tucson, Arizona public schools as quasi-faculty members, were sharply underscored in June by the protests of the Arizona Civil Liberties Union, Southern Chapter. The School Resource Officer program, operated by the Tucson Police Department, has applied for a federal grant under the 1965 Law Enforcement Assistance Act, and approval is under active consideration.

Created three years ago by the combined action of the Police Department and the Tucson schools, one of the features of the SRO program is the stationing of an officer in every high school and junior high in the Tucson area for the alleged purpose of early detection and prevention of juvenile delinquency. The plain clothes police officers operate out of private offices within the schools and are permitted to interview students at will, subject only to the varying limitations imposed by individual principals. Depending on the principal or superintendent of the particular school district, the School Resource Officer may be free to interrogate anyone he wishes, at any time, in private, with neither previous consent or notice, nor subsequent notification of the parent. In one reported case, a school official was threatened with arrest when he tried to prevent the questioning of a student, and the school's lawyer asserted the right of the policeman to conduct the interrogation.

Supporters of the SRO program maintain that it will reduce delinquency, improve school-police liaisons, widen education on the nature of law enforcement, and prevent certain adult crimes from developing. The Southern Arizona CLU chapter, however, urges that the program be revised or "replaced by some other program which will achieve the same projected benefits without the accompanying abridgments of constitutional rights and in accord with the democratic process."

The dangers of the school officer program to the rights of juveniles, parents and teachers were flagged down by the Southern Arizona ACLU, which has called for closed hearings where school personnel could speak freely. Pointing to due process infringements, the civil liberties group notes that the "officer can take advantage of the school's jurisdiction over the child to institute questioning and coercion which would not otherwise be attempted." The presence of a policeman in the school, the Southern Arizona chapter points out, "creates a situation where evidence can be gathered in a manner patently in violation of our concepts of fair play and due process. The officer may become a hero or friend to many children but may, at a later date, use their adulation and confidence to obtain evidence against the child, his friends, or family." The civil liberties group asserts that "it is not necessary to take a stand on the extent of a child's right to counsel or his rights against self-incrimination or illegal searches and seizure. It is sufficient to condemn the program on the grounds that the child's rights may be abused because of the greater access and familiarity gained by the policeman stationed in schools."

Observing that Arizona law requires that juvenile delinquency be handled by trained probation officers, not by the police, the civil liberties group argues that "even assuming a child to have no constitutional rights, he is being deprived of his rights" under law. "The utilization of special juvenile officers was a deliberate choice made in this country around the turn of the century as a result of the acknowledged failure of the police in juvenile matters," states the Southern Arizona chapter. "The SRO program attempts indirectly to turn back the clock and reinstate a discredited system." The ACLU chapter adds that the Arizona legislature "has at no time authorized the use of police officers as part of a school faculty."

Finally, the Southern Arizona chapter argues that "possible indiscriminate interrogation of minors regarding home, family and neighbors, and conceivably including questions on political opinions or economic practices, constitutes...an invasion" of privacy. "Certainly," the chapter concludes, "it must be recognized that the program gives the police an easier access than is now available to information concerning family activities and other matters ordinarily confined to the privacy of the home. In this, the rights of parents as well as of children are invaded."

At a meeting with officials of the Office of Law Enforcement Assistance of the Department of Justice, Lawrence Speiser, director of the ACLU's Washington office, expressed the ACLU concern in the granting of federal funds to the School Resource Officer program. Speiser suggested that if the grants are to be given, a condition should be attached that "under no circumstances would the policeman [in the school] be able to interrogate any juvenile without the presence of his parent." In addition to the impending Tucson grant, a grant to the Minneapolis Police Department for a similar program is pending. The Minneapolis Police Department has a policy regulation which states that if police officers find it necessary to question students on school property, a member of the faculty must be present.

ACLU FIGHTS DISCRIMINATION AGAINST NEGRO ATHLETES IN THE SOUTH

Deserving Negro athletes seeking athletic scholarships, who have been largely disregarded by Southern universities up to the present time, may get a better break in the near future. According to Sports Illustrated, a change in attitude toward recruiting Negro athletes is taking place in Southern universities, due to three factors: pressure against racial discrimination; the threat of loss of federal funds because of discriminatory educational practices; and the desire for winning teams, whether or not all-white.

For effective pressure against discrimination against Negro athletes, Sports Illustrated credits, among a few others, Bruce Galphin, a columnist of The Atlanta Constitution, and Charles Morgan, Jr., director of the Southern Regional Office of the American Civil Liberties Union. Morgan recently sent a letter to United States Commissioner of Education Harold Howe charging racial discrimination in universities belonging to the Southeastern Conference. He asked for a full investigation of practices in athletic departments of SEC universities which, he pointed out, have agreed to comply with the Civil Rights Act of 1964. He requested also that federal funds be withheld from institutions found to be discriminating against Negro athletes.

"The influence of desegregated intercollegiate athletics in the South on the attitudes of young boys and girls, white and Negro, cannot be overstated," Morgan wrote in the ACLU letter.... "There are few Negro athletes at SEC schools, and only the University of Kentucky and Vanderbilt University have attempted to crash the color line in grant-in-aid programs."

Naming Louisiana State University and the University of Georgia as typical of SEC schools, the letter said that LSU's 113 football players and its 11 coaches are all white. Moreover, LSU, it said, seems to scout only white schools for prospective recipients of athletic scholarships.

At the University of Georgia, where an athletic scholarship has a value of about $1,615 a year, the letter claimed, one Negro student is trying out for the football team, but has not yet received a scholarship. And Negro high school athletes in the area, though scouted by many other universities, have never been recruited by a SEC school. Morgan also referred critically to the Georgia Institute of Technology which, he said, declared that it was expanding its geographical boundaries in its search for football players, but "did not travel ten miles to Decatur" to recruit Jack Pitts, a Negro high school senior who has been rated by more than one football coach as the "finest quarterback prospect."

POLICE NOT EXCEPTED FROM WIRETAPPING BAN ENACTED IN ALASKA

Despite the absolute position of law-enforcement spokesmen that surreptitious listening-in on ordinary telephone connections is necessary to their work, the Alaska state Legislature hearkened to those holding that such police practice would be an unconstitutional invasion of privacy and enacted in early May a law banning wiretapping without exception. "In my opinion," said John E. Havelock, ACLU cooperating attorney, "without the intervention of ACLU members here in Alaska, the act would have contained an exception allowing wiretapping by law officers and, in that form, would have been signed into law by the Governor."

A high point in the controversy surrounding the legislation was a debate between Havelock, a lawyer in Anchorage, and the District Attorney of that city, before the Anchorage Bar Association. Following the debate, the Association voted against allowing any amendment to the pending Act to allow police wiretapping or other eavesdropping and the position of the Association was forwarded to the state legislature.

Passage of the no-exception anti-wiretapping bill was a significant victory in light of the heavy pressures exerted on the other side. A committee appointed by the City Council of Anchorage, where it had come to light that the police department was already engaged in wiretapping for various purposes in connection with its law-enforcement endeavors, reported after lengthy hearings and investigations, an 11-point program. Its recommendations, basically favored wiretapping privileges for police, although only under certain circumstances ("any case involving national security or on Federal reservations ... and in certain types of criminal cases.") Most of its recommendations had to do with improving administrative organization, procedures, and cooperation within the police department and other municipal units and the telephone utility. And a spokesman for the chiefs of police of Sitka, Ketchikan, and Juneau testified before a committee of the state legislature to the effect that police officers should be permitted to wiretap or eavesdrop if the chief legal officer of the (state) political subdivision obtains a court order that this action is necessary to prevent a crime, prevent an act of violence, save a life, or detect a serious crime that has already been committed.

In a letter to the legislative group, Anchorage law-enforcement officials and the Captain of the Alaska State Police argued that the privilege of wiretapping and eavesdropping should be granted enforcement agencies, provided the privilege is accompanied by safeguards to insure interception is justified and "not misused" in pursuit of information. Governor William A. Egan, furthermore, had indicated his sympathy with the notion of electronic snooping by police, expressing his hope for "something ... That will pretty well guarantee that use of this type of criminal detection will be confined to extreme necessity."

In the end, however, the bill's prime sponsor, Representative Gene Guess of Anchorage, successfully fought down attempts to incorporate a police-wiretapping amendment. His bill is based on the federal law outlawing wiretapping, he pointed out, but with additional provisions against eavesdropping devices such as the hidden tape-recorder and the pocket microphone.

CIVIL LIBERTIES BRIEFS

THE AKRON, OHIO CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION called on the presiding judge of the Summit County Court of Common Pleas to give Grand Jury members specific instructions on their powers and duties under Ohio law. The civil liberties group expressed concern about "the growing tendency of the Grand Jury, both in Summit County and elsewhere, to add comment or findings to their report other than that required to perform their extremely important and delicate duties." ACLU TO LAUNCH LEGAL CLINICS IN POVERTY AREAS

One of the surprising facts emerging from our study, Police Procedures in Atlanta is that four out of five people interviewed had little or no idea that they had any rights when they encountered the police.

To remedy this lack of information, the ACLU of Georgia Executive Committee has authorized launching an educational program to inform citizens what their rights and responsibilities are when they encounter the police, and what the rights and responsibilities are of police officers. The program will be started in neighborhoods with a high arrest record.

The first step in the program has already been taken -- a meeting of forty interested lawyers and law students who discussed in general terms what form the clinic should take. They decided we should produce a film strip with a recorded commentary, running about fifteen minutes. This would show some of the basic situations in which civil liberties questions arose. The material would be kept simple -- we are not trying to turn out do-it-yourself lawyers, but to acquaint people with what would be helpful in a given situation until the lawyer gets there.

In addition, each person would be given a mimeographed cartoon book reviewing the information in the strip to take home with him. A committee of six attorneys has volunteered to work out material for the strip and the booklet.

After showing of the film strip with its recorded commentary, a moderator would answer general audience questions growing out of this material. For the first several clinics, the moderators would be lawyers. Based on their experience, a decision will be made as to whether the moderator could be a well-briefed layman.

Your Help Is Needed

Volunteers -- not necessarily lawyers -- will be needed to go into selected neighborhoods in advance of the clinics to find out what residents regard as the key problems, to find suitable places to hold the clinics, and to help insure good attendance.

If you are interested in participating in this way -- probably around the beginning of September, please call our office at 523-5398 and let us know -- now.

The first few clinics will be held in Atlanta. After the techniques have been perfected, they will be held in other metropolitan areas in Georgia. So we would like to hear from members in Macon, Savannah, Augusta, Athens and Columbus whether this program would be useful there and what organizations and individuals could be enlisted to provide places to hold the clinics and volunteers to serve them.

BI-ENNIAL CONFERENCE REPORT

The ACLU Bi-Ennial Conference at Stony Brook, Long Island, considerably expanded the area of civil liberties concerns, most notably in the field of Civil Liberties and Poverty. This broadened horizon is reflected in the following resolutions approved by the Plenary Board:

Resolved: That a special committee be appointed to study the question of entitlement to government benefits, to state substantively what the rights of entitlement are, and to recommend what steps are to be taken to enforce such rights. The special committee would report to the first Plenary Board meeting in 1967.

Resolved: That ACLU goes on record in opposition to deprivation of rights of beneficiaries of government benefits and applicants for such benefits including but not limited to: arbitrary residence requirements, midnight raids, arbitrary deprivations on grounds of race, size of family, illegitimacy, etc., and arbitrary work requirements.

ACLU also deplores the lack of procedural safeguards accorded to beneficiaries of government benefits and applicants for such benefits, including but not limited to: inaccessible regulations, no statement of reasons for agency action; lack of fair hearing; and denial of appellate review.

In the field of Privacy, the Plenary Board moved that the ACLU should establish a standing Committee on Privacy which could study the question with particular attention to: establishing criteria to justify incursions on privacy by government and private persons and organizations; psychological testing by private organizations and government of schoolchildren and for employment purposes; use of undercover agents to investigate private organizations.

The Plenary Board also moved that the Conference refer to the Privacy Committee the suggestion that Congress should outlaw the sale of surreptitious electronic listening devices in interstate commerce, with the amendment that the Union does not thereby sanction the use of such devices by government agencies. The Board also reaffirmed its historical absolutist policy opposing the public or private use of electronic surveillance devices.

In other program areas, the Plenary Board:

1. Referred the entire subject of conscription to the affiliates for further discussion, then to be referred to the first Plenary Board meeting in 1967.

2. Moved that the FCC, in regulating broadcasting, should seek diversity of ownership and diversity of program sources, but should not regulate program content either to require desirable programs or kinds of programs, except as specified by the Fairness Doctrine and the statutory provisions concerning political candidates.

3. Moved that the ACLU commit itself during the next two years to seeking detailed policy positions on the wide range of issues posed conceptually in the following question: Given the complexity of modern society, does the government have an obligation to encourage and support affirmatively means of securing freedom of expression?

On Organizational Matters, the Board voted to:

1. Give more representation on standing committees to affiliate members and attempt to hold some of these meetings out of New York.

2. Appoint a three-man committee to investigate integrating the Northern California ACLU with the rest of the Union.

3. Retain the third-arm voting status of the National Committee.

4. Charge the committee working on recommendations to "maintain the integrity, effectiveness and viability of the ACLU" to work in conjunction with the Constitution Committee, and that pending the report of this joint committee, the National Board is requested to hold its meetings at times more convenient to all its members, including members from the affiliates.

5. Have the Roger Baldwin Foundation mark the 50th Anniversary of the ACLU in 1970 by raising a major fund to undertake basic research and educational programs.

Georgia ACLI Grant Approved

The Steering Committee of the National Development Council met at Stony Brook and approved our request for a grant based on our considerable activity in the past nine months and our more than 100% increase in membership. The grant is to maintain our present level of operation, plus an additional $2,500 to launch new programs such as the legal clinics outlined above.

While we are pleased at this recognition, the grant does not mean that we can depend upon the National organization to provide our funds. On the contrary, it carries with it the obligation to secure increased funds locally and to up our membership goals to the point where we can be self-supporting.

Some Unofficial Conference Notes: The President of the State University at Stony Brook greeted the Conference and recounted his own active role in the ACLU. He reeled off an impressive list of faculty members who belong to the ACLU, and jokingly remarked: "Of course, it's not a pre-condition of employment here, but..." Most of the delegates took this charming little introduction calmly, but I kept trying to envision the Chancellor of the University of Georgia doing this.

The Stony Brook campus is a flat, treeless affair, with the buildings cunningly laid out each identical to the other, giving you the eerie feeling of never quite knowing which one you're in. It's the kind of architecture known as Advanced Urban Renewal Reform School.

Two of the ACLU's honored founders, Roger Baldwin and Norman Thomas, now in their eighties, were introduced at the Sunday lunch. Their pungent remarks, delivered in ringing, vigorous voices, belied their years and reminded us anew how much we are in their debt.

Finally, there were too many meetings, too much smoke, too much staying up late, too many new people to meet and new ideas to absorb. Which makes it kind of hard to explain why I found the Conference to stimulating and can hardly wait until the next one.

LEGAL CLINIC BOOKLET READY SEPTEMBER 15

A five-man committee of ACLU cooperating attorneys has just completed the text of a 32-page booklet explaining the individual's rights and responsibilities when he encounters the law. As noted in the July bulletin, these booklets are to be used in connection with legal clinics in poverty areas.

Written in simple, non-legal language, each page contains one caption accompanied by an illustration. The booklet, Know Your Rights, covers, among other things: being stopped by a policeman; how to know whether you are under arrest, and if so, what your rights are; your rights and police rights during a search; your right to counsel; your right to make, or decline to make a statement or to sign one.

The drawings, a contribution from artist Marge Manderson, illuminate the text and are, by themselves, strikingly attractive.

We believe that this booklet will be useful not only to residents of slum areas, but to every citizen. We are hopeful that it will receive the widest distribution to civic clubs, church groups, voluntary agencies and classrooms.

Now It's a Joint Project: In order to make this project state-wide, we have joined forces with the Georgia Council on Human Relations as co-sponsors. With fifteen local Councils in major cities all over the state, it will be well-equipped to sponsor clinics in those areas where our membership is thinly scattered. And we will benefit, too, from the Council's greater experience in community organization.

Financing the Clinics: Between the ACLU and the Georgia Council, we have sufficient funds for an initial, small run of the booklet, and to begin production of the film strip. You may want to help finance the project by buying a copy of the Know Your Rights booklet for $1. For each booklet purchased at $1, we will be able to give away four booklets free in slum neighborhoods.

After the initial $1 cost, you may purchase as many as you like for your club or study group at .25¢ each. On the last page you will find a coupon with which to order your copies.

Volunteers: More than twenty members, both lawyers and laymen, responded to the notice in the July bulletin and volunteered to help with the clinics. We have not called upon them yet, since we have been waiting for the production of the booklet. And that was delayed for a variety of reasons, all of them frustrating.

But the booklet is now under way, and we will be calling a meeting of volunteers as soon as it is off the press. So we will welcome calls from others who would like to participate in these clinics.

12 YEAR-OLD TRANSFERRED FROM PRISON TO JUVENILE HOME

The efforts of ACLU cooperating attorney T. Emory Daniel have resulted in the transfer of 12-year-old Kirby McCoy from the Georgia Industrial Institute at Alto, a prison under the control of the State Board of Corrections, to a juvenile institution.

The case came to ACLU attention in a newspaper story which reported that a 12 year-old child had been sentenced to prison as an adult offender and given a four-year term for burglary. The judge had refused to assign him to the juvenile authorities because he said he was a "hardened criminal."

The ACLU Director talked with Kirby at the prison. Here is an excerpt from that interview:

"I get in bed every night and cry and cry because I'm so alone and I'm so homesick and afraid. But I don't never let the others hear me. I just bury my head because they would give me a hard time.

"When we says our prayers at night, I pray so hard to the good Lord that He will come and He will rescue me from here, but I guess He don't hear me yet...I know I could get along good if I was with boys my own age...Maybe I could have a friend.

Based on this interview with the child, which included an account of his arrest and trial, and an interview with the Superintendent of the prison, which revealed Kirby's intelligence test scores, Attorney Daniel prepared a writ of habeas corpus on Kirby's behalf on the following grounds:

1. That he was inadequately represented by counsel at his trial.

2. That assigning a 12 year-old child to the adult prison authority is cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the 8th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

3. That the child, who scored a mental age of between seven and eight on the prison's tests, was denied a test of mental competency at the time of trial, which might have proved him ineligible for sentence.

Evidently the authorities responsible for Kirby McCoy's being sent to an adult institution did not care to meet this legal challenge. Immediately upon being informed of our impending action, the child was transferred to a juvenile home, an unprecedented move, since he will remain under the jurisdiction of the adult Corrections Board.

In a newspaper statement, ACLU of Georgia President Hugh Gibert declared:

"There are hundreds of Kirby McCoys in jails all over Georgia, and every night they offer the same prayer. The answer to their cries lies not in individual legal action, although the ACLU of Georgia serves notice that it stands ready to test each and every such case. The answer lies in an aroused citizenry which will demand that the General Assembly pass a law that no child under the age of 16 can be incarcerated in an adult prison."

WHAT HAPPENED AT HUAC

Because of the widespread publicity given to the House Un-American Activities Committee hearings in which ACLU attorney Arthur Kinoy was dragged from the hearing room and charged with "disorderly conduct", the National ACLU office has prepared a memorandum outlining the facts. What follows is a summary of their four-page memorandum:

1. ACLU's Legal Challenge of HUAC. On August 15th, ACLU sought a court order enjoining the HUAC hearings on the grounds that HUAC's mandate is unconstitutional on its face. ACLU charges that the mandate, which authorizes HUAC to investigate un-American "propaganda" activivies, sets forth a charter authorizing investigations into areas protected by the First Amendment, i.e. freedom of speech, belief and association.

The second ACLU ground is that the practices of the Committee have irreparably damaged the lives of those who have been subpoenaed to appear before it because of exposure without the protection of due process.

When the ACLU complaint was filed on August 15, there were angry cries from Congressmen and others that the principle of the separation of powers was being abridged. We believe, however, that ever since 1803, when the Supreme Court first declared an act of Congress unconstitutional, the authority of the courts to act as a check on the legislative branch has been generally recognized.

Although a Congressional legislative hearing is not the same as an act of Congress, the ACLU feels that a judicial remedy is appropriate whenever an individual's civil liberties are jeopardized or the procedural protections of due process are not available to him. The recent Supreme Court decisions commanding reapportionment of state legislatures on the basis of "one man-one vote" make clear that the doctrine of separation of powers is tempered by the assertion of individual rights.

A temporary restraining order was granted by the Federal District Court, but the next day, the three-judge court dissolved this order, but it did retain jurisdiction over the constitutional issue raised by the ACLU. A hearing on this issue is scheduled for August 29th.

2. The Events at the HUAC Hearing: The temporary restraining order dissolved, the HUAC hearings began. It was on the second morning of hearings that Mr. Kinoy, a member of the Supreme Court Bar and Professor of Constitutional Law at Rutgers, was forcibly removed.

Contrary to the impression created by press accounts and broadcasts, his arrest grew out of upholding procedures which have been long established ACLU policy. He was protesting that his client was being maligned and that testimony concerning him should be given in executive session -- in short, the most elemental due process. His conduct, according to a Congressman observer, was nothing more than the normal colloquy expected in a House hearing.

The procedural safeguards upon which Mr. Kinoy and the ACLU are insisting are:

1. Counsel for witnesses should have the right to make objections to committee questions or procedures which violate his client's rights. Counsel should be permitted to subject his client to direct examination to explain answers given to the committee.

2. Before airing defamatory information, the committee should screen such material in executive session to determine its reliability. The individual named should be given an opportunity to appear before the committee in executive session with witnesses or other evidence to rebut the information.

3. If adverse testimony is given in public session after the committee has decided in executive session that it is appropriate, any person about whom such testimony is offered should be given an opportunity to:

a) testify or offer sworn statements in his behalf
b) subject the witness offering prejudicial testimony to cross examination
c) obtain the assistance of the investigation committee in compelling the attendance of witnesses and the production of documents necessary to rebut the charges against him.

It should be unnecessary to state -- but we will anyway -- that in its representation of clients subpoenaed to appear before HUAC, the ACLU, as in every such case, disassociates itself from the political or other views of its clients, and concerns itself only with the constitutional and civil liberties issues involved. And needless to say, in this particular case, the ACLU does not support the intemperate and sometimes bizarre exhibitions of some of the spectators.

Here in Georgia it was suggested editorially that the ACLU should have filed its motion for an injunction in behalf of a Klan witness at the earlier Klan hearings, instead of the current hearings. This notion was based on the somewhat naive idea that the Klan would have agreed to be represented by the ACLU, which is one of its chief whipping boys. Or perhaps the editorial writer was not aware of the legal requirement that you must have a client before you can bring an action in his behalf.

MEMO: No.95
Oct.11, 1966

TO: Cooperating Organizations
FROM: Arnold Aronson, Secretary

CONGRESS CONTINUES ITS RETREAT ON CIVIL RIGHTS

In the statement he issued late last week, Roy Wilkins called upon members of Congress to defend the civil rights laws they have enacted and the President to stand behind the men he has named to office. If that statement, included with this MEMO, sounds a note of terrible urgency, it is meant to do so. The events in Congress these past two weeks amount to an incredible retreat from the kind of whole-hearted support for full equality that led to the enactment of the major civil rights laws of the past nine years.

Fountain's Blow

Nothing better illustrated the mood of Congress in its final weeks than the acceptance last Thursday of an amendment to the Elementary and Secondary Education Act offered by Rep. L.H. Fountain (D., N.C.). As Roy Wilkins observed in his statement, this may be one of the most devastating of the recent blows against civil rights. In brief, it prevents the Commissioner of Education from deferring any funds to a school district he has reason to believe discriminates against Negro students until he has first held a full hearing on the matter and found a violation. The amendment is part of the on-going attack by segregationists on the Office of Education and Commissioner Harold Howe, 2d. It is part of the attempt to destroy the effectiveness of Title VI, the section of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 that authorizes the withholding of funds from any federally-supported program that discriminates.

OE's Present Procedure

The procedure now followed by the Office of Education goes something like this. If a school district fails or refuses to file the standard assurance of compliance with Title VI, or if the Commissioner has reason to believe the assurance is not being carried out, he may then defer funds to that district until a hearing is held. Even then he defers funds only for new programs. If an old program is involved the district still keeps getting money. At present, the Office has deferred funds for only 240 out of some 2,000 districts (it hasn't staff enough to go after more districts just yet). It has cut off funds from only 37, after full hearing.

Federal Funds For Cattle Prods?

Under Mr. Fountain's amendment, the Commissioner couldn't hold up funds for old or new programs until he first held a hearing and that could take at a minimum anywhere from 9 to 12 months; with court review, delays running into years are possible. An HEW attorney was not exaggerating much when he said that under the amendment,"Governor Wallace could come to us and say he was going to use his funds to build new schools for whites and buy cattle prods to keep Negro students out of them and we would have to give him the money until we finished the hearing a year from now."

The Fountain amendment passed the House by a vote of 221 to 116. That vote is as painful to read as the vote by which the Senate two weeks ago approved another axe blow at Title VI, the Stennis amendment that permits hospitals and other medical facilities to segregate patients by race for reasons of physical or mental well-being (see MEMO No.94 for full details). Once again liberal Congressmen, House members who fully supported the Civil Rights Act of 1964, bowed to the threats of white backlash in an election year and cast their votes for weakened enforcement.

The "Racial Imbalance" Fight

Another symptom of Congressional retreat was the adoption of two other amendments to the Elementary and Secondary Education Bill. Offered by the floor manager for the bill, Rep. James O'Hara (D., Mich.), one, an "anti-busing" provision, would prohibit the Office of Education from requiring the assignment or transportation of teachers or students to overcome racial imbalance. The other would remove from the bill any authorization by which the Office could provide funds for the correction of racial imbalance. Both amendments are unnecessary. The Office does not and cannot require any busing to correct school segregation. It leaves the methods used to desegregate schools entirely up to the local officials.

Mr. O'Hara, who is for strong enforcement, offered his amendments to head off worse ones. They were a sop to the vociferous defenders, from the North and South, of the sanctity of the neighborhood school--and de facto segregation.

In the Senate, which considered the Elementary and Secondary Education Act the same day the House did, a similar capitulation was made. An amendment by Senator Paul J. Fannin (R., Ariz.) was accepted deleting the words "racial imbalance" from the bill. Although the Fannin amendment does not change present law it is one more instance of the tendency to give in to backlash sentiment.

Even President Johnson has caught the prevailing mood and has shown an inclination to temporize on enforcement. At his last press conference on October 7, he observed that he has tried to see that the civil rights laws are "fully adhered to and fully enforced at all times." But then he went on to make excuses for Office of Education staff, saying he realized that in some instances there has been "some harassment" and "some mistakes" and that "some people have been enthusiastic."

Attacks On Howe Continue

These victories for the segregationists occurred concurrent with the vituperative and shameful attacks on Harold Howe. He may not have done enough for integration but he is unquestionably an able and conscientious official. If he is the target, it is not because of "mistakes" or misplaced enthusiasm but because he has tried to obtain compliance with the law and has attempted, in a series of speeches, to prod the nation's educators into recognizing the need to be bolder in pressing for integrated schools.

Both he and the Office's school desegregation guidelines will be the subject, after election, of hearings by a special subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee. These hearings too, are a defensive action. The House Rules Committee wanted to name another subcommittee to investigate guidelines, and that one would have been controlled by vengeful Southerners. The Judiciary Subcommittee, under Rep. Peter Rodino (D., N.J.) is better balanced. Its other members are: Robert T. Ashmore, (D., S.C.), Robert W. Kastenmeier (D., Wis.), James C. Corman (D., Calif.), William Cramer (R., Fla.), Charles McC. Mathias (R., Md.) and Clark MacGregor (R., Minn.)

A Chance To Tell The Truth About Desegregation

This subcommittee could perform a valuable service to the country if it undertook to hear not only government officials but to listen to the heart-breaking stories of Negro parents, teachers and students who have tried to improve their educational opportunities and find that the guidelines give them very little help. Their stories of economic reprisals, harassment, threats and physical beatings might convince the nation that the guidelines are too mild, not too harsh and that desegreation is going too slow, not too fast.

Last Chance To Strike Crippling Amendments

Both the Stennis and Fountain amendments are subject to further scrutiny in House-Senate conferences. The chances of doing something about them are slim, but we must try. Conferees for the Elementary and Secondary Education Act have not, as this is written, been formally named. However, they will be drawn, on the Senate side, from a group consisting of Senator Lister Hill (D., Ala.), chairman of Labor and Public Welfare, and Senators Wayne Morse (D., Ore.), Ralph Yarborough (D., Tex.), Joseph Clark (D., Pa.), Jennings Randolph (D., W.Va.),

Robert F. Kennedy (D., N.Y.), Winston Prouty (R., Vt.), Jacob Javits (R., N.Y.) and Peter Dominick (R., Colo.); and on the House side, conferees will include Adam C. Powell (D., N.Y.),(chairman of House, Education and Labor), the ranking Republican, William H. Ayres (R., O.), Carl D. Perkins (D., Ky.), John Brademas (D., Ind.), Ralph J. Scott (D., N.C.), Hugh Carey (D., N.Y.), Frank Thompson (D., N.J.), William D. Ford (D., Mich.), Charles E. Goodell (R., N.Y.), John M. Ashbrook (R., O.) and Alphonzo Bell (R., Cal.).

Your organizations and members in their home districts should send wires to these men at once, urging them to strike the Fountain amendment from the Elementary and Secondary Education bill so that the work of desegregating the nation's schools can go forward without obstacles.

The conference on the Stennis amendment will most likely be underway by the time you read this. We will be working in Washington to try to get it taken out.

DEMONSTRATION CITIES BILL ALSO THREATENED

After seeing what the House did to prevent the non-existent threat of busing in the education bill, one can only face with anxiety what may be attempted when the Demonstration Cities bill comes up later this week, probably Thursday or Friday. The bill the Senate passed (S.3708) and which the House will consider is meant to give a group of cities in this country an opportunity to demonstrate how to rebuild entire neighborhoods--generally the blighted "core sections" which have become Negro slums. The backlash bugaboo is working against any rational approach here, too. Rep. Paul Fino (R., N.Y.) in spite of repeated assurances that nothing in the bill countenances the correction of racial imbalance, has proposed two amendments, one to prevent any busing of white pupils into schools in demonstration neighborhoods and another that would take schools out of any demonstration planning. Both are crippling proposals. What we need here are your wires to all members of Congress urging them to vote for the Demonstration Cities bill as it comes from committee and to reject all amendments.

October 7, 1966

STATEMENT BY ROY WILKINS, CHAIRMAN OF THE LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS ON CURRENT ATTACKS ON SCHOOL DESEGREGATION

The House adoption yesterday of the Fountain amendment, a provision that would make it impossible for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to withhold funds from school districts that discriminate without protracted hearings, is the latest and perhaps most devastating blow in the current campaign to destroy the civil rights advances of the last few years.

It is an extension of the on-going attack on the school desegregation guidelines and on Commissioner of Education Harold Howe 2d. It will encourage further the enemies of civil rights who have already been emboldened by the election victories of the segregationists and indications of a so-called white backlash. It reflects the absolutely baseless charges now circulating that HEW is "too harsh" in its administration of the guidelines and is moving "too fast." When after 12 years only 8 percent of Southern schools are desegregated no one can say we are going too fast. And no one can say HEW has pushed desegregation too vigorously when despite widely documented violations it has withheld funds from only 89 of 7,000 hospitals and 37 of 1,800 Southern school districts.

As for Harold Howe, he is under attack because he has been outspoken in calling for compliance with the laws he adminsters. The charges of the segregationists are a pretext for trying to get rid of him. If they succeed in their campaign against him, no conscientious official will be safe. They will have won a victory against enforcement that can only create bitterness and despair.

It is a terrible irony that a Congress which has done so much for law and order now does so much to make it difficult to obtain obedience to the law. This Congress slashed funds badly needed for enforcement. It is now pressing new restrictions upon government agencies. Its own abuse of legislative process can only feed unrest and disillusion among Negroes and spur on the bigots of the North and South to new excesses.

We call upon all members of Congress who worked for enactment of recent civil rights legislation to defend their own laws--and reject the crippling amendments of the last two weeks. We call upon the President to stand behind the men he has named to office. And we call upon the public to recognize that nothing can create more disrespect for law than the vilification of public officials trying to uphold it.

TEXT OF THE FOUNTAIN AMENDMENT AND THE ROLL-CALL VOTE ON IT

1. Here's the Amendment:

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — HOUSE

October 6, 1966

"PART G. COMPLIANCE WITH SECTION 602 OF TITLE VI OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1964

"SEC. 171. The Commissioner of Education shall not defer action or order action deferred on any application by local educational agencies for funds authorized to be appropriated by this Act or by any Act amended by this Act on the basis of alleged noncompliance with the provisions of title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 unless and until, as provided by section 602 of title VI, there has been an express finding on the record, after opportunity for a hearing, that such local educational agency has failed to comply with the provisions of title VI."

And on line 10, strike out "G" and insert "H", and on line 11, strike out "171" and insert "181".

MEMO: No. 96
October 26, 1966

TO: Cooperating Organizations
FROM: Arnold Aronson, Secretary

SOME CIVIL RIGHTS VICTORIES BRIGHTEN THE END OF CONGRESS

For the civil rights movement, the last week of the 89th Congress was a cliffhanger. After those gloomy days in which it looked as if it was going to undercut any meaningful attempt to desegregate the nation's schools and hospitals, Congress reversed itself and left enough of its own laws intact to provide a firm basis for enforcement.

These last minute reconsiderations followed strong protests from organizations in the Leadership Conference and we can count them as victories, but only in the sense that what was avoided was much worse.

Schools And Hospitals Threatened

Two amendments to pending bills threatened to cripple Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the section that prohibits discrimination in all federally-assisted programs. As we have said before (see MEMOS No.94 and No.95) the amendment that Rep. L.H. Fountain (D., N.C.) was able to add to the Elementary and Secondary Education Act might well have had the effect of indefinitely preventing the Commissioner of Education from deferring funds to a school district even when he had reason to believe it was discriminating; and the amendment that Senator John Stennis (D., Miss.) succeeded in attaching to the Appropriations bill for the Departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare, would have given hospitals and other medical facilities a means of resegregating patients under the guise of separating them to protect their physical or mental well-being.

Both amendments were adopted by a Congress angered by summer riots and cries of black power and made jittery by fears of what the white backlash might do to them in an election year. Fortunately, both bills had to go to conference and in that calmer atmosphere good sense prevailed. The Commissioner's right to defer funds for a limited period was written into law and the Stennis amendment was deleted from the Labor-HEW bill.

School Funds Still Deferrable

Under the original Fountain amendment, the Commissioner of Education would have lost one of the principle means he has for compelling school districts to desegregate. He has, on a highly selective and limited basis, deferred funds for new programs in school districts that he believes have been discriminating on the basis of race in their old ones. The Stennis amendment would have kept him from deferring funds until there had been a full hearing, a procedure that would have prevented him from being able to keep any funds back for at least a year. The House-Senate conference committee accepted a compromise offered by Senator Jacob Javits (R., N.Y.) that permits deferral for a limited period.

Authority Without Money

HEW spokesmen profess to be pleased with the compromise. They say it leaves them in a stronger position than before, since their power to defer funds is now recognized in the law. Before, they deferred according to their interpretation of their powers under Title VI. They also say that setting limits on deferrals will speed up their work of desegregation.

The catch, though, is that HEW is short of personnel and Congress did nothing to alleviate that shortage when it cut $927,000 out of the department's enforcement budget. Senator Wayne Morse (D., Oregon), one of the conferees, reminded the Senate of that cut when the compromise on the Fountain amendment was brought before the body and said he hoped next year "the appropriations committees in both Houses would look favorably on any supplemental appropriations which the Department might request, to meet the requirements we are now imposing upon them."

HEW States Its Hospital Policy

The price for getting the Stennis amendment out of the Labor-HEW Appropriations bill was the inclusion in the conference report of letters from HEW Secretary John W. Gardner, stating the department's present policy in regard to segregating patients for health reasons. On the surface HEW's policy would appear to have the same effect as the amendment. Both are meant to permit hospitals and other medical facilities to consider race in making room and ward assignments, without fear of losing federal funds, wherever an attending physician and the chief medical officer decide it is necessary to do so to protect the physical or mental well-being of a particular patient. There is a crucial difference, however, between the Stennis proposal and present policy.

The Stennis amendment would have prevented HEW from inquiring into possible abuses of the policy and would have given hospitals a free hand. The Secretary's letters note that the Department retains the right of review wherever it suspects that a pattern or practice of segregation is being established.

A word of thanks should go to Rep. John E. Fogarty (D., R.I.), leader of the House conferees, whose opposition to the Stennis amendment finally led to its deletion.

Fino Amendments Beaten

There was another victory in these last weeks. Rep. Paul Fino (R., N.Y.) had planned to offer amendments to the Demonstrations Cities bill that would have gravely hampered the program (see MEMO No. 95). One would have prevented students outside a demonstration area from being brought in by bus to help integrate schools and another, more serious one, would have explicitly prohibited any consideration of school locations and racial balance in school districts in making grants. Mr. Fino's efforts to go beyond even these drastic amendments and take out a whole section out of the bill were finally defeated, but not before the House adopted language, offered by floor managers for the bill, that specifically said nothing in the Act would require "forced busing" of children or any change in the neighborhood concept of schools.

Negative Victories

Measured against the damage Congress seemed ready to do to the present laws, we can derive some satisfaction from the successful efforts to thwart the attempts to undermine Title VI. But these were negative victories. The civil rights movement was in the position of accepting reasonable compromises when anything less than full and forthright enforcement of existing law is unreasonable and wrong.

HOME RULE FOR D. C. IS KILLED

Another casualty of the anti-civil rights sentiment in Congress was the attempt by Senator Morse to add home rule for the District of Columbia as a rider to a higher education bill. Defeat of the Morse rider furnished another example of the power of the filibuster and the inadequacy of present Senate rules to deal with it. Although a majority of the Senate seemed ready to vote for home rule, its leaders could not muster the two-thirds of those present and voting they needed to cut off unlimited debate.

This only underscores again, the need to change Rule 22, the one that prescribes the conditions for cloture, in order to permit the Senate to express its will.

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS CLINIC TO BE HELD OCTOBER 27

The first KNOW YOUR RIGHTS clinic, including a series of slides showing the individual's rights when he encounters the law, will be held on October 27th in a church or school in the Summerhill neighborhood in Atlanta. We are still negotiating for the best possible auditorium in the area, and it is possible that in order to secure it, the date might have to be shifted forward or back a day or two. But ACLU members who volunteered to participate in the clinics will receive a separate notice by mail, well in advance, telling them the exact time, date and place of the clinic.

Originally, we had talked about holding training sessions for volunteers in advance of the first clinic so that lawyers could tell how to run them. But since the lawyers themselves have never conducted them before, it now strikes us that the best possible training would be to have the volunteers attend this first clinic to observe first-hand how the lawyers conduct it; what mistakes they may make; what pitfalls they avoid; what questions the audience is likely to ask; what answers constitute legitimiate education and what answers might be construed as giving legal advice.

After this initial experience at an actual clinic, the volunteers will be much better equipped for a second training session with lawyers for a point-by-point review of how a clinic should be run.

If you live outside of the metropolitan Atlanta area, and would like to attend this first clinic with a view to conducting one in your home community, please write or call the ACLU office (523-5398). Perhaps we can help by defraying all or part of your travel expenses.

Response to Booklets Gratifying: The fame of our KNOW YOUR RIGHTS booklet has spread as far away as Rhode Island, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Hawaii. We have had requests from community groups in these places to distribute them, as well as many requests from voluntary agencies and labor unions here in the Southeast who plan to distribute them free in slum neighborhoods. Most of the first run of 15,000 is already spoken for, and if we can finance it, we plan a second 15,000 printing.

To those members who ordered a copy at $1.00, our warmest thanks. It is these individual contributions which are helping to make such widespread free distribution possible. Those members who would like to get their contribution copy for $1.00 may still do so by writing to the ACLU office. We need all the help we can get to pay for the printing and for the clinics.

LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE TO PREPARE HANDBOOK

Legislative Chairman Charlotte Moran has called the first meeting of her Committee for October 5th to draft a Legislative Handbook. The Handbook will include not just a listing of goals, but background material and proposals to the General Assembly for specific legislation. The Committee will focus particular effort this year on laws to achieve:

1. Abolition of the Death Penalty
2. Creation of a Public Defender System
3. Protection of the right of privacy
4. Reform of juvenile offender procedures
5. Protection of the rights of welfare recipients
6. Reform of sex laws

ACLU members were asked to serve on the Legislative Committee because of their expressed interest in one or more of these topics. But of course, we do not know the background of every single one of our members. If you are concerned with any of the above pieces of legislation -- and you do not need to know anything about how to draft a bill -- we urge you to attend this October 5th meeting which will be at Bradshaw's Cafeteria (formerly Jay's) on the top floor of the First Federal Building, Marietta and Forsyth Streets. The private room in which the Committee is meeting will be posted on the cafeteria bulletin board.

If you cannot attend the meeting, we would welcome your suggestions by mail.

A LETTER FROM "ONE OF THE KIRBY MCCOYS"

Last month's Newsletter recounted how the threat of ACLU intervention on behalf of 12-year-old Kirby McCoy, sentenced to five years as an adult offender, resulted in his transfer to a juvenile institution. Since then, we have learned that the State, evidently taking no chances of further legal action, has on its own initiative also trqnsferred two thirteen year old prisoners from the same prison to a juvenile home.

A few days after the story about Kirby McCoy appeared in the press, we received a letter from a man who has spent the major part of his life as an inmate in penal institutions. Here are some excerpts:

"After committing a crime...a boy is taken to the local jail. Some advanced jails bathe, delouse and change clothes along with taking finger prints and picture. Most merely do the latter. He winds up either in the drunk tank or a cell block. If the latter, it will be a toss-up as to whether his cell mate is a murderer, bum, sexual degenerate, alcoholic or petty thief. If he has some luck, depending on the season and traffic, he will be alone. If so, he may then enjoy the luxury of crying.

"After weeks or months in our dingy local jails, reeking with body odors, unwashed clothes, bad food, poor ventilation and lack of sunlight, the prison he is finally sentenced to seems slightly less horrible to our recuit youngster...

"But unless he manages to escape soon after arriving, the lessons prison has to teach are quickly forthcoming and repeated daily during his stay: Authority means a group of people to be feared and despised, especially the lowest man on the ladder -- the guard. He will also learn that the spirit has no place here. He must daily practice resignation to the moronic routine of work without meaning, play without fun, eating without taste. The nightsoiled reality of prison fosters a negative personality, and when finally released, he is as well-equipped to deal with the challenge of being an ex-con in a free society as can be expected after existing in a vacuum of punishment.

"And so the Kirby McCoys continue to be drafted into the rank and file of convict sub-society by the indifference of the rest of us. The brotherhood of the troubled swells in population as growing numbers of our young are processed through a state apparatus which leaves them...only the sour taste of despair...

"Antagonized, troubled, without much human feeling, they drift aimlessly from a painful yesterday and a hostile today toward a hopeless tomorrow."

The writer of this letter joined the ACLU last month.

BILL OF RIGHTS DAY ACTIVITIES PLANNED

December 15th will mark the 175th anniversary of the adoption of the Bill of Rights. The ACLU of Georgia will mark this occasion in two ways:

1. We will hold a big dinner with a well-known guest speaker on the eve of Bill of Rights Day, December 14th. This affair will serve as our major fund-raising effort of the year. The funds will be raised solely through the sale of tickets to the dinner at ten dollars each. There will be no solicitation at the dinner itself.

Our guest speaker is a man who has had a major hand in creating and directing the legal strategy in the historic 1954 school integration case before the Supreme Court, as well as in other landmark decisions.

He is the author of what the New York Times called the "indispensable" work on law and race relations.

What he has to say about the Negro revolution and the law will be as meaningful to laymen as to lawyers.

His name and further details will be announced in the next Newsletter. But the first five people (excluding ACLU Executive Committee members) who send in a reservation between now and then, and who correctly guess our guest speaker's identity, will be given a ticket to the dinner free.

2. Last year, we distributed a widely-noted questionnaire on the Bill of Rights to 1,000 college students. We would like to repeat this project on a much enlarged scale this year.

If you are in a position to ask at least 25 colleagues, friends business associates or students to take this quiz, please let us know and we will be glad to send you the number of copies you need.

Your responsibility will be to distribute the questionnaires and then collect them when completed, letting us know when you send them back to us the kinds of people who answered them --student, housewife, office worker, etc. You need not grade the answers.

RUN-OFF POSTSCRIPT

The American Civil Liberties Union is a non-partisan organization. We do not endorse political candidates. (And never have we been more grateful for that policy than in the present situation.)

It must be obvious to all that no matter who wins the Governor's chair in November, there may be changes in the climate for civil liberties in Georgia.

It is the responsibility of each of us to try to preserve an atmosphere in which freedom to dissent will flourish. This may mean closer contact with legislators sponsoring bill which affect civil liberties (see p. 2). It may mean work through voluntary agencies to create new forums where broad spectrums of opinion are represented. It may mean increased watchfulness of state and local officials to see that the right of every Georgian to equal treatment under the law is respected.

And most important of all, it means building the Georgia ACLU. Now, as never before, we need your help in getting your friends and colleagues as new members. Our rapid growth could make all the difference in whether we will be a well-meaning but ineffective force, or a vigorous, fearless voice for freedom in Georgia.

THE ACLU SUIT IN THE GUBERNATORIAL ELECTION

By this time, most Georgians have probably had enough of the Gubernatorial election. But although its entertainment value has long since been exhausted, its outcome in the courts will have the most far-reaching consequences for us all.

Within a few days, the Supreme Court will decide whether the Georgia Constitutional provision permitting the General Assembly to select the Governor is constitutional or unconstitutional. That part of their decision is fairly simple. The ACLU is also asking the Court, in the event that this procedure is found unconstitutional, to provide guidance as to an appropriate remedy. That is not quite so simple.

Here is a summary of the issues in this case:

1. The ACLU's argument before the three-judge Federal Court in Atlanta was that the General Assembly was malapportioned and therefore the voter would not be fairly represented by his legislator when the latter cast his vote for Governor. We pointed out that the same court had already ruled that a malapportioned legislature could not pass a new state Constitution, and that surely selection of the Governor was a responsibility of equal magnitude.

The three-judge court, however, went one step further. It stated that even if the General Assembly were perfectly apportioned down to the last man, it would still deprive the people of their votes. The Court noted that the General Assembly had the power to select the candidate who received not merely less than a majority of the votes cast, but indeed, the man who received less than a plurality of the popular vote -- in other words, the number two man. The legislators were under no compulsion to cast their votes for the candidate who had received the plurality in the district they represented.

Thus, the court ruled, election by legislature is a violation of the one-man, one-vote concept established in previous Supreme Court decisions.

2. Now, the Supreme Court must decide whether to support the lower court and rule the election of the Governor by the General Assembly unconstitutional, or to overrule the lower court and declare the procedure constitutional.

In the event that they find the procedure unconstitutional, a remedy -- something to substitute for the present procedure -- must be found. Another set of plaintiffs, in addition to the ACLU, is also participating in this suit. They represent the Callaway interests, and their political stake is as follows:

o They want to prevent the General Assembly from selecting the Governor. They feel that if the decision were left to the General Assembly, it would probably select Maddox, since the majority of legislators are Democrats.

o The remedy which the Callaway people are suggesting is a run-off election, limited to the two top vote-getters, Callaway and Maddox. They feel that in such a run-off, in which write-in and other candidates would be barred, Callaway would pick up sufficient former Write-In votes to win the run-off.

3. Of course, the Callaway group represents a partisan, political interest. The ACLU, which is entirely non-partisan, and which is concerned only with the right of the voter to cast his ballot and have it counted, takes an entirely different position. Our suggested remedy is a special election. Here is the reasoning behind it:

Georgia voters were decived -- not purposely, of course -- but deceived nevertheless, when they were told that the General Assembly could select the Governor in the event of any candidate's failing to receive a majority. This universally-held, but erroneous, belief, quite obviously played a part in influencing the voter on how to cast his ballot. Voters who might have made another choice, or "gone fishing" voted for Callaway. Others abstained or wrote-in because the Georgia Constitution left the decision to the General Assembly.

Obviously, the most intelligent of voters cannot cast a meaningful vote if the rules are to be changed on him in midstream. Had the voters known that the election of the Governor by the General Assembly would be voided, the result might have been substantially different.

The ACLU brief also noted that hundreds of voting complaints have been received: segregated voting, deprivation of privacy, failure to count write-in ballots, mechanical failure of Voto-matic machines, sabotage of Voto-matics by inserting obstacles in the holes, etc. The Georgia Secretary of State has called a public hearing about election complaints. In addition, the U. S. House of Representatives is conducting a separate inquiry into the Fourth District Congressional election.

In asking for a special election, the ACLU brief stated:

"There has been a complete failure of election in Georgia. Georgia citizens relied upon the constitutionality of -- and cast their ballots under -- the Constitution of Georgia. The declaration of the unconstitutionality of Article V, Section I, Paragraph IV (Sec. 2-3004, Ga. Code Annotated) voids the General Election. The Georgia electorate will have been misled, not by the deliberate acts of the candidates, not by the communications media, not by the Attorney General of Georgia, but by the State's Constitution itself...

"An election that arises from some exigency or special need outside the normal routine...is the statutory definition of the words 'special election'. That the failure of election November 8, 1966, fits this definition seems hardly questionable."

The ACLU plaintiffs in the Supreme Court are John Morris, Director of the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity; and Florence Robin, Director of the ACLU of Georgia. They are represented by Charles Morgan, Jr., Director of the ACLU Southern Regional Office; and of counsel: Morris Brown, Chairman of the ACLU of Georgia Lawyers Committee; M. Laughlin McDonald, counsel for the ACLU's Divil Liberties Defense and Education Fund; and Melvin L. Wulf, National ACLU Legal Director.

BILL OF RIGHTS DAY DINNER FEATURES MAYOR ALLEN AND JACK GREENBERG

ACLU participation in the election suits has catapulted our Georgia affiliate into the headlines. Many people are becoming aware of the ACLU for the first time, and our membership has surged as Georgians recognize that we are trying to protect their right to vote.

There has, expectedly, been a corresponding reaction. After Lester Maddox labelled the ACLU a "left-wing organization supported by rich people" (we wish we could locate a few of those "rich" people) there was an upsurge, too, of crank calls and crackpot letters.

Against this background of action and reaction, the ACLU's Bill of Rights Dinner on December 14th takes on special significance. No matter what the eventual outcome of the gubernatorial race, we believe there have been let loose in Georgia the winds of demagoguery.

So the Bill of Rights Day Dinner means more than a pleasant evening with distinguished guests -- and incidentally, a way for the ACLU to raise money so that it can win a victory for the voters in the election suits. It means, in addition, a show of unity among people who resist the pressures to accept outmoded, unconstitutional rules. And you can be dead certain that a poor attendance will be interpreted as a lack of unity and a sign of weakness.

Most ACLU members have already received their printed invitations to the Dinner. For those members who have just joined, it is to be held on Wednesday, December 14th at 7:30 p.m. at the Riviera Motel in Atlanta.

The participants in the program are:

Mayor Ivan Allen, Jr., who will be presented with the Bill of Rights Day Award by ACLU President Hugh Gibert;

Greetings from Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, President of Morehouse College and W. H. Montague, President of the Georgia AFL-CIO;

Vernon E. Jordan, Jr., Director of the Voter Education Project, who will introduce our Guest Speaker, Jack Greenberg, Director of the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc.

We urge every member to attend what is certain to be a memorable occasion. It is very important that we receive your reservations as quickly as possible, so that we may know in advance how many guests to expect. If you have misplaced your invitation, or didn't get one, please use the coupon below as a reservation form. We look forward to greeting you all personally on December 14th.

Please reserve _____ place(s) for the Bill of Rights Day Dinner, Wednesday, December 14th, 1966 at 7:30 p.m. at the Riviera Motel. $10.00 per person. Check enclosed $_____.

Ad Hoc Committee
on Governor's Educational Conference

Dear Friend of Public Schools:

We need your help! You are no doubt aware that the Georgia Public School System has come under sharp attack from the Maddox administration, ranging from intemperate "ram it" suggestions on Federal aid, to talk of widespread creation of private schools, to concentration of control over the Georgia Board of Education in the hands of the Governor, to congratulations to a local school board for their defiance of law. On September 27-28 the Georgia School Boards Association is sponsoring the annual Governor's Conference on Education. The theme will be "Next Steps in Education". Governor Maddox will keynote the Conference. As one interested in increased support for our public school system would you do the following:

If you have any questions, call me at 525-6468.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Frances Pauley

We the undersigned believe that it is in the system of free public schools that the society of the future begins to take shape; it is here that the strength and the character of American democracy are generated.

The problems and needs of contemporary Georgia demand a program of public education of far greater quality than the one we now have.

All children, regardless of race, economic, social or intellectual position, should be provided with the opportunity for education of good quality from the age of five until that time beyond the age of eighteen when they are either employable or engaged in education beyond the high school.

Investment in the public schools is an investment in people, and in the long run, is the wisest investment any state can make.

We believe, to achieve these goals -

> That the control of Georgia schools must remain with the constitutionally established State School Board and the Board of Regents and remain free from political domination.
> That Georgia must embark on an increased program of school consolidation.
> That efforts must be accelerated to end the dual school system.
> That every available financial source be utilized, Federal State and Local, to improve quality education in our state.
> That any attempt to intitate an alternative system of private schools should be opposed vigorously by all Georgia citizens.

COCKTAIL RECEPTION-WIT'S END-OCT. 9, 4:30 to 7:30 P.M. CASH BAR-DONATION $2.50

Aryeh Neier, Director of the New York ACLU, has accepted our invitation to speak to the Georgia membership on the CRISIS IN THE URBAN GHETTO. This topic was the theme for the ACLU National Development Conference Sept. 8 in Chicago. It promises to be the new thrust of ACLU involvement and relevancy in American life in the future. There is no one more expert in this field than the New York Dir. and you will find Mr. Neier charming, his topic exciting, and he will be delighted to answer questions.

We think Wit's End will be a fun place to meet. This will be your only announcement. If you will indicate the possibility of your attendance, we will know whether to order one bartender or two.

ACLU FAMOUS MEN SERIES

While we were in Chicago we invited to Georgia along with Mr. Neier other ACLU luminaries to meet with the membership and keep us abreast of the action and thinking of ACLU nationally and in other areas. The director of the Washington, D. C. office, Lawrence Speiser, who testifies before the Congress on ACLU matters has accepted, as has Bernard Cohen, vital young lawyer from Virginia who is now handling the Rockwell Burial Case and who won the Loving miscegenation case before the Supreme Court.

Wits End's Phil Erikson has indicated he can also have luncheon meetings and we would like your comments.

VOLUNTEERS NEEDED

The Southern Regional Office of ACLU, 5 Forsyth St., needs volunteers for filing and general clerical work a few hours a week. This package includes a chance to make coffee for Chuck Morgan.

We also are going to be needing many volunteers as we have promised to double our membership in three years. To do this we are being helped by the National Office, with an additional grant to pay for larger quarters so that we may make use of volunteer help. By the time our next newsletter comes out we may have a new address. . .and we will be calling on you for help in a membership drive. Hopefully the Oct. 9 affair will be the start of more frequent meetings on the subjects which interest all of us-Police procedures, Ombudsman, Capital punishment, Juveniles in Jail, The Right to dissent, Conscientious Objection, The right to wear your hair long or as you please - all these are possible subjects for membership meetings. We would appreciate your thinking and comments.

I plan to attend the Oct. 9 Cocktail Reception. Enclosed is my $2.50 donation_____. I will pay at the door_____.

Please send me additional material on Capital Punishment._____

Background Material on Capital Punishment

Attn. Gen. Ramsey Clark

"Modern penology with its correctional and rehabilitation skill affords far greater benefit to society than the death penalty which is inconsistent with its goals. This nation is too good in its purposes to engage in the deliberate taking of a human life as either a punishment or a deterrent to domestic crime".

Capital Punishment as a deterrent to crime has never been proven, rather statistically, the evidence accumulated points to the opposite view. There is no relationship between the crime rate and abolition or retention of Capital Punishment.

A graphic example of the failure of the death penalty as a deterrent is the case of Detective Sergeant William J. Mullrine of Wilmington, Delaware. An advocate of the restoration of the death penalty in that state, he shot and killed his wife ten days after the penalty was reinstated.

If we accept the fact that deterrence is unproven and that revenge is unacceptable we may conclude that the death penalty serves no useful purpose. Legally it can be considered cruel and unusual punishment.

It is fraught with unequal applications. "A man proven guilty is saved from execution by the striking ingenuity of his counsel in an appel to the Supreme Court (Green v. U.S. 1957). But another man goes to his death purely because his attorney neglected to raise a point of procedure at the trial, thereby barring the court from touching the issue (Williams v. Ga. 1955). One man is literally taken from the electric chair after his counsel had the good luck to find a Supreme Court Justice who would issue a temporary stay of execution; upon rehearing the conviction was reversed (Vernon v. Ala. 1941). But another man is executed because the notice of execution arrived seconds too late to halt the flow of lethal gas into the execution chamber (People v. Abbott 1956).

The death penalty is discriminatorily applied. Of those convicted of intentional homicide, only about one percent are executed. Who composes that one percent? According to former Sing Sing Warden Louis E. Lawes, "They come from all kinds of homes and environments. In one respect they were all alike. ALL WERE POOR and most of them friendless." According to Michael Di Salle, former Governor of Ohio, "During my four years as governor, I was never asked to pass on the clemency request of a gangster, syndicated racketeer or hired killer. None of them got the death penalty.. one person sat in death row for two years without a visitor. One maintained the tradition of inviting a guest to share his last meal by inviting his father, who had been serving a life sentence since the condemned man was nine years old. All who had asked for commutation had not possesed the funds of his own to employ counsel...generally insignificant people, whose living or dying made little impact on the need for improving society's approach to law and justice."

A jury in a Capital case must be death qualified. A juror may be disqualified from sitting for mere hesitance to vote for death. Studies indicate that not only is the jury slanted in favor of those who support the death penalty but also that the jury would tend to be more punitive and condemnatory than a group representative of the whole community. Thus the death penalty which should require perfect justice is beset with infringements of the rights of fair trial and due process of law.

Innocent men have been convicted of murder. Imposition of the death penalty denies a man any possible benefit of new evidence, prevents him from benefitting from any new rules of law and furthermore prevents possible rehabilitation. That is truly denial of due process.

The death penalty forces a change in the strategy of the defense. The inequality of resources that usually exists between the state and the defense council, and the fact of the ultimate penalty forces the defense attorney to weigh his chances of winning against the possibility of his client's loss of life, and this is true whether or not the client is actually innocent. The defense becomes a pragmatic, tactical one, a decision based on an attempt to prevent his death rather than to show his client innocent! The death penalty is disproportionately imposed on men, the poor, the less educated and Negroes. Not only are Negroes executed out of proportion to their percentage of the population, but they are executed out of proportion to a comparable group of white criminals.

AN INVITATION

YOU HAVE A STAKE IN PRESERVING THE LIBERTIES GUARANTEED IN THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION AND BILL OF RIGHTS

Come to a meeting to help establish the Huntsville Chapter of the

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

TIME: 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, October 3, 1967.

PLACE: The Recorder's Court Room of the new Huntsville Municipal Building.

PURPOSE: To hear about recent civil liberties victories in Alabama, and about the aims and purposes of the ACLU as well as to form a Steering Committee to organize a Huntsville Chapter.

SPEAKER: C. H. Erskine Smith, Birmingham attorney and Chairman of the ACLU State Affiliate, The Civil Liberties Union of Alabama. Among the several important civil liberties cases which Mr. Smith has successfully handled is that of Reynolds vs. Sims, the original reapportionment case which was taken to the U.S. Supreme Court and thus became the controlling one for the entire country.

We are asking you to give us your support in this important venture so that we might better defend your liberties in Alabama. Huntsville has the usual civil liberties problems of the South involving local and state government violations of Due Process and Equality Before the Law, but it also has unique civil liberties problems caused by the pervasive influence of massive federal installations and their civilian contractors in the areas of Freedom of Belief, Expression, and Association.

NOW IS THE TIME TO LEARN THE FACTS ABOUT THIS IMPORTANT ORGANIZATION AND ITS VITAL PROGRAM OF THE DEFENSE OF CIVIL LIBERTIES IN ALABAMA.

We invite you to come to this meeting and bring your friends. Come on out and discover fellow civil libertarians.

REPORT OF THE NOMINATING COMMITTEE

The membership of the Georgia ACLU has voted overwhelmingly to accept the revised Constitution submitted to it on March 10th. Accordingly, the Nominating Committee has prepared a slate based on these revisions, which call for an Adivosry Committee of not less than 25 members nor more than 30, and an Executive Committee, drawn from that Advisory Board, of five members plus the officers and members of standing committees (elected by the Advisory Board).

The list of nominees below is submitted to you as prescribed by Article IX of the Constitution: "At least two months before the annual meeting, the membership shall be notified by mail of the nominees proposed by the nominating committee. Additional nominations may be made by petition of any five members, provided there is attached to such a petition a signed statement expressing the nominee's willingness to serve if elected; any such petition to be filed with the Secretary not later than one month before the annual meeting."

As noted, the Constitution permits up to 30 members on the Advisory Committee, and the nominating committee has designated 27. If the membership nominates more candidates than for the three vacancies, the 30 members with the largest pluralities will serve.

The Nominating Committee's recommendations for the Executive Committee are designated by an asterisk before the nominee's name. You may also submit nominations for these positions, drawn from names on the Advisory Committee (making certain that here, too, you enclose a statement by the nominee that he is willing to serve on the Executive Committee.)

This is NOT a ballot. You will receive a ballot after April 15th which will include nominations from the membership in addition to the names below.

November, 1966

Dear Educator:

For more than fifty years the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith has been a leader in the cause of human freedom and social justice, fighting on many fronts to end discrimination, segregation and other ills which deny equal opportunity to all citizens.

Through its publications program the ADL can provide you with up-to-the-minute reports and studies on various aspects of civil rights, prejudice, extremism, quality education for all children and intergroup relations.

Today no educator, social scientist, or other truly responsible citizen can afford to ignore such information. Can you?

Some of the Anti-Defamation League's materials are indicated on the enclosed flyers. May we call your attention to the following:

- Christian Beliefs and Anti-Semitism. Report of a pioneer and major study, conducted by the University of California Survey Research Center, which analyzes the linkage between the religious beliefs held by many Christians and their anti-Semitic feelings and attitudes.

- Feiffer on Civil Rights. Feiffer needs no introduction. This brilliant collection of his cartoons on one of the most crucial issues of our day is being published, at Feiffer's request, exclusively by the Anti-Defamation League. The Foreword by Bayard Rustin is an illuminating companion piece.

- The Apathetic Majority: A Study Based on Public Responses to the Eichmann Trial. Social and political scientists - and all concerned with understanding the factors that mold or influence mass opinion -- will want to read this frank and painstaking report.

- Research Annual on Intergroup Relations - 1965. Provides digests of over 450 current research projects on ethnic, racial, religious and national group relations conducted in the United States and 18 foreign countries.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

1965 FACT SHEET NO. 3

To help protect unemployed workers and their families properly, the AFL-CIO calls for improvements and reforms in the nation's unemployment compensation system, with federal standards on benefit amounts and extended benefits for the long-term jobless. Changes should include:

1. Weekly benefits geared to lost weekly wages of jobless workers.

2. Supplemental extended benefits for jobless workers who have used up all their UC benefits under state law.

3. Full eligibility for all jobless wage and salary workers, with less restrictive conditions.

4. Better financing for the UC system to provide adequate contributions and safe reserves.

The AFL-CIO urges the 89th Congress to amend the federal unemployment compensation law to provide these improvements or to require similar state action as a condition of continued participation in the federal-state unemployment insurance system.

Income Protection Weakened

The competition between states for industry development through low payroll taxes continues to undermine the UC program. Experience rating—which is contrary to sound, long-term financing—has drastically cut UC reserves accumulated during World War II. In several states, reserves are so low they would provide benefits for no more than a few months in a recession—a situation which serves as an excuse for reducing benefits.

These forces have acted to reduce benefits relative to average wage levels. Originally the great majority of unemployed workers could expect benefit payments of at least half their weekly wage loss; today they average only one-third and some get as little as one-fifth. In every state the maximum benefit is less relative to average state wages than it was in 1939.

Most UC benefits end within the first six months, but long-term unemployment has increased in the last 10 years. Furthermore, unfair restrictions and penalties injure jobless workers and their families by denying them benefits, contrary to the wage insurance principle. Many state UC laws are written as if UC benefits were gifts by the employer conditioned on workers' good behavior. As a result of all the restrictions in the UC program—in coverage, benefits, and eligibility—only one out of every two jobless workers draws benefits, and only one out of every five dollars lost through unemployment is replaced.

Reform Needed

The AFL-CIO urges these specific changes in the federal UC law:

- Extension of coverage for (1) workers in all establishments with one or more workers; (2) employees in non-profit institutions; (3) farm workers; and (4) all other workers with a regular employee relationship.
- Increase state benefits to provide at least half the worker's lost weekly wage up a state-wide maximum set at two-thirds of each state's average weekly wage.
- Provide federal UC benefits up to the 52nd week of joblessness for all eligible workers who use up their state UC benefits, who have a firm attachment to the labor force and can't find work.
- Limit the use of arbitrary disqualifications and prohibit the imposition of penalties of indefinite duration.
- Improve UC financing by (1) increasing the taxable wage base; (2) equalization grants to states with abnormally high benefit costs; (3) all states to adjust tax rates without regard to experience rating; and (4) require solvency standards for reserve funds.

Urge your Congressmen and your Senators to vote for improvements and reforms of the unemployment compensation along the lines recommended by the AFL-CIO.

Prepared by the AFL-CIO Social Security Department. For additional copies of this fact sheet, write to the AFL-CIO Department of Legislation, 815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006.

AFL-CIO LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT

EDUCATION

1965 FACT SHEET NO. 5

The AFL-CIO calls for quality education for all American young people, wherever their homes may be, however rich or poor their parents, whatever their race or nationality background. To make this kind of education universally available to every child and young person in the nation will require a much larger financial commitment to education than we have yet made, but it is a commitment which the nation can and must afford.

The 89th Congress should enact legislation which will carry on the tradition of achievement in education set by the 88th Congress. The 88th Congress passed a record number of bills to improve education opportunities throughout the nation—including aid for vocational education, college classroom construction, library services and construction, and improvements to the National Defense Education Act. But urgent education needs remain for action by the 89th Congress.

AFL-CIO Program

To achieve quality education for all Americans, the AFL-CIO calls for prompt legislative action in 1965 on the following:

1. A major program of federal aid to elementary and secondary schools to help meet all needs, including construction, in the categories of instruction covered by the National Defense Education Act. This should include construction grants for all schools.

2. Substantial federal aid to schools which serve large numbers of culturally-disadvantaged children from low-income areas, including work-study opportunities for vocational and high school students.

3. Comprehensive assistance, embracing scholarships, expanded student loans and work-study opportunities, for junior college and college students. The Cold War GI Bill of Rights would help meet this need.

4. Appropriation of additional federal funds to foster the growth of community junior colleges.

Elementary and Secondary Schools

The needs of elementary and secondary schools are particularly urgent. The Johnson administration has proposed a national goal of 400,000 new classrooms and 800,000 additional teachers by 1970. Such a goal would require federal aid of at least $2 billion a year.

Inequality of educational opportunity has increased in recent years. Per pupil expenditures for elementary and secondary education vary from less than $200 in some schools to over $1,300 in others. States and communities vary considerably in their ability to finance education. Illinois, for example, with an average per capita personal income of $2,945 spends 3.7% of its income for elementary and secondary schools, an amount which yields a per pupil expenditure of $480. New Mexico, on the other hand, having a per capita income of only $1,887, spends 6.5% of its income for its schools, but this yields only $440 per pupil.

Even states which do have adequate resources do not have a tax structure that can meet their educational needs. Sales taxes and property taxes provide approximately 80% of all school revenue. These regressive taxes hit low and middle-income families hardest. They fail to tap the best sources of potential revenue for the schools, personal and business income. Only a substantial program of federal aid—financed through the progressive federal income tax—can make equal opportunity in education a reality throughout the nation.

Urban and Rural Schools

Schools in urban and rural centers of low income have special problems. In almost every city, the movement of higher income families to the suburbs has damaged the city's tax base while leaving the city with the high cost job of educating large concentrations of children from low income families and from disadvantaged minority groups. Big city education is expensive, but most city schools receive less than their fair share of state support. Revenues from state programs provide more than 43% of the average school district's budget, but less than 35% of the budgets of school systems having enrollments of over 100,000.

The erosion of the tax base in big cities, as higher income families move to the suburbs, and the lack of adequate state aid have brought about budget crises in most large city school systems. Special attention to big city school needs should be a feature of any federal school aid program.

Similarly, schools in many rural areas lack adequate resources with which to meet the tasks before them. They too need special federal aid.

Higher Education

Increasing costs of tuition, room and board threaten to price higher education beyond the reach of young people from low income and even moderate income families. A four-year college education costs anywhere between $4,500 and $12,000. Unless the U.S. quickly starts an expanded program of federal scholarship, loan, and work-study opportunity for college students, our nation will waste the potential of hundreds of thousands of young people. Expanded federal aid for community junior colleges will help students from low-income families.

Dangerous proposals for income tax credits for money spent by parents on their children's college education may be revived in the 89th Congress. Such "tuition tax credit" proposals offer little or no assistance to lower income families and even the apparent benefits to higher and middle income families would be wiped out by equivalent tuition increases. Such "student aid" would be more expensive in the long run than federal aid and would not help those who need it most. The AFL-CIO opposes such proposals.

Action Program for Congress

The action program for the 1965 session of the 89th Congress should include:

1. A $2 billion-a-year program of aid to elementary and secondary schools to improve facilities and teaching of subjects in categories specified in the National Defense Education Act—science, mathematics, history, civics, geography, modern foreign languages, English and reading.

2. Substantial aid to schools serving culturally-disadvantaged children from low-income areas, including work-study opportunities for vocational and high school students. At least 30% of available funds should be earmarked for such low-income urban and rural areas.

3. At least $500 million for scholarships, expanded student loans and work-study opportunities, for junior college and college students, and passage of a Cold War GI Bill of Rights.

4. More federal funds for community junior colleges.

Urge your Senators and your Congressmen to support aid for education along lines recommended by the AFL-CIO.

AFL-CIO LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT

WAR ON POVERTY

1965 FACT SHEET NO. 8

The AFL-CIO strongly supports the "war on poverty" proclaimed by President Johnson—but the AFL-CIO will fight against any proposals which would undermine hard-won protections for working people, particularly those established by the Fair Labor Standards Act.

President Johnson's declaration of war on poverty is fully consistent with the policy of the American labor movement, which has been fighting poverty since the first union was established. Almost every item in the AFL-CIO legislative program is directed toward ending want and poverty.

The first legislation specifically identified with the war on poverty is the Economic Opportunity Act passed by Congress in 1964. Under its provisions, an effort is under way to provide greater educational opportunities, vocational training, and work experience for young people aged 16 through 21 from low-income families.

The Act also provides financial support for a variety of urban and rural community action programs which will be geared to increasing employability and otherwise aiding poverty-stricken people. These and other anti-poverty projects will need more money if they are to be effective.

Jobs and Poverty

A successful war on poverty must provide adequate full-time jobs at decent pay for more than half of the families in want who have a breadwinner at work or seeking a job.

This means that more than half the poverty problem is connected with unemployment, low wages and involuntary part-time work. Among the AFL-CIO legislative proposals to help these needy are:

- Enactment of a vast new federal public works program to create jobs and, at the same time, provide public improvements of long-time worth.
- Expanded coverage under the Fair Labor Standards Act coupled with an increase in the minimum wage to $2 per hour. No anti-poverty program should tolerate proposals which undermine wage-hour coverage and minimum wage standards. The AFL-CIO will fight such proposals.
- Reduction of the basic work-week to 35 hours with an increase in the overtime penalty.
- Improvement of unemployment compensation through the application of federal standards.
- The end of all provisions of existing federal labor law which conflict with the established policy of the United States to further collective bargaining.

About one-third of all poverty-stricken families consist of people past retirement age. To help these elderly who are in want, increased benefits under Social Security, including hospital care, must be passed by the 89th Congress.

The remainder of the poverty-stricken are in families whose traditional breadwinner is disabled or dead. They need expanded Social Security benefits for survivors and the disabled, improved workmen's compensation and public assistance, and family income when the breadwinner is ill.

The end of unjust regressive taxes levied on basic necessities and the expansion of decent housing for low-income families are also of great importance in a successful war against poverty.

Urge your Senators and your Congressmen to vote for adequate funds for the war on poverty and to vote for other anti-poverty measures supported by the AFL-CIO.

Prepared by the AFL-CIO Research Department. For additional copies, write to the AFL-CIO Department of Legislation, 815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006.

AFL-CIO LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT

CONSUMER PROTECTION

1965 FACT SHEET NO. 9

To protect American families against hidden high costs, dangerous products, and deceptive or misleading advertising, the 89th Congress must enact strong effective consumer protection legislation.

Here are five key issues in the AFL-CIO consumer protection program.

1. Truth in Lending

Payments on installment and mortgage debt now account for over one-fifth of average family income in the United States. Consumers have the right to plain information on what they are going to have to pay when they borrow money. Testimony before a Senate Banking Subcommittee has shown widespread concealment of high interest charges on consumer credit through misleading methods of stating financial costs.

Legislation sponsored by Senator Douglas (D-Ill.) would require lenders to "tell the truth," in understandable language, as to how much any particular loan or installment contract is going to cost the borrower. Lenders would have to give a clear statement of what the total finance charges are in dollars and cents and what interest rate is on the loan in terms of simple annual interest.

Few borrowers know that the "small service charge" of 1½% on department store charge accounts is actually 18 percent per year; that the 3 percent per month plan of small loan companies is 36% per year; that the 4½% new car financing plan of some commercial banks is really 9 percent per year; or that the advertised 5% rate on improvement loans is not less than a 6% first mortgage, but nearly twice as much or 10 percent per year.

2. Truth in Packaging

Legislation sponsored by Senator Hart (D-Mich.) was developed as a result of hearings by the Senate Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee on commercial packaging practices which confuse and mislead shoppers. Some packages are misleadingly large in relation to their actual contents. Some come in odd units so that prices cannot be easily compared with competing packages. Some "economy" sizes cost more per ounce than regular sizes. Too often, hard-to-read net weight statements and deceptive pictures increase the confusion.

Truth-in-packaging legislation would set ground rules to bring order out of the present packaging chaos and thus end deceptive, misleading packaging.

3. Loopholes in the Food, Drug, and Cosmetics Act

One of the most basic "consumer safety" statutes on the books is the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetics Act. The AFL-CIO urges that these serious loopholes in the law be closed:

- The law fails to require manufacturers to test cosmetics for safety before selling them to the public.
- The law does not require "therapeutic devices" (mechanical equipment for medical diagnosis and treatment) to be pretested for safety or effectiveness.
- The weakness of present controls over "pep pills" and "goof balls" has led to a large bootleg market in these psychotoxic products, endangering both users and the general pubilc.

4. High Drug Prices

Price-gouging and profiteering by drug companies will remain a problem until the Congress reforms the drug patent monopoly conditions under which manufacturers are permitted to hold long-term exclusive patents on drugs. At the very least, the 89th Congress should pass legislation to condition the patent monopoly privilege in reasonable consideration of the public welfare in the prices charged for drugs essential to human life and health.

5. Anti-Consumer Price-Fixing

Big business price-fixing efforts hide behind high-sounding slogans like "fair trade," "fair competitive practices" and "quality stabilization." Such special-interest "resale price maintenance" legislation would legalize price-fixing so that resellers of any brand-name product would have to sell at a price set by the manufacturer.

This would stop retail price competition on brand-name products and cost consumers $14 billion in higher prices. Resale price maintenance is touted as protection for "small business" but its chief benefits would go to big chain stores, big department stores, and big manufacturers.

Urge your Senators and Congressmen to vote for consumer protection legislation. Tell them:

1. Support Truth-in-Lending
2. Support Truth-in-Packaging
3. Plug loopholes in Food and Drug Law
4. Break patent monopolies to reduce high drug prices
5. Oppose price-fixing "fair trade," "quality stabilization," resale price maintenance.

HEALTH SERVICES, FACILITIES AND PERSONNEL

1965 FACT SHEET NO. 12

Accelerating advances in medical science hold forth the promise of good health and long life to a degree never before imagined. The AFL-CIO insists that the benefits of this astonishing progress must be made available to all Americans. Here are four specific proposals for action by the 89th Congreess.

1. Federal Scholarship Aid to Students in the Health Professions

There is a pressing need for skilled personnel to man the hospitals and other health facilities now being built. At present there are not enough doctors to provide adequate care to our present population, and the doctor-patient ratio is declining. Legislation enacted in the 88th Congress provides federal aid to medical, dental, nursing and related schools and provides federal loans to students in health professions. This program will help meet the serious need for more health personnel.

But additional legislation is necessary to provide federal scholarship aid to students in the health professions. Otherwise, talented young people from low income families cannot realistically hope to get an expensive medical school education or related training in the health professions.

2. Operation of Community Mental Health Centers

In 1963 the 88th Congress passed the Community Mental Health Centers Act to help build community mental health centers. This was a significant step forward toward high quality community mental health centers, available to all. This first step must be supported with federal funds to operate these centers. Substantial federal funds for staffing the centers with mental health experts should be authorized by the 89th Congress.

3. Loans for Group Facilities

High quality medical care can be made more readily available to workers and their families through the expansion of comprehensive direct service health plans based on group practice. Comprehensive health plans eliminate the economic barriers to needed care through complete prepayment; care is directed toward the prevention and early detection of disease. Medical services are provided by family physicians and specialists working as a team, each doctor doing what he is trained to do best. The combination of comprehensive prepayment with the group practice of medicine provides the setting in which high quality care can be provided at premiums that working people can afford to pay and can budget for.

One of the major obstacles to the spread of group practice generally, and group practice associated with comprehensive prepayment in particular, has been the difficulty in financing the necessary facilities. The AFL-CIO supports legislation to meet this need with federal loans and loan guarantees for group practice facilities.

4. Expanded Federal Aid for Hospital Construction

In hospital and medical facilities construction, the United States is unquestionably ahead of most other nations. This is due in large part to the existence and successful operation of the Hill-Burton Hospital and Medical Facilities Construction program. If the Hill-Burton program is to continue to be effective, it must be further adapted and expanded to provide more assistance for construction of long-term care facilities and for modernization and renovation of existing health facilities. The legislation extending the Hill-Burton Act passed by the 88th Congress was a step in this direction, but additional funds in substantial amounts should be earmarked for long-term care facilities and for modernization by the 89th Congress.

Urge your Senators and your Congressmen to support the recommendations of the AFL-CIO for health services, health facilities, and health personnel.

AFL-CIO LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT

HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

1965 FACT SHEET NO. 13

To bring good housing within the reach of every American family, the AFL-CIO calls for action by the 89th Congress to stimuate housing, urban renewal, and community development programs.

Construction must reach an average annual rate of 2.5 million dwelling units per year in the 1960's to meet housing needs of the American people. But, for years construction has failed to rise above 1.6 million units a year.

Construction of new homes and community facilities will have potent direct job-creating effects—about 20,000 man-years of direct on-site employment for every 10,000 houses built. And indirect job-creating effects are great also. Furthermore, housing, urban renewal, and community development programs help eliminate the social and economic causes of poverty.

The AFL-CIO makes these specific recommendations:

1 Establishment of a federal Department of Housing and Community Development.

2 More low-rent public housing for low-income families who cannot meet the costs of available private housing—125,000 units a year for four years.

3 More federal aid for housing of modest-income families with incomes too low to be served by the private housing industry at the market rates of financing, and too high to be eligible for low-rent public housing.

4 A new program of rental housing for lower middle-income families—100,000 dwelling units per year for four years. Rents would be scaled down in accordance with family income and the sponsor would get a corresponding credit on his monthly debt service to the federal government.

5 Broadening of the program for sales housing for middle-income families.

6 Combination of low-rent and middle-income housing in one project, with PHA financing the public housing part of a project and FHA-insured financing by a non-profit agency available for the private housing part, thus helping low and lower-middle income families.

7 The existing special mortgage financing assistance program should be enlarged to enable FNMA to continue to purchase mortgages, including those of cooperative projects, projects in urban renewal areas, and projects for middle-income families and veterans. Also, $2 billion should be reserved for the Section 221 (d) (3) program under which labor unions and other non-profit organizations sponsor housing for families of moderate income.

8 The cooperative non-profit housing program should be improved to assure availability of adequate FHA-insured mortgage funds to help consumer cooperatives buy existing properties.

9 The direct lending program for housing for the elderly should be continued and improved to include (1) a new authorization of $1 billion over a four-year period; (2) permission for local housing authorities to be sponsors; (3) authorization for financing of non-profit nursing homes; and (4) authorization of capital grants for construction of such facilities as clinics, community rooms and craft shops in non-profit housing for the elderly.

10 The college housing program should be extended, adequately financed, and broadened to provide for off-campus housing for single students and for cooperative college housing developments.

11 Community facilities should be included as part of the cost of future housing projects sponsored by local public housing authorities or by non-profit housing corporations including unions, under Section 221 (d) (3) and similar programs. Such facilities can be a focus for community activities in the War on Poverty.

12 Urban Renewal. This program should have (1) a $4 billion increase in the capital grant authorization over a four-year period; (2) an increase in the federal share to three-fourths of net project costs; (3) relocation payments to families should be increased up to a limit of at least $500; and (4) rent supplementations up to 5 years for displaced needy families.

13 New Towns. To prevent haphazard suburban sprawl, municipal, county, or other local governments should be enabled to acquire presently undeveloped land or farm land in or near metropolitan areas, so that, when such lands are ready for development, they can be sold or leased to private developers or public agencies for use in accordance with a legally adopted metropolitan area plan prepared by an official planning agency, with due regard to availability of mass transit facilities and conservation of areas for open space uses, and with safeguards against profiteering. With renewal and modernization of central cities, development of satellite new towns around metropolitan areas will make possible balanced growth in metropolitan areas.

14 Mass Transit is a decisive factor in the future of urban life. The bill enacted by the 88th Congress must be reinforced by the 89th Congress by fully adequate appropriations.

15 Special attention and assistance must be devoted to the thousands of families and small businesses which are dislocated each year by new highways, housing developments, and other public projects.

Urge your Senators and your Congressmen to support Housing and Urban Development recommendations of the AFL-CIO.

AFL-CIO LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT

ONE MAN-ONE VOTE APPORTIONMENT RULE UNDER ATTACK

1965 FACT SHEET NO. 14

Equal representation—the principle of "one man-one vote"—is fundamental to the operation of a truly democratic government. But a conservative coalition is trying to overturn this basic principle.

The AFL-CIO, its affiliated organizations, and other liberal groups are fighting hard to protect the "one man-one vote" principle against attacks in the United States Congress and in the state legislatures.

The democratic process assumes that every citizen has an equal voice, through the ballot box, in electing those who represent him in the U.S. Congress and in the state legislature. Unfortunately, millions of urban and suburban Americans have been robbed of equal voting power by malapportioned, rural-dominated "rotten borough" state legislatures and malapportioned congressional districts. A "rotten borough" is an area with few people and disproportionately large representation in the legislature.

Seven out of 10 Americans live in metropolitan areas. But too often rural minorities control malapportioned "rotten borough" state legislatures in which cows and trees are better represented than people.

1964 Supreme Court Ruling

On June 15, 1964, the Supreme Court upheld the "one man-one vote" principle and rejected the "rotten borough" theory that land and trees count more than people. The Court declared:

> "Legislators represent people, not trees or acres. Legislators are elected by voters, not farms or cities or economic interests. As long as ours is a representative form of government and our legislatures are those instruments of government elected directly by and directly representative to the people, the right to elect legislators in a free and unimpaired fashion is a bedrock of our political system."

Therefore, the Court declared, the "equal protection" clause of the 14th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution "requires that the seats in both houses of a bicameral (two-house) state legislature must be apportioned on a population basis," which means on the basis of "one man-one vote."

Conservative Attack

A coalition of conservatives, right-wing extremists, and obstinate traditionalists who maintain their power largely through malapportioned, rural-dominated state legislatures, is carrying on a major campaign to overturn and to nullify the Supreme Court "one man-one vote" rulings.

This conservative coalition is fighting right now in the U.S. Congress and in the state legislatures to amend the U.S. Constitution to preserve unfair, unequal "rotten borough" representation in the state legislatures.

Amendments to the U.S. Constitution may be proposed either by the Congress (by two-thirds votes in both Houses) or by the states on application of two-thirds (34) of the state legislatures for a constitutional convention. Amendments proposed by either method become part of the Constitution after they are ratified by three-fourths (38) of the state legislatures or by special conventions in three-fourths of the states.

The conservative coalition attack takes two forms:

1. In the Congress the conservative coalition is pushing for congressional action on a constitutional amendment—for submission to the states—that would permit any state to apportion one house of its legislature on a basis other than population, if approved by a referendum.

The referendum provision gives this proposal an air of self-determination that is deceptive. No group of voters should ever be able to deprive anyone of his basic democratic rights, in this case the right to equal representation.

In the 1964 Colorado case (Lucas v. 44th General Assembly of Colorado), the Supreme Court ruled that the "one man-one vote" population basis for apportionment must prevail even if the voters of the state approve a non-population base for one house of their state legislature.

2. In the state legislatures the conservative coalition is pushing a campaign to bypass Congress by having two-thirds of the states adopt a resolution to force a constitutional convention to draft a "rotten borough" constitutional amendment to be submitted to the state legislatures.

Through this procedure, never used before, the conservative coalition hopes to get 34 state legislatures to petition Congress to call a constitutional convention. This convention, the conservatives hope, would then approve a constitutional amend-meant to allow unfair, unequal "rotten borough" representation in the state legislatures. Even if this procedure is not successful, it may build up dangerous pressures on Congress.

Action in the States

The Supreme Court's March 1962 decision in the Tennessee apportionment case, Baker v. Carr, put malapportioned states under pressure to reapportion to achieve more equal representation in their state legislatures. The 1964 apportionment decisions increased this pressure, and by March 1965 a number of state legislatures had reapportioned themselves on a population basis.

Unfortunately, the conservative coalition has been making dangerous progress in the state legislatures toward amending the U.S. Constitution to preserve their unequal "rotten borough" representation.

Widespread confusion exists on the exact number of state legislatures which have formally urged the Congress to call a constitutional convention to start action on a "rotten borough" amendment. Differing proposals have been passed, and the legal status and relevance of some proposals passed are doubtful.

Since the 1964 Supreme Court rulings, a number of states have passed resolutions calling for a constitutional convention to consider an amendment which would permit states with bicameral legislatures to apportion one House on factors other than population.

Other states have passed resolutions merely asking Congress to propose an amendment to permit "rotten borough" representation in state legislatures.

Prior to the 1964 Supreme Court reapportionment rulings, some states passed resolutions demanding that the Congress call a constitutional convention to consider an amendment which would take away from the federal courts their jurisdiction in apportionment of state legislatures.

Defenders of the "one man-one vote" principle must determine exactly what the status of such proposals is in their own states—and then take action to block these proposals or attempt to rescind those which have passed.

Action in Congress

In 1964 after the Supreme Court "one man-one vote" reapportionment rulings, the House of Representatives passed a bill sponsored by Congressman Tuck (D-Va.) to take away from federal courts their jurisdiction in state legislature reapportionment. The Tuck bill died in the Senate.

Senate Republican Leader Dirksen (Ill.) proposed an amendment to the foreign aid bill requiring the courts to delay reapportionment orders, but, after a filibuster by Senate liberals, the Senate passed a non-binding "sense of Congress" resolution asking the courts to give state legislatures six months to act in reapportionment cases. The Senate-approved rider to the 1964 foreign aid bill was killed in a Senate-House conference committee.

In 1965 Senator Dirksen again launched an attack on the Supreme Court's reapportionment rulings. His proposal, S.J.Res. 2, would permit a state to apportion one house of its legislature on a basis other than population if a majority of the voters in the state approved such a change.

In the House, a discharge petition to force a vote on H.J.Res. 2, which would allow a state legislature to apportion the membership of one house "on other factors than population," is being pushed.

Backers of constitutional amendments similar to the Dirksen amendment include many Democrats and Republicans whose congressional district boundaries are determined by malapportioned state legislatures.

The Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments opened hearings on the apportionment amendments on March 3, 1965. The House Judiciary Committee scheduled hearings on apportionment proposals to begin in April 1965.

The AFL-CIO is opposing all proposals in the Senate and in the House of Representatives which would nullify or weaken the "one man-one vote" principle.

Serious Threat

Malapportioned state legislatures are pushing "rotten borough" constitutional amendments because they want to protect their own long-standing vested interests. Unfortunately, state legislators, in an effort to protect their malapportioned state legislatures, too often also put tremendous pressure on members of the U.S. Congress to approve a "rotten borough" constitutional amendment to overturn the "one man-one vote" principle. All of these efforts must be opposed.

Fight for Fair Representation

1. Write or wire your Senators and Representatives in the U.S. Congress. Urge them to oppose the Dirksen amendment or any other "rotten borough" proposal to overturn "one man-one vote."

2. Organize delegations to visit your state legislators. Tell them you oppose any action by the state legislature to push a "rotten borough" constitutional amendment.

3. Visit mayors, city managers, and suburban county officials. They have a big interest in fair apportionment. The areas they represent are the previous victims of malapportionment. Urge them to oppose action by the Congress and by the state legislatures against the Supreme Court "one man-one vote" decisions.

Fight the "rotten borough" attack against "one man-one vote."

AFL-CIO

A Common Goal— Equal Opportunity

AFL-CIO

STATEMENT OF ANDREW J. BIEMILLER, LEGISLATIVE DIRECTOR
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS TO SUBCOMMITTEE NO. 5 OF THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE
ON H.R. 14765, THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1966

May 24, 1966

Mr. Chairman, my name is Andrew J. Biemiller. I am Legislative Director for the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations. Accompanying me is Thomas E. Harris, our Associate General Counsel. We appreciate this opportunity to present the views of the AFL-CIO on this important matter.

The proposals which this Subcommittee are considering deal with two major problem areas in the functioning of American democracy. The first has to do with the administration of justice; the second with discriminatory housing practices.

In both of these fields there are large and acute evils which must be eradicated; and the AFL-CIO welcomes the determination of the President and the Congress to face and face squarely the difficult issue of how best to remedy the deficiencies which all of us recognize.

We all, I am sure, believe in equal justice under law; and we all, I am sure, believe that no part of our population should suffer discrimination in so vital a matter as a place to live. The question is how to implement these principles.

The AFL-CIO indorses and supports H.R. 14765. We think it provides constructive and effective cures for the evils with which it deals, and we urge its enactment. We believe that the bill could be strengthened in a few particulars which we suggest below, but in general we are for it.

I will discuss successively the various titles of the bill, indicating in each instance what, if any, changes we think might be made.

Titles I and II

Titles I and II undertake to end discrimination in jury systems, in, respectively, the federal and state courts.

Up until now three different groups have been discriminated against in various areas as respects selection for jury service. These groups are: first, Negroes and perhaps members of certain other minorities; second, women; and third, people with low incomes. The discrimination may be de facto or de jure.

Discrimination against Negroes is unquestionably most acute in the South.

Discrimination against women is also concentrated in the South but is probably also more prevalent de facto in rural and small town areas than in cities. Also, both of these types of discrimination are much more prevalent in state than in federal courts.

On the other hand discrimination in selection for jury service against people having low incomes is decidedly not a peculiarly southern vice, and it is probably more prevalent in federal than in state courts and in cities than in rural areas. Mr. Thomas Dewey, when he was a young district attorney, was an advocate of the so-called blue ribbon jury -- in state courts in New York City. But the use of blue ribbon juries is at least as prevalent in federal courts as in state courts generally.

Prosecutors have the idea that juries drawn from the upper economic strata are readier to convict. We commend Attorney General Katzenbach for his willingness to forgo this advantage for prosecutors, if indeed it is one, and for his recognition that discrimination on grounds of economic status is just as violative of the equal protection of the laws as discrimination on grounds of race or sex.

There is another reason for banning discrimination on the basis of economic status. It is that if such discrimination were permissible it could perpetuate, in a different guise, discrimination against Negroes and other minority groups.

We therefore agree with the sponsor of H.R. 14765 that all three types of discrimination -- i.e. race, sex, and economic status should be ended. Further, we agree that the language of the bill is clear and straightforward, viz. (p.2, lines 9-12):

> "No person or class of persons shall be denied the right to serve on grand and petit juries in the district courts of the United States on account of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or economic status."

The same terminology is used in the provision as to state courts.

However, we suggest that the procedure for enforcing these standards might well be strengthened.

In the case of state juries, the bill authorizes the Attorney General to bring injunctive proceedings against state jury officials. However, the bill does not contain any such authorization in the case of federal juries, evidently upon the assumption that federal judges and jury commissioners will be readier to effectuate the bill's bans on nondiscrimination than will their state counterparts. Even if this assumption is correct there has been, as the Attorney General acknowledged, some discrimination in the federal courts, and we see no reason why the provision for suits by the Attorney General should not be applicable to federal juries as well as to state.

More important, we are doubtful that the enforcement provisions of the bill are adequate even in the case of state juries. The bill does provide a discovery procedure to make it easier to find out whether unlawful discrimination has occurred in the jury selection process. This procedure is available to the Attorney General in civil suits brought by him and to defendants in criminal prosecutions. However, for enforcement of its bans on discrimination the bill relies exclusively on adjudications in individual law suits, either where the issue is raised by private litigants or in suits brought by the Attorney General.

We are doubtful that this sort of spot policing will be adequate to end jury discrimination. It has not been adequate to end discrimination in other fields.

As respects the right to vote, for example, prior to the Voting Rights Act of 1965 earlier legislation relied for enforcement on suits brought by the Attorney General or by voters. Suit had to be brought in each election district, and in each separate suit there had to be an adjudication whether there had been an unlawful deprivation of the right to vote. We foresaw that these provisions would prove to be inadequate. We testified, when the bill was before Congress that implementing the Fifteenth Amendment by law suits was like trying to paint a wall with a fountain pen.

Our forebodings proved to be well founded, as testified by the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

The 1965 Act utilized several novel devices to counter enforcement difficulties. It provided an automatic triggering test, i. e. whether fewer than 50% of eligible persons were registered or voted. It provided for determinations applicable throughout major geographic units, i. e. States or counties. It provided for the use of federal examiners to register voters, and for federal observers at elections.

These provisions, in contrast to their predecessors, seem to be proving effective.

As respects school desegregation, too, individual law suits proved to be a slow and ineffective way of vindicating constitutional rights.

On the basis of these experiences, we suggest that broader scale procedures for the implementation of Title II may be needed than enforcement through individual law suits. We believe the suggestions on this point made by Roy Wilkins in his testimony for the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights have substantial merit and deserve the attention of this Committee.

TITLE III

This Title deals with discrimination in the schools and other public facilities. It eliminates certain existing limitations on the bringing of suits by the Attorney General, and provides for broadened relief.

We are in favor of the enactment of Title III as written.

Since the Attorney General's testimony of this Title was rather general, we propose to give a concrete illustration of why this Title is needed.

In 1950 some Negro parents brought suit against school officials in Clarendon County, South Carolina, seeking the admission of their children to the white schools. In 1951 the federal district court ruled that the schools were very separate but not very equal, and that the plaintiff's rights under the Fourteenth Amendment were being violated. However, the court did not order that the children be admitted to the white schools: it ordered that the Negro schools be made equal.

In 1954 the Supreme Court likewise held that the Negroes' constitutional rights were being violated, on the ground that segregation by races is inherently unequal. This case was one of the four decided by the Supreme Court in Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U. S. 483. In 1955 the Supreme Court, on reargument, ruled that integration should proceed with "all deliberate speed," and the case went back to the district court.

In the District Court the deliberation has been more evident than the speed. It was not until the fall of 1965 that the district court finally required the admission of six Negro children to white schools in Clarendon County.

Of course these were not the same children whose parents had started the litigation. A child who was six years old in 1950 was 21 in 1965. However, one Negro girl whose parents had intervened later, and were parties in the 1954 Brown cases in the Supreme Court, did finally get into a white school at age 17 after 11 years of litigation. Incidentally, according to news reports, the whites have been giving her a bad time.

Of course the litigation isn't over. The court has retained jurisdiction and has ordered further desegregation next fall. Anyway, Negro parents, with the help of the legal defense fund of the NAACP, have been carrying on this litigation for 16 years, and the end is not in sight.

The Department of Justice has not brought suit in this situation. The burden of the litigation has been left to the parents and to the legal defense fund. The Department of Justice could bring suit under Title III of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 if the Attorney General certified that the parents were unable to maintain appropriate legal proceedings, which means under the statute that they "are unable either directly or through other interested persons or organizations, to bear the expense of the litigation ***."

How can the Attorney General determine such a thing as that? The legal defense fund of the NAACP is presumably able to sustain a certain volume of litigation, but what is the basis for saying that it is able to maintain one particular suit and not another?

More broadly, it is our view that the burden of vindicating these constitutional rights should rest on the Federal Government, and that it should rest there regardless of whether particular parents can or cannot afford to sue. That is one reason why we urge the enactment of Title III.

The other reason is the physical and economic intimidation which faces Negro parents in some areas. Title III authorizes the Attorney General to seek injunctions against such intimidation, and we are of course strongly in favor of that.

Title IV

The AFL-CIO likewise strongly supports Title IV of the proposed Civil Rights Act of 1966.

Organized labor has long been in the forefront in the fight for fair housing legislation. Laws enacted by a large number of states and municipalities to outlaw discrimination in housing have been placed on the statute books with the full backing, and often on the initiative of, organized labor.

The Sixth Constitutional Convention of the AFL-CIO, held last December, called for equal housing opportunity in these words:

> "A key feature of labor's housing program is its drive for equal housing opportunity for all Americans. There is no place in America for racial ghettos. Equal access, without regard to race, creed, color or national origin, to every residential neighborhood in every American community should be assured for every family in America. Equal opportunity in housing should be assured in all programs in which housing is provided with Federal aid or is protected by Federal insurance of mortgages or guarantee or regulation of mortgage loans."

The national purpose was pledged by Congress in the Declaration of National Policy set forth in the National Housing Act of 1949 (Public Law 171, 81st Congress; 63 Stat. 413; 42 U. S. C. 1441), which stated:

> "The Congress hereby declares that the general welfare and security of the Nation and the health and living standards of its people require...the realization as soon as feasible of the goal of a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family, thus contributing to the development and redevelopment of communities and to the advancement of the growth, wealth, and security of the Nation."

This Congressional affirmation of the national goal in a basic legislative enactment underlying all Federal housing statutes promulgated from 1949 to date, should be viewed in the light of the Nation's resolve proclaimed by the 14th amendment to the Constitution. The 14th Amendment declares that no State should deny "the equal protection of the laws" to any person, regardless of race.

The Supreme Court has said /Shelley v. Kraemer, 334 U.S. 1 (1948)/:

> "It cannot be doubted that among the civil rights intended to be protected from discriminatory state action by the Fourteenth Amendment are the rights to acquire, enjoy, own, and dispose of property. Equality in the enjoyment of property rights was regarded by the framers of that Amendment as an essential pre-condition to the realization of other basic civil rights and liberties which the Amendment was intended to guarantee."

And the Supreme Court has held, in that case, that the 14th Amendment prohibits the courts, as instrumentalities of the states, from enforcing private racially restrictive covenants. In another case /Hurd v. Hodge, 334, U.S. 24, (1948)/, the Supreme Court applied similar prohibitions to the Federal government and its courts, as well.

The U.S. Civil Rights Commission, in its 1961 Report on Housing, reviewed the constitutional problem involved here and arrived at this compelling conclusion:

> ". . . it poses the question whether, as a matter of national policy, the Federal Government can permit itself to be involved in the denial of equal opportunity; whether the Federal Government, which has established national housing programs to achieve a national purpose, should not take affirmative steps to move upward the achievement of equal opportunity in housing for all Americans. The Supreme Court has recognized that 'Equality in the enjoyment of property rights' is 'an essential pre-condition to the realization of other basic civil rights.' If the achievement of this 'essential pre-condition' is not here the explicit command of the Constitution, it is nonetheless its promise."

What opposition there is to the assurance of equal opportunity in housing to all Americans regardless of race, when it is not the result of outright race bias, is usually based on misinformation or ignorance of the facts.

One widely broadcast misconception prompting such opposition is that property values will drop whenever non-white families move into a previously all-white neighborhood. There is absolutely no documentary evidence to support this contention. It is a myth which has been completely exploded.

A comprehensive study of property values was conducted for the Commission on Race and Housing, a distinguished citizens' group which included nationally known specialists in the social sciences, by Dr. Luigi Laurenti. Its findings are included in the volume, Property Values and Race, (University of California Press, 1960). Dr. Laurenti's research involved 20 neighborhoods in San Francisco, Oakland, and Philadelphia, where Negroes had entered during a span of 12 years.

With each of the three cities he studied, Laurenti compared price movements in "test" neighborhoods with those in similar neighborhoods which had remained all-white over the same period. The price transactions studied covered a 12-year period from 1943 to 1955. Over 9,900 sales prices were analyzed comprising about 40 percent of all the sales during the study period. Almost all the neighborhoods consisted of single-family, owner-occupied residences and were not contiguous to other areas of non-white population.

In 44 percent of the comparisons, prices showed gains which ranged from five to 26 per cent. Another 41 per cent of the comparisons showed no significant change in price behavior. The other 15 per cent showed declines but none were over 15 per cent.

Put another way, 85 per cent of the cases either showed upward improvement or remained stable.

The results of the studies in these three cities are consistent with those made by other investigators who studied similar areas in Chicago, Kansas City, Detroit, and Portland, Oregon.

In the volume, Property Values and Race, Laurenti concluded:

> "The major statistical finding of the present study is that during the time period and for the cases studied the entry of non-whites into previously all-white neighborhoods was much more often associated with price improvement or stability than with price weakening. A corollary and possibly more significant finding is that no single or uniform pattern of non-white influence on property prices could be detected. Rather, what happens to prices when non-whites enter a neighborhood seems to depend on a variety of circumstances which, on balance, may influence prices upward or downward or leave them unaffected."

Another myth, long since exploded, is that neighborhood standards will go down whenever Negro families become part of the neighborhood.

Extensive studies have shown that Negro homeowners are just as concerned with neighborhood standards as any other citizens. Even a poll conducted more than twenty years ago by the National Association of Real Estate Boards supported the fact that Negro homeowners maintain their properties as well as whites.

There are good standards and bad standards in both white and non-white neighborhoods.

Overcrowding, economic exploitation, and neglect of buildings by landlords contribute to the creation of slums, regardless of the color or national origin of the residents. But slum areas, with which the Negro stereotype is all too often associated, generally were badly deteriorated before Negro residents fell heir to them.

Equal access to housing, regardless of race, creed or national origin in a free market, should be a part of the American way of life. Equal opportunity in housing is intimately linked to equal opportunity in schooling and to other civil rights.

The AFL-CIO strongly supports the enactment of Title IV because it will remove the obstacles that impede the rights and opportunities of Americans on the unjust basis of their race, creed or national origin. We support it, above all, because its enactment will broaden the horizon of American democracy and will extend the opportunity to contribute to the strengthening of community life to every citizen of our country.

In addition, we believe the committee would be well advised to explore with care the possibility of adding administrative enforcement procedures to this title. As this committee knows from our previous testimony on civil rights matters, we consider administrative enforcement less cumbersome, more immediate and generally more effective in matters of this kind. We hope you will consider carefully adding administrative procedures to this title.

Title V

This Title has to do with crimes against Negroes and civil rights workers.

There have been numerous such crimes in recent years, but very few convictions, particularly in the state courts. Something needs to be done; and if anyone has any doubt of that we suggest that they read the 1965 Report of the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights. The shocking breakdown of law enforcement in the South, as respects Negroes and civil rights workers, is there set forth in horrifying detail.

Certain violent deprivations of civil rights are made criminal by the Federal Criminal Code, Title 18 U. S. C. § § 241 and 242, but these provisions, which date back to Reconstruction days, contain technical deficiencies which make it very difficult for the government to prove a case under them. Title V parallels but does not supplant these existing federal criminal statutes, and undertakes to cure some of their deficiencies.

The jury selection proposals of Titles I and II also of course relate to the general problem of the administration of justice, which is most acute in, though it is not confined to, the South.

Title V was drafted in the light of the recent Supreme Court decisions in United States v. Price, and United States v. Guest. In those decisions the Court sustained the sufficiency of the indictments, but it pointed out that the requirements of proof under existing law are difficult to meet, and the Court suggested that Congress enact more specific provisions. Title V embodies such provisions, and we urge its enactment.

Under Section 241 it is necessary for the government in a case like Guest to prove that the defendants had a specific, wrongful, intent in two different respects. In the first place, the government must prove, as in the case of nearly all criminal statutes, that the defendant intended to commit the prohibited act, as, for example, that the defendant intended to murder or injure the victim, and that the death or injury was not the result of accident. This sort of intent is a normal and proper prerequisite to conviction in criminal cases. Under Section 241, however, the government must also show a second type of specific intent, viz., that the defendant also intended to interfere with the victim's exercise of some right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States. The government must show, for example, not only that the defendant murdered a Negro, but that he murdered him to keep him from voting, or attending a desegregated school or exercising some other federally protected right. Proof of this sort is unlikely to be available, and one of the purposes of Title V is to obviate the need for it.

Section 501(a) substitutes for the specific intent requirement we have been discussing the requirement that the defendant must have injured the victim (1) because of his "race, color, religion or national origin", (2) while the victim is engaging or trying to engage in the exercise of any of various enumerated federal rights, such as voting or attending a public school.

Under this provision it would still be necessary to show that the defendant injured his victim because of his race, etc. In other words the specific intent requirement is shifted from intent to prevent the victim from voting, for example, to intent to injure him because of his race while he is voting.

Evidence of racial animus is more likely to be available than evidence that the defendant intended to prevent the exercise of some particular federal right. Even with the new provisions on the books, however, the task of the federal prosecutor will still be a most difficult one. In a case like Guest it will still be necessary for the prosecutor to show not only that the defendants deliberately killed their victim, but they did so because he was a Negro.

In general we think the Department of Justice has done a good job in drafting Title V. We suggest, however, that the language should be revised to make it clear that traveling on a public highway is a protected type of activity. That is what was involved in the Guest case; it is clearly sufficient as a constitutional basis for a federal intervention; and there will be cases where it may not be possible to prove that the victim was engaging or seeking to engage in any of the other types of activities enumerated in the bill.

CONCLUSION

Let me conclude with a brief observation. This Congress and its predecessor are certain to go down in history for the trail-blazing legislation passed in 1964 and 1965 in this field. All of us who played any role whatsoever in achieving the civil rights legislation have a right to be proud.

But so much more remains to be done, Mr. Chairman, that none of us can pause for self-congratulations.

We have all read reports that this Congress is tired of the subject; that this Congress believes this is no time for another civil rights battle; that 1966 should be the year of stock-taking, not action.

Well, we just don't believe those reports.

We believe this Congress will recognize -- as did the President in the message in which he submitted this bill -- that the unresolved problems are many and great but that they can be solved, as indeed they must be solved.

We in the AFL-CIO are dedicated to the belief that true and absolute equality of opportunity is possible in America and we intend to help achieve it. That, we are confident, is the mood of the American people and we believe it to be the intention of this Congress.

Dear Friend:

As a participant in the White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights", I am sure that the discussions and the program ideas presented have raised many questions in your mind.

Some of these questions have to do with the need for new civil rights legislation, and implementation of existing legislation, others must deal with education, housing, employment and related economic issues.

In addition, questions as to the policy and practices of the AFL-CIO and various of its affiliated unions were raised at the conference. Therefore the Civil Rights Department of the AFL-CIO is enclosing a number of pieces of material which will provide information about some of these areas of concern.

If you desire additional copies of any of these publications please feel free to write to us:

NEWS from the AFL-CIO

NA. 8-3870

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE, TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1966

AFL-CIO President George Meany today issued the following statement on the shooting of James Meredith:

The shooting of James Meredith demolishes the argument heard recently in Congress that no further civil rights legislation is needed. There are still those who would use murder to prevent the achievement of racial equality in America; a federal law is essential to curb such terrorism and to punish its perpetrators. This is one of the provisions written into the Civil Rights Act of 1966, now before Congress. The act must be passed.

NEWS from the AFL-CIO

NA. 8-3870

FOR RELEASE IN P.M. PAPERS, TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1966

The AFL-CIO told Congress today that a "detailed review" of the Manpower Training and Development Act, including its relationship with other statutes covering similar matters, should be undertaken to insure the continued improvement of the program.

Andrew J. Biemiller, director of the AFL-CIO Department of Legislation, appearing before the labor subcommittee of the House Committee on Education and Labor, said MDTA was "too important" to be treated by "a series of piecemeal amendments which must inevitably leave gaps in the program."

Biemiller's comment came at the end of testimony on eight different bills to amend the act and a ninth which, while offered as a separate piece of legislation, should in labor's opinion be part of MDTA.

The AFL-CIO witness generally supported amendments that would broaden the concept of training and set up procedures to meet certain barriers that now face some potential trainees. He opposed two types of proposals -- those that in the AFL-CIO's view would weaken the independence of trainees or threaten existing labor standards, and those that would amount to "training just for the sake of training," rather than for a specific job purpose.

Thus, while supporting a training program for persons in correctional institutions, Biemiller warned that trainees who are also being rehabilitated are too often "at the mercy of the employer." He urged a provision requiring consultation with the labor movement in areas where such programs are undertaken.

He flatly opposed an amendment that would permit the government to pay the cost of wages for on-the-job trainees; "when a worker produces for an employer, he ought to be paid by that employer."

Biemiller also opposed a proposal to pay allowances to workers taking part-time training, while otherwise employed.

"It would be an inducement which would prompt too many employers to press their employees into training programs with all sorts of rosy promises, with no meaningful results," he said. The emphasis would be on the allowances rather than the purpose of the training, he asserted; opportunities for self-improvement through adult education are already provided for, without allowances, under existing legislation.

Similarly, the witness opposed a proposal that would virtually eliminate, for disadvantaged persons, the requirement that training must be based on "reasonable expectation" of employment.

"The AFL-CIO has never endorsed the concept of training just for the sake of training," he said. In our view, training activities have to be related to job opportunities in order for the training programs to be successful. For this reason, and in order to safeguard incumbent employees and their standards -- and in the interests of the prospective trainees who would be disillusioned to find no job at the conclusion of training -- we have always insisted that MDTA funds be spent only where there is reasonable expectation of employment in the occupation for which the individual is being trained.

-more-

"This concept was embodied in the MDTA and adhered to quite rigorously in the earlier days of the law. Since then, there has been some loosening; reasonable expectation is being interpreted more liberally. And now, (the current proposal) would, in our judgment, stretch this concept far out of shape and, in the end, change the philosophy that lies behind the MDTA as originally conceived. The AFL-CIO is not prepared, at this juncture, to endorse such a change."

January, 1966

Dear Friend:

I spent three months in South Vietnam last summer as a member of a three-man fact-finding mission for the American Friends Service Committee. I was deeply stirred by the plight of the more than 600,000 women, children, and old men who have left their village homes to escape the twin perils of Viet Cong harassment and U. S. bombings. The situation of these people grew worse as the weeks passed.

Crowded into inadequate camps around the cities of the coastal area, these uprooted people are maintained at a bare subsistence level by public and private agencies which have been attempting to provide the necessities of life. The recent acceleration of the war has brought a fresh influx of such proportion that these services are overtaxed, and severe suffering exists. Sheer humanity demands that we meet the needs of these distressed people wherever we can reach them.

The AFSC has decided to undertake a program among the refugees in and around the city of Qui Nhon, Binh Dinh Province. Here an estimated 100,000 refugees now live - 38,000 of them between the ages of 3 and 17. Our work will concentrate on self-help, skill training, and recreation. We hope that by providing useful occupations for these innocent victims of a struggle in which they feel themselves to have little stake, we can help to prevent the demoralization which forced idleness often produces. On an emergency basis we will try to meet direct physical needs.

David and Mary Stickney have recently arrived in Vietnam to undertake the administration of the refugee relief program there. David Stickney is on an eighteen months' leave of absence from his position as associate director of the Illinois Hospital Association, and Mary Stickney has been teaching school in Glencoe, Illinois.

There are no frontiers to human need, and therefore, our Board of Directors, in announcing plans for work in South Vietnam, also affirmed its intention to extend similar services to the refugees in North Vietnam should this become possible. This is in line with the Committee's long-standing tradition of working on both sides of a conflict.

Will you join us in attempting to minister to the needs of the unfortunate people of Vietnam? Your generous response to this emergency appeal will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

Stephen G. Cary

TO: Participants, Southern Interagency Conference

FROM: Constance Curry, American Friends Service Committee

At the January meeting of the Southern Interagency Conference, a discussion was held on possible cooperative efforts for working in school desegregation. Several agencies announced their intentions of co-sponsoring state-wide conferences, immediately after the guidelines were issued by the Department of HEW.

The first of these conferences will be held on March 12, in Montgomery, Alabama, and further details are given in the enclosed letter of invitation which has been mailed to approximately 500 contacts in Alabama.

Many of the agencies represented at the January meeting expressed an interest in the conferences and asked to be kept informed. We hope that you or a representative of your agency will be able to attend the conference and that you will contact any of your constituents in Alabama who are interested in working in school desegregation.

Within the next few weeks you will be receiving copies of letters of invitation to the other state-wide conferences. For further information on plans, please contact any of the sponsoring agencies listed on the letter.

February 21, 1966

Dear Friend:

As a community leader in your area, we wish to tell you about an important meeting concerning school desegregation. The meeting will be from 9:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. on Saturday, March 12th and will be held at the First C.M.E. Church, Montgomery, Alabama, at the corner of Holt and Glass Streets.

By September of 1965 your school board had reached a decision in response to Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. These were the choices facing each board:

(1) Show that their system is already under court order and indicate how they are complying with the order.

(2) Submit a plan for initial school desegregation in September of 1965.

(3) Take no action and run the risk of losing federal funds used in their school system.

The great majority of Alabama school boards made the second choice and submitted a plan of desegregation to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare in Washington. All of the Alabama school boards that submitted plans chose freedom of choice as the means of desegregation. This means that each Negro parent and child had to decide which school the child would attend and follow the procedures for registration as outlined in their local plan. This of course places the entire burden on the Negro parent. Until the burden of initiating change is placed squarely upon school administrators, it is vital that your community organize to see that the greatest possible amount of school desegregation takes place in September of 1966. It is important that organization begin right away.

To help inform citizens of the new possibilities in school desegregation and to aid them in organizing communities, a State Leadership Conference on School Desegregation will be held on March 12th, in Montgomery, Alabama. The conference is being sponsored by the Alabama Council on Human Relations, the Alabama State Conference of Branches-NAACP, American Friends Service Committee, NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee.

The program will include speakers on the new guidelines under Title VI, the legal aspects of school desegregation and the specific problems that you are facing in your community. Lunch will be provided for conference participants. There will be funds to provide the actual cost of gasoline for attending the conference.

We know that you are interested in working in school desegregation and urge you to attend the conference. Please fill in the enclosed post card and return it to us as soon as possible. We shall be sending you further information and do hope that you can be with us at the meeting.

Sincerely,

FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE SUMMER SERVICE PROJECTS 1966

PROJECT GROUPS observe a period of silent meditation each day. Usually members live together cooperatively and share responsibility for cooking and housekeeping. Groups plan their own educational, recreational, and work activities. Some financial aid is available in projects where a member is expected to cover his own expenses.

SUMMER PROJECTS ABROAD

Community Service

Mexico: Volunteers from North America, Latin America, and other parts of the world will serve together in village units. Cooperating closely with federal and local authorities in the fields of public health, education, and agriculture, each group will work with neighbors on recreation and community improvement projects—including construction jobs for men—and participate in the life of the village. Volunteers must be at least eighteen and have one year of college or its equivalent. A knowledge of Spanish is important. The cost will be $225 in addition to travel expenses. Some scholarship aid is available.

Work Camps

Volunteers are assigned to some work camps sponsored or co-sponsored by the AFSC and to some sponsored by national and international work camp organizations. Projects usually involve construction or similar manual labor. Participants must be at least twenty years of age and in good health. Language facility and previous project experience are desirable. The cost is $600, which covers transportation, orientation, maintenance, and insurance. Some scholarship aid is available. Americans who plan to be abroad for other purposes may apply for work camp assignments, arranging their own transportation. Details on such arrangements are available at the national office. Countries in which AFSC has made arrangements for participation this year include:

Africa: Algeria, Egypt, Ghana, Morocco, Nigeria, and Tunisia. Extra transportation cost for Ghana or Nigeria: $250.

East Asia: Japan (Japanese language required), and Korea.

Europe: Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, German Federal Republic, Great Britain, Greece, Holland, Hungary, Italy, Norway, Poland, Sweden, Switzerland, and Yugoslavia.

Middle East: Cyprus, Israel, and Turkey.

LONG-TERM PROJECTS

Voluntary International Service Assignments (VISA)

VISA provides opportunities for young Americans to learn through serving for a two-year period. Volunteers work for agencies of host countries while living among the people they serve. In addition to their individual assignments, volunteers meet periodically with their VISA colleagues and AFSC field representatives. Projects are in Germany, Guatemala, India, Tanzania, and the United States. Maintenance is provided. Age range is twenty to thirty.

AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE

The American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker organization, attempts to relieve human suffering and to seek nonviolent solutions to conflicts—personal, national, and international. In addition to its service projects for young people, the Committee sponsors community relations programs; world-wide programs of social and technical assistance, relief and rehabilitation; and seminars and institutes on peace and international affairs. Its work is carried on without regard to race, creed, or politics. It is supported entirely by voluntary contributions.

Letters to the Editor
Charleston Evening Post
134 Columbus Street
Charleston, South Carolina

Dear Sir:

Your editorial of August 18, "Mr. Mizell For The State," has just been brought to my attention. This editorial was prompted by my remarks before the Senate Education Subcommittee which was considering amendments to the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. I was saddened by this editorial, not because of the incorrect interpretation of my position, but because it reflected the faulty logic, lack of information, and immaturity which continues to characterize Charleston journalism.

First, let me set the record straight about the American Friends Service Committee. The AFSC is not a membership organization and therefore does not have a "South Carolina chapter" which I allegedly "head" as you stated in the editorial. My correct position is given at the end of this letter.

You also charge that the AFSC "is known more for its promotion of forced integration than for its efforts in behalf of freedom." Such fantasies are easily stated but impossible to document. For the past fifty years the American Friends Service Committee has initiated a wide variety of humanitarian programs throughout the world in an effort to relieve the deprivation, despair, and alienation which damages the humanity of the individual and creates barriers between men. No AFSC program promotes "forced integration" as you charge. On the contrary, the AFSC seeks to relieve those conditions which create unstable situations in the human family and thereby threaten man's freedom. Having its roots in the Quaker faith, the AFSC is dedicated to a deep respect for the individual--regardless of his race, nationality, economic status, or political ideology.

The pace of school desegregation is also not as impressive as you would have us believe. Last year only 5.9% of South Carolina's Negro children attended desegregated schools. This year the figure is a mere 7%. I do not consider an increase of 1.1% significant progress as you do.

Your editorial also expressed the concern that "Negroes go to school to learn and not to foster the New Society." It is regrettable that such learning must take place in Negro schools which continue to lack the educational resources, programs, and academic environment which facilitates learning in desegregated schools. You did not mention that there is impressive documentation that a great many graduates of the Negro schools perform only on the tenth, ninth, or eighth grade level. You did not point out that such educational deprivation eventually necessitates the creation of state and federal job training programs--further burdening the taxpayer and contributing to the bureaucracy which you abhor. You also chose to ignore, of course, the fact that the doctoral dissertations of two psychology graduate students at the University of South Carolina documented that the academic performance of Negro children generally improves after they transfer to the desegregated school.

You also charge that I, along with "a host of government officials, including the U.S. Commissioner of Education and more than one eminence of the federal bench," hold the view that "integration, to be worth having, must be compulsory." I have certainly never made such a statement nor have I heard such a view expressed by government officials. I would say that integration, to be worth having, must be significant. But there is no significant integration now, compulsory or otherwise.

I am, however, opposed to the so called freedom of choice system as a means for desegregating our schools in South Carolina. Besides the fact that freedom of choice is ineffectual as a device to abolish the dual school system, it forces the Negro parent and child to assume the burden of desegregating the schools. It is racist in approach and implementation. It certainly does not dismantle the dual educational structure which the Supreme Court declared unconstitutional in 1954 and which the U.S. Congress declared ineligible for federal funds in the 1964 Civil Rights Act. For the Southern Negro freedom of choice means the freedom to suffer economic or physical intimidation, the freedom to risk social isolation and academic failure, and the freedom to be denied equality of educational opportunity.

Freedom of choice, then, is a specious device which achieves only a kind of progressive tokenism and maintains a segregated education for most Negro children. Individuals have no freedom of choice so long as our society continues to cling to those institutions born of servitude and segregation. There can be no freedom of choice when such "freedom" is dependent upon the courage, inclination, and determination of the Negro to throw off the psychological and social restraints placed upon him by generations of white power. Just as the political and social events of the nineteenth century continue to distort the perspective of the Charleston newspapers, so are many Negro citizens still bound by the unpleasant memory of their recent past as well as by a conditioned allegiance to those institutions which our white society forced THEM to create. The present racial crisis in our country demands that white citizens give the necessary priority and commitment to the task of taking strong affirmative actions to eradicate the last vestiges of segregation and racism. Only then will we be on the road to assuring a meaningful freedom of choice.

It would not be fruitful or constructive to debate every point made in your editorial. It is apparent that we view our country quite differently. You implied that it was in a state of decay and that I am somehow "furthering the process of deterioration." To the contrary, I have a deep faith in our democratic system and in its ability to respond to crises and inequities in our society. If we are in such a state of decay as you claim it is because of a sense of pride and exclusiveness which makes meaningful responses difficult; it is because of [redacted] & racial of fear and negativism which editorials such as yours help to create.

and free choice of the individual for the allegedly superior wisdom of the state." Such is not my position, and in fact I feel that the best way of avoiding federal compulsion is for local leaders to take dedicated and sincere initiatives to deal with obvious local problems. The judgement and free choice of the individual is indeed sacred but if we are to create and maintain a free society such judgement must be infused with a respect for the rights of others and, at the same time, free of the dogma which would deny those rights.

The American Friends Service Committee, founded fifty years ago, is one of the corporate expressions of Quaker faith and practice. It is rooted in the conviction that each human life is sacred, each man a child of God, and that love, expressed through creative action, is the only power that can overcome hatred, prejudice, and fear. To that end, the Committee undertakes programs of relief, service, and education, ministering to both the physical and spiritual needs of men. Its work is made possible by the generous cooperation of thousands of concerned persons of all faiths.

To see what love can do

During its 50-year history, the American Friends Service Committee has had so many projects in so many places that it would be impossible to describe them adequately in anything less than a book. These few pages try to show how the Committee works rather than what it has done. The programs mentioned have been chosen to illustrate the development of the major interests of the Committee.

Within the Service Committee many smaller committees carry out the policies set by the Board of Directors. Decisions are reached by a consensus of those involved. This democratic way of working expresses the respect for the individual that underlies all the work of the Service Committee. Because field workers have a voice in administrative decisions, programs are responsive to changes in conditions. The committee structure gives young people opportunities to contribute new insights and new approaches to problems and to infuse the Committee with the energy and passionate courage of youth.

The power of love to overcome fear and hate gives promise that the institutions of a just society and a peaceful world can be built. The unfinished history of the Service Committee is an experiment to see what love can do.

AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE

Meeting youth's need for service

The will to rebuild of these young work campers in Europe finds material in the rubble of World War II.

"My experience with the AFSC has convinced me that love has the power to break down barriers between men and thus combat the causes of war. The way of life of Jesus makes sense because it works."

This straightforward and pragmatic statement by a young Service Committee volunteer is typical of the point of view of many of those who are attracted to the Committee. The Service Committee itself is an evolutionary organization, not working toward some preconceived utopia, but seeking answers that meet the challenge of changing problems. It follows in the tradition of William Penn, the Quaker who founded Philadelphia as a "holy experiment."

Penn wrote: "A good end cannot sanctify evil means; nor must we ever do evil, that good may come of it. . . .

(Above) In the joy of working together, differences of culture, religion and race are shared away. (Below) The first group of volunteers in 1917 prepare themselves at Haverford College for the rigors of ambulance driving in France. Tearing down cars familiarizes them with automotive maintenance and repair.

Let us then try what Love will do: for if men did once see we love them, we should soon find that they would not harm us. Force may subdue, but love gains; and he that forgives first, wins the laurel."

The events of history, and the Service Committee's responses to them, trace a pattern over 50 turbulent years. From the beginning, the Committee tried to do more than just alleviate suffering—it tried to overcome the alienations of war by the force of love. As the years passed and the AFSC helped the victims of one war after another, its interest and attention came increasingly to focus on the causes of these disasters. While not ceasing to respond to calls of distress, it began exploring ways of building peace.

Amid the social disorders of the thirties, culminating in World War II, the Committee became convinced that, as one staff member put it, "the seeds of war lie among the first neglected human beings." It widened the scope of its work to include efforts to combat deprivation not connected with war, to resolve racial discord and other potentially explosive tensions, and to make understanding of other nations and peoples part of children's education.

It was the desire on the part of young Friends for constructive alternatives to participation in World War I that led to the founding of the American Friends Service Committee in 1917. Young women joined that first group and have been prominent in the Service Committee's programs ever since. By the next spring 227 Americans were serving in the "Mission de la Société de Amis," and the number grew until it reached a peak of 547. The physical hardships and emotional shocks of war were a harsh test of the commitment of these young idealists, but nearly all returned strengthened in their faith in the power of love.

Hang-ups of this kind bothered the conscientious objectors of World War II, such as this fire jumper, less than the feeling that their conservation work in Civilian Public Service camps lacked social significance. But out of their service in mental hospitals grew the National Mental Health Association.

After the war young people continued to volunteer for service with the Committee. In 1922 the Committee began placing young college graduates in reform schools, prisons, settlement houses and other institutions. The volunteers were encouraged to serve for a full year, during which they received only their maintenance.

In the summer of 1933 two small groups of summer volunteers went to Kentucky and West Virginia to live with miners' families and devise their own programs. This was the beginning of youth projects run by the Service Committee itself. A workers' conference was first held that same year to assure that the experience of the volunteers working in institutions was related to the concerns of the Service Committee. The conference studied the philosophy and technique of the Friends' approach to conflict situations, explained some of the basic principles of social work, and drew the participants together in work, worship and play.

The next summer the Committee launched something new on the American scene: the work camp. The men built a water system for a new government subsistence homestead community at Westmoreland, Pennsylvania. The women worked with the homesteaders' wives, providing entertainment for the children and helping the women with canning. The work campers shared housekeeping chores. The men slept in a barn and the women and the director's family lived in a tenant house. In the evenings labor leaders, industrialists, educators, and government administrators led discussions of the economic and social problems of the thirties.

The work camp was a great success and changed the course of several participants' lives, perhaps because it combined study of social problems with practical experience that gave meaning and urgency to the studies. This combination has become the hallmark of the Service Committee's approach to education—making the abstract concrete through personal experience, adding the human dimension to intellectual study.

In subsequent years the work camps multiplied. There were junior work camps and senior work camps, work camps in cities and in rural settings. They attracted attention and interest in many circles, and other organizations picked up the idea and began running their own work camps. After World War II, in 1947, the Committee began sponsoring work camps overseas and sending young people to camps run by European organizations.

A program for children between the ages of 6 and 12 was started in 1942 to promote international understanding and good will at a time in their lives when lasting attitudes are being formed. A school affiliation program for older children has formed ties among more than 300 schools here and in other countries. Three times in recent years Russian teachers with a special interest in teaching English have participated in the life of American schools and American teachers have taught in Russian schools. After these experiences, it is hard for American children to believe all communists are devils, or for Russian children to believe all capitalists are oppressors of the people.

World War II brought a repetition of the First World War's flood of conscientious objectors seeking alternative service assignments. But this time it was different. A rider was attached to a Congressional appropriation bill making it illegal for CO's to leave the country.

The Friends, together with two other traditionally pacifist churches—the Brethren and Mennonites—cooperated with the Government in running Civilian Public Service camps for the CO's. The men worked on reforestation and conservation, receiving only maintenance and an allowance of $2.50 per month. Later some 3,000 CO's were used to alleviate a shortage of attendants in mental hospitals. They discovered that patients were being mistreated in many of the hospitals and sparked a continuing revolution in the care of mental patients.

Special youth projects were initiated in response to the Cold War, the first being an annual tripartite work camp sponsored by the United States, the U.S.S.R., and Great Britain. A similar effort to break down barriers was a work and study project held in the German Democratic Republic. In these projects the Committee demonstrated that distrust could give way to friendship when there was a common goal.

Again, because of the Vietnam War, conscientious objectors are turning to the AFSC for counseling and alternative service assignments. In response, the Committee has enlarged its national CO services program and provided for additional counseling in each region. About 60 young men are working in alternative service assignments with the Committee, and openings are being developed for many more.

Responding to suffering

Next door to an AFSC staff member live a doctor and his family. One evening the Service Committee worker told the doctor about an AFSC shipment of medical supplies for North Vietnamese civilians. The doctor heatedly responded, "I can understand your motivation in feeding children and helping refugees, but I can't understand why you are sending aid to our enemies in North Vietnam."

This doctor, faced with a wounded Vietnamese child, would almost certainly treat the child's injuries without hesitation, whether the child were "friend" or "enemy"—and would not be deterred even if the child had been wounded by "our side." But it is so difficult to see enemies as human that in time of war tears of sympathy soon dry up. The motivation deeper than sympathy, which sustains our concern for others through the searing days of war and makes us unalterably opposed to war itself, is reverence for every human life.

The first group of volunteers who went to France were aiding America's ally in the war and were controversial only in their refusal to participate in the war. Some ran hospitals and homes for children, convalescents and old people. Others organized sewing and embroidery workshops for women and recreation programs for children. Clothing, furniture and bedding were sold below cost rather than given away—a method of distribution that enabled more people to receive help and was more acceptable to the independent French peasants.

Although Russia had also been an ally against Germany, after the Bolsheviks took control and withdrew Russia from the war an expeditionary force, including American troops, was sent to Russia and aided the White Russians against the Bolsheviks. The Service Committee workers, who had just arrived in the Buzuluk area to help in relief work started by British Friends among refugees from western Russia and Poland, saw no reason to change their attitude toward the unfortunate refugees because of the change in government. They continued with medical care and with workshops that employed the women in weaving cloth and sewing garments.

The work of the Service Committee in Germany after World War I is probably better known than anything else it has done, and there is now general approval of its service of love in feeding a million children a hot meal a day. But at first the Committee was attacked for helping America's enemy. Feeling against Germany ran high in those years,

Under the red and black star, the Friends Ambulance Unit in China brought Western medicine to many for the first time in their lives. Equipment was primitive and supplies sometimes so scarce that even bandages were washed, sterilized and used again.

(Left) When famine broke out in India during World War II, the Government of India asked the Committee to administer a joint relief program of more than 300 agencies. This led to the present community development programs in India and Pakistan. (Below) In the terrible famine in Russia after World War I, Quaker relief workers lived in box cars for months, bathing in kerosene every night to repel typhus-infected lice.

(Top) Tales are told of Siberian blizzards in which the drivers of Quaker Service sleighs had to grope their way through blinding snow from one telegraph pole to the next, leading their horses on ropes. (Below) Lack of gasoline was overcome by rigging up charcoal burners, but bandits and the anarchy of civil war finally halted the trucks of the Friends Ambulance Unit in China after they had hauled medical supplies to isolated hospitals throughout western China from 1941 to 1949. The men and women of the unit then set up a clinic in the old transport buildings and ministered to civilians and military casualties of both the Nationalists and the Communists.

with heavy reparations being demanded and shipping blockaded to enforce payment. The Committee's Annual Report for 1923 anticipated the consequences prophetically:

"On account of the French occupation of the Ruhr, and other contributing causes, conditions in Germany are as bad as they have been at any time since the war. The mass child-feeding has brought up the general health standards of the children, but the depreciated currency, lack of foreign credits and a general distrust on the part of the peoples in the allied countries have brought great suffering to the people throughout Germany. The occupation of the Ruhr has likewise revived a great deal of the spirit of hatred that we hoped would pass with the period of the war. The close of the year's work in Germany, therefore, makes us realize that we must make far greater efforts to help these people in their time of need, or such seeds of hatred will be sown that will in another generation result in an even more dreadful war."

Controversy came again when the AFSC decided to feed starving children of miners in the coal fields of West Virginia who were out on strike. Some people who approved of feeding war victims felt that feeding the families of striking miners was taking the union side against management. The first feeding was in 1922, and in 1928 the Committee again fed children of miners, this time in Pennsylvania.

With the great depression of the thirties, miners were thrown out of work in large numbers. The United States Children's Bureau asked the Committee to feed miners' children in Maryland, Kentucky, Tennessee, Illinois, Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Attention shifted overseas again when the Nazis rose to power in Germany and the international center in Berlin was swamped with Jews trying to flee. In 1938 a delegation of Friends attempted to intercede with Hitler on behalf of all those being persecuted. Failing in this, they visited a top official of the Gestapo and sought support of their efforts to help Jews emigrate. The apparent result was that the staff of the Berlin center met less difficulty in arranging for Jews to leave the country.

The staff in Europe worked on with a sense of gathering

From the warehouse of the AFSC as much as 2¼ million pounds of clothing, blankets, shoes, soap, vitamins and tools have been shipped in a year. The Material Aids Program solicits these supplies from manufacturers and collects used clothing from the Committee's constituency. Much of the labor for collecting, processing and shipping these goods is volunteered. (Below) The value of aid given to German children after World War I was more than double that of supplies shipped to Germany, thanks to donations of flour, sugar and transportation by the German Government. Fewer than 50 Quaker Service workers were involved, the great bulk of the work being carried out by 25,000 German volunteers.

darkness. Even after the United States had entered the war and the AFSC workers in France had been interned by the Germans, European Friends continued their work all through the war.

The Hungarian crisis in 1957 flooded Europe with refugees. The Service Committee rushed supplies and workers to Austria and Yugoslavia, setting an AFSC record for shipments in a single month. AFSC workers were the only voluntary agency staff providing welfare services for about 20 refugee camps in Yugoslavia.

The Committee's insistence on treating men everywhere as brothers has opened many doors to its work. Its efforts to work with efficiency and integrity have perhaps been an additional factor in persuading other organizations, including the United Nations, to entrust it with the administration of relief programs. A few workers carefully selected for their ability and dedication have often carried out large programs—as in the Gaza Strip in 1949 and 1950, when a team of 60 workers fed over 200,000 refugees and provided work, schooling and medical care for them.

The Committee tries to adapt its aid to the needs of people. When Algerians needed clothing, it decided to send burnouses, a kind of parka worn over other clothing. So the AFSC organized volunteer groups in hospitals, churches and other institutions to make burnouses. They obtained gifts of yard goods from manufacturers and thread and sewing machines from local business men. Transportation from the workshops to Philadelphia was often contributed by truckers.

Latest in the long series of international disasters, and most distressing for many Americans because of our country's role in it, is the Vietnam War. AFSC relief efforts started in 1966 with the opening of a day-care center for refugee children at Quang Ngai, in South Vietnam. Seventy children receive supplementary feeding and baths and enjoy games, dances, and stories.

Imperative though the need for relief work has been throughout the history of the Committee, and willingly though men and women have given years of their lives to it, most of them have ended their service with a feeling of work left unfinished. Many have returned to the Service Committee in later years to contribute to its efforts to bring about peace between nations.

Staying to rebuild

Young American volunteers join in giving a cracked and battered French cottage a new roof.

With assistance from many groups, the Italians energetically rebuilt towns and villages ruined by battles between Allied and Axis armies in World War II.

"We wanted to mend houses," wrote an AFSC worker in France during World War I, "but the reason we wanted to mend houses was that it would give us a chance to try to mend hearts." This spirit has always carried the Service Committee beyond the immediate tasks of relief that take it to trouble spots around the world. Rebuilding was an important part of the first Service Committee work in France, where the volunteers set up factories to make portable wooden houses while the fighting was still going on. At the end of the war, an entire district of more than 40 villages around Verdun was rebuilt with material from American army dumps and cash obtained by selling equipment from these dumps.

During World War II, the Service Committee prepared for peace. Projections of reconstruction needs were made while armies still marched across war-torn countries. After the war had ended, and the Committee had helped meet the first emergency needs, many agencies joined in helping Europe get back on its feet. What seemed to be needed most was logistical support for the many reconstruction projects. So the Committee hauled building materials in France, Italy, Poland, Austria and Germany.

Neighborhood centers were set up in war-devastated communities in France, Germany and Japan. Providing workshops, sewing rooms, laundries, libraries, and rooms for student and adult discussions, they helped restore the mechanics of civilization while drawing people together in community responsibility.

In China the Friends Ambulance Unit, organized by British Friends, had been working since 1941. After the war the Service Committee took responsibility for its administration and renamed it Friends Service Unit, China. The Unit turned to reconstruction of the demolished village of Chungmou. Kilns were built to fire bricks. A new school and a hospital were built and cooperatives were organized. Medical teams turned their attention from battle casualties to kala-azar and malaria sufferers. As civil war swept the country, teams worked with both the Communists and the Nationalists. The Service Committee was able to continue its work for about a year after the defeat of the Nationalists, and then turned its operations over to the Chinese.

Throughout the Korean War, the Quaker United Nations Program supported efforts for peace negotiations. Even before the truce had been arranged, the Service Committee sent workers to investigate refugee needs. After the war, a Joint Friends Service Unit, representing the AFSC, the Friends Service Council (London) and the Canadian Friends Service Committee, went to Kunsan. There they rehabilitated a 250-bed hospital and ran a self-help housing program for refugees.

In all its relief work, and in the rebuilding after an emergency has passed, the Committee's motivation is deeper than charity. It is interested in helping people live fuller and more independent lives rather than merely improving their material circumstances. Men and women cannot easily develop their inherent potential under conditions of sickness, starvation and hunger. The trucks with the red and black star may carry milk and medicine, but their most precious cargo is the brotherhood of love. It is in this spirit that Quaker Service workers in Algeria help villagers build a new mosque. Their desire is not to convert men to their persuasion, but to help men follow the guidance of their own spirit.

A new patriotism

"Feeding the hungry and clothing the naked is spectacular and inspiring work. It is less spectacular and a much harder task, however, to prevent a war; to keep children from being starved; to encourage nations to settle their differences by arbitration; to cultivate a spirit of goodwill among men for men; and to develop a new type of patriotism."

These words in the 1928 Annual Report clearly point out the future course of the Service Committee in education for peace. Peace caravans had already begun this "harder task" in 1927. Young men and women toured the country that summer, speaking to those who would hear them, bringing the fresh eye of youth and a new point of view to towns and cities across the United States.

Institutes of International Relations began in 1930. Ministers, teachers and other adults met on campuses to discuss problems of peace. Attendance grew rapidly with ten institutes enrolling 1,496 participants by 1936.

Since World War II Service Committee efforts to improve communication between the U.S.S.R. and the United States have perhaps played a small role in relieving Cold War tensions. In 1949 a study, "The United States and the Soviet Union—Some Quaker Proposals," called for accommodation and cooperation between the two countries. Speak Truth to Power, a study that examined the relevance of pacifism in a nuclear age, was published in 1955.

As recently as 1964, however, discussion of any relaxation of obdurate policies of isolation and containment of China was limited to small groups. That year an experienced AFSC working party wrote A New China Policy:

From the early peace caravans (above) to the family camps of today (below) the AFSC has raised questions in young minds—questions of ends and means, questions of ultimate values. Young people, less paralyzed by conflicting loyalties and motivations, see the futility and evil of war more readily than their elders. They see that, even as mature love is not blind infatuation but takes satisfaction in helping someone live up to his own expectations, so a deeper patriotism is not blind nationalism but concern that our country be true to its ideals.

Some Quaker Proposals, now in its third printing by Yale University Press. Three major conferences on U.S. policy toward China followed: one on the West Coast in 1964, a national conference in Washington, D.C., in 1965, and an international conference in Chicago in 1966. Co-sponsored with major universities and foreign policy organizations, they brought together experts from Asia and Europe, as well as the United States. Many local seminars and institutes have involved additional thousands of citizens in their own communities. Gatherings of this type have been buttressed by an active literature and national speakers service.

The Vietnam War has challenged the AFSC to educate the public about the nature of the war and our role in it. Peace in Vietnam: A New Approach in Southeast Asia, written by an AFSC working party, was published in 1966. Printings exceed 100,000 copies. Public statements have been widely circulated by newspaper advertisements and pamphlets. The latest statement called for a cessation of U.S. bombing and the beginning of a clearly stated and swiftly phased withdrawal to create a climate in which all the Vietnamese can negotiate. As far back as 1954 the Committee issued a statement, saying in part:

"The AFSC is profoundly disturbed with the pressures for U.S. military intervention in Indo-China. On the basis of long Quaker experience in international service we are convinced that nothing but disaster lies down this road. The destructiveness of modern war can produce nothing but hatred, even among those on whose behalf the fighting ostensibly is undertaken, and hatred is no foundation upon which freedom and democracy can be built."

Opening doors

Young leaders who attend AFSC seminars early in their careers often rise to influential positions in subsequent years. Of more than 1,000 diplomats who have participated in AFSC conferences, over 100 are now in ambassadorial positions. (Below) The director of the Quaker United Nations Program in New York City confers with a delegate from an African nation. The AFSC has primary responsibility for this international program, which is also supported by Quaker groups from other countries.

There was a certain formality, even though the chairs were comfortable and the table well supplied with coffee and cakes. The secretary of the East German Peace Council, which had invited the AFSC to East Germany, began the meeting with an ideologically correct account of the Peace Council's approach to peace. The leaders of the AFSC mission to divided Germany responded with a description of the Service Committee's approach to peace, stressing personal relationships rather than politics.

The leader of the Friends group then invited those around the table to introduce themselves and say a few words about themselves. As the East Germans sketched their backgrounds, they repeatedly mentioned previous experiences with the Quakers in Germany. Several had been among the more than two million of their generation fed in the relief and rehabilitation program after World War I. One had been helped as a refugee fleeing the Nazis; another's wife had been rescued from a concentration camp. Others had received aid in refugee or relief operations after World War II. When the introductions were over, all but one of the dozen East Germans had expressed appreciation for past relations with the Quakers.

The significant thing that emerged from their comments was not that they had received help when they needed it. Those who have been the recipients of charity are not proud of it and seldom care to recall it. These men remembered their encounters with Quaker workers as meaningful human experiences that had occurred at crucial times in their lives. As they recalled moments of warmth in harsh times, something of warmth and trust was rekindled in the conference room.

The Service Committee's efforts to reconcile international disputes, which were part of its work from the beginning, found focus in its international centers—small groups, often just a couple, who maintained contacts and looked after Quaker interests in countries where the Service Committee had worked during and after World War I. After World War II new centers were established in several cities. The centers in Paris and Geneva have played major roles in the Committee's work over the years.

During the 1950's the Committee began appointing men as Quaker International Affairs Representatives (QIARs) to promote communication among groups and nations estranged from each other. There are QIARs based in Germany, Switzerland and Japan, and there is one who divides his time between India and Pakistan.

Reflecting on his role, one QIAR wrote, "The QIAR is not another power representative added to the power jumble; indeed his very powerlessness is an asset which explains in part his relevance and which opens many doors on both sides that might otherwise remain closed."

After World War II the Committee began a series of international seminars for foreign students in the United States. This program was expanded in the 1950's to include conferences for diplomats. These have involved 1,400 diplomats—a sizeable portion of the 23,000 diplomats estimated to be posted outside their own country—and have promoted the concept of international responsibility in diplomacy. In the 1960's the program was extended to reach other categories of young leaders in Europe, Asia and Africa who are beginning careers of public service.

The Service Committee's nonpartisanship and the confidentiality with which participants' remarks are treated encourage openness and trust. As one diplomat remarked, "Candid discussions in friendly surroundings for ten days can do much more toward understanding another's viewpoint and frankly assessing your own than could be done by formal and informal diplomatic entertainment in a year."

Encouraging initiative

A Quaker Service worker in Algeria shows mothers how to wash their babies. Then the mothers try it themselves.

"A quarter of my time went into talking informally with people—the mayor, the schoolteachers, anyone. These conversations put across the vital parts of my work: new ideas, a different viewpoint, encouragement to look at a problem and do something about it.

"But even more important, for two years someone many had come to love and respect said continually in words and deeds, "You can learn to read; you can find ways to improve your life, you can cure your sick child if you demand help; and it is important that you do all these things because you, personally, are of value."

These reflective words by a volunteer returning from service in Guatemala give the gist of a way of helping that builds self-reliance. An AFSC staff member recently observed that some of the best projects in the history of the Service Committee were not carried out by the Committee itself but by others.

A citizen of Baroda, India, explained it to a neighbor this way: "To mend the cracks in your roof you need cement to mix with sand and pebbles. We are the sand and pebbles; these people who have come to help us are like the cement. They are here to hold us together and make us strong."

In Baroda, the Indian community workers of the Service Committee staff were selected for ability in working with people. They brought few technical skills to the communities in which they worked, and no money, tools or materials. They act as catalysts, stimulators, motivators—they raise questions and participate in meetings in as quiet and helpful a way as possible. The people of Baroda decide what is needed and do the work. The staff of the Baroda Community Development Service measure their success by how much people can do without them.

The evolution of the Committee's community development programs can perhaps best be illustrated by the example of Mexico. The first project was a work camp in the summer of 1939 that brought American and Mexican students together to build two adobe schools. The number of work camps increased in subsequent summers, and two of them were continued all year round through 1946 and 1947. Participation of Mexican young people has always been an integral part of these camps, and in recent years young people have been encouraged to come from other countries.

In 1948 a "Pilot Project in Basic Education" was co-sponsored with UNESCO and the Mexican Government. This grew into the social and technical assistance projects of the 1950's, which brought workers with special skills, as well as generalists without special training, to teach new ways of doing things. Many of the specialists were provided by the Mexican Government. Young South Americans have come to work in the projects and in some instances have gone home and started their own volunteer programs. In recent years increasing emphasis has been given to encouraging local initiative and playing a supportive role in community efforts.

Most of the people of the Peruvian barriada of Pamplona Alta were unemployed and needed work. This sewing cooperative and a metal working cooperative were first steps; skills and experience gained in these efforts have since been used to start private enterprises.

In 1966 the Service Committee started a community development project in a low-income housing development in Mexico City, where it has encouraged the formation of a parents' committee to improve schools and recreational facilities.

Perhaps the most conspicuous results of 28 years of association between the AFSC and Mexico are the wells, roads and schools that have been built; but the most significant results are new attitudes and goals that have become an inextricable part of the life of the country and extend beyond the borders of Mexico.

As the Service Committee gained experience in self-help techniques during the 1930's, it became interested in family planning as a way to help people gain more control over their own lives. In several instances the Committee has been able to pioneer in the introduction of family planning techniques because of its policy of making advice and contraceptives available only as an integral part of a broader and more comprehensive program. A well-known early research report, Contraception and Fertility in the Southern Appalachians, by Gilbert Wheeler Beebe, was based on work done from 1936 to 1939 by the AFSC in Logan County, West Virginia, as part of its program for unemployed coal miners. The Committee also initiated family planning work in Tennessee, North and South Carolina, and Alabama during those years. Family planning has since become part of AFSC programs in many countries.

Self-help housing has long been an interest of the Service Committee. When the Government set up a program of Subsistence Homesteads in 1933, the Committee was involved in the planning and its executive secretary, Clarence Pickett, assisted in the administration of the program for the first year.

In 1937 the Committee began its own homestead community in Fayette County, Pennsylvania. Penn-Craft, as it was called, was a pioneer venture in self-help housing. A sweater mill was started to provide employment and a community garden provided much of the food.

A similar pioneer effort in the urban field was undertaken in the heart of Philadelphia in 1949.

In 1962 the Service Committee started a self-help housing program in Tulare County, California. Twenty families got low-interest, long-term loans from the Farmers Home Administration to buy the bricks and mortar, the AFSC provided construction supervision and the families shared their labor to build modern houses valued at $10,000 each. From this impetus self-help housing projects have developed independently of the Service Committee in New Jersey, Mississippi, Pennsylvania, Florida and other states. In California a state-wide organization, seeded by AFSC funds, is helping hundreds of families use this technique. In 1966 International Self-Help Housing Associates was founded, with AFSC encouragement, to provide a resource for self-help housing groups.

Near the original houses built in Tulare County, 55 families are building a self-help community in Three Rocks, one of the most blighted farm labor communities in California. The houses were long ago condemned by the state. For the last nine years each family had to haul its water from nearby camps or irrigation ditches. With Service Committee help these families have formed a corporation called El Porvenir and have received a grant from the Office of Economic Opportunity. The assistance of state, county and community officials, combined with large donations of time and skill by engineers and architects, has helped them overcome innumerable obstacles.

A shaded corner, a quiet moment, a few notes of music shared . . .

Toward equality for Americans

Most people take it for granted they can live anywhere they desire and can afford. The Service Committee works to make this true for everyone.

A woman who visited government officials in Washington as one of a group of southern Negro farm workers remarked afterward in surprise, "You know, they really treated us like we was somebody! We knew we was somebody, but we didn't know that they knew."

The conviction that she and her children are each somebody has given this woman the grit to get her son and daughter into college. But many Americans still don't know that they are somebodies. And many of their fellow citizens still refuse to treat them as somebodies.

Discriminatory institutions and customs, such as separate school systems and exclusionary business practices, must be abolished if all our citizens are to enjoy their constitutional rights. The history of the civil rights acts has shown that citizen support and government enforcement are needed to make laws work. Then we can have the kinds of equality that reduce prejudice—children going to school together, men working together as equals, families living next to each other with similar problems and ambitions and with similar economic means to realize their ambitions.

In the 1920's when the Service Committee was working in the coal fields of West Virginia, couples known as Friendly Counselors moved into the area and tried to bring together hostile factions—miners and mine owners, white and Negro miners. Because they lived with the people and involved themselves in the affairs of the community, their understanding was greater than that of groups not locally involved. Because the Friendly Counselors sought to help everyone involved to live in a better way, and took sides against no one, they were able to bring people together who would resist partisan efforts to force change on them. From this work, however, the Committee learned that real communication requires mutual respect. When employer and employee, or Negro and white, can search together as equals for solutions to their mutual problems, new and better ways of working and living often emerge.

A century before the Civil War, John Woolman sensitized American Quakers to the immorality of slaveholding, and Friends have subsequently been among the leaders in the fight to end slavery and its aftereffects. Many of the young people who volunteered for socially constructive work in the Home Service Section of the AFSC during the 20's were placed in teaching positions in Negro schools. In the 1940's special emphasis began to be placed on making work camps multiracial and locating them in areas of interracial tension. A Race Relations Committee was formed in 1943 and worked to avert violence in racial disorders in Philadelphia that year. Negro educators and scholars were sent on visiting lectureships to colleges and universities. In 1945 efforts were started to find employment for Negroes in fields previously closed to them. This broadened into a program of employment on merit, with staff in ten major cities.

After rioting broke out because a Negro family moved into an all-white neighborhood in Cicero, Illinois, in 1951, the Service Committee became involved in housing integration. It has worked in several major cities and two smaller cities to end segregation and build an open society. In the last few years new directions have been taken. In Philadelphia an experimental program has tried new ways of bringing housing opportunities to the attention of the Negro community. This program has also sought to put more vigor in the official nondiscriminatory policy of the Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration.

The changing roles of government and private agencies are shown in this program. As government agencies take responsibility for new social services, private agencies with competence and experience in those areas are needed to advise the new programs, act as watchdogs to see that the Government fulfills its responsibility to the public, and pioneer in new areas where the risk of failure is too high for a politically vulnerable agency. At times such as the present, when the Government relaxes its efforts, demands increase for private agencies to report people's needs and assume the financial burdens of programs.

In 1966 the Committee participated in the first major attempt to use nonviolent direct action against the social injustices of a northern city. An AFSC program in Chicago had been working for an integrated city for 15 years, using education and persuasion, helping to bring buyers and sellers together outside the discriminatory real estate industry. Little progress had resulted.

Resentment and anger built up in Chicago, breaking out in riots. Everyone understands the threat to society of physical violence. The suffocating violence of the status quo is harder to appreciate, especially for those afraid of change. The closed door, the turned back—these hidden violences cast a black shadow into the future in the same baleful way as does physical violence.

The Committee encouraged Dr. Martin Luther King and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference to come to Chicago and begin The Movement to End Slums. The Movement attacked the whole complex of problems facing the city—problems of schools, housing, jobs and public services. AFSC staff members served on the major policy-making committee and manned the two headquarters from which marches were launched. Rioting and violence broke out, but the marchers maintained nonviolent discipline. And for the first time in a major Northern city, all leadership groups publicly committed themselves to a policy of open housing and to specific actions to implement that policy.

Twenty years ago Henry Cadbury, then chairman of the Committee, gave an explanation of the Committee's methods that remains unsurpassed:

"The work of the American Friends Service Committee is not to be regarded as adequate or complete. It is simply an attempt to pioneer for a better world. It points a direction that differs from the continuing politics of force and power politics, of class and race conflict. It suggests that means are as important as ends, and that personal contact and understanding must underlie large-scale relations if they are to be wholesome. To the great social problems Friends do not profess to have already the ultimate answers. They wish to supply the evidence of actual experience rather than the theories of abstract utopias. They know that blueprints remain blueprints unless men can be found to do some real building, and that wholehearted enthusiasm is no less needed than intelligent understanding. Many of the practical questions can be solved only step by step. To face the problems fearlessly and frankly is the beginning of wisdom."

Abram Calls for Study To Eliminate Prejudice

PREJUDICE

AJ 6/6/66

By JOHN ASKINS

Prejudice will only be eliminated by a "scientific" study of its causes, the president of the American Jewish Committee, former Atlanta attorney Morris Abram, said here Saturday night.

Morris Abram

He was guest speaker at a dinner celebrating the 60th anniversary of the AJC, which he said was formed to "enforce human rights."

Mr. Abram, who is also the U.S. representative to the United Nations Human Rights Commission, said prejudice has many forms, and the form historically manifested against Jews "has had as its ultimate goal a world without Jews."

HUMANITY, he said, "does not know nearly enough about prejudices, but it is not something that comes out of economics or class structrue—it's something that comes out of deep psychological needs in the individual.

"We do know," he said, "that a man who is deeply prejudiced is a man fundamentally not satisfied with himself, and that prejudice in extreme forms is a disease . . . this knowledge has reformed many attitudes in America.

"Now no one wants to be known as emotionally unstable."

He said the AJC believes strongly that a scientific attack on prejudice will work, and to that end sponsors research into the subject.

So far, that research has concentrated almost exclusively on prejudice in individuals, he said, "but there has been no work at all into the dark field of what causes mass prejudice.

"We still do not know how it was possible for the most literate people in the heart of Europe to eviscerate and destroy 6 million Jews."

Mr. Abram, who was co-chairman of the first White House conference on civil rights in 1965, said legislation is one answer to prejudice, because "an old Jewish proverb says that while the law cannot make people good, it can make them pretend to be good, and if a man pretends long enough to be good he may become like his pretense."

BUT THE TIME may soon come, he said, when legislation in the field of human rights will have been "exhausted," when there is nothing more legislation can do.

Court Asked To Intervene In Mississippi

Ark. Gazette 2/25/66

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department asked a federal court Thursday to desegregate schools and to order remedial classes in two Mississippi counties.

The remedial classes would bring the educational level of the Negroes up to that of whites, the Department said.

The Department moved in United States District Court at Jackson to intervene in a school desegregation suit against school officials of Issaquena and Sharkey Counties.

The Court had ordered a four-grade-a-year desegregation plan for the counties last October and the government Thursday requested several additions to the plan, contending that they were needed to bring it up to current minimum legal standards.

It asked a requirement that the districts begin an educational program "to correct the effects of past interior educational opportunities afforded Negro students because of their race."

The Court was asked to bar the use of race as a factor in assigning teachers and other employes.

The Justice Department also asked the court to forbid segregation in school buses and all other school facilities and services and to guarantee pupils the opportunity each year to transfer to another school of their choice.

Under the court order of last October, 49 Negro pupils enrolled in one formerly all-white school and six Negroes enrolled at another.

A Fund Which Fails Any or All Tests

GOVERNOR FAUBUS is back from Florida but still has made no public indication whether he will accept or reject a cash fund that some of his friends have been raising to help pay for the new mansion that he is building up near Huntsville.

There is some question which is, or ought to be, the more astonishing—the fact that such a fund campaign should have been started in the first place, or the fact that the governor did not repudiate it the instant that he heard of it. The whole affair, in any case, shows just how thick the callouses that have accumulated over this state's administration's sense of right and wrong after so many years in power.

FROM ALL the news accounts, The Fund is not designed to finance another campaign for office (although most people expect the governor to run for a seventh term). The Fund is, from all the accounts, designed to be just a big payment on the governor's house, the money to be gotten from diverse sources including, reportedly, that host of men who have been appointed to state boards and commissions over these 11 years and two months of the Faubus administration.

Talk about conflict of interest! Here is the sight of a governor's friends engaged in a gift-raising campaign whose scope may at least partially be measured by estimates of the Huntsville mansion's cost. Mr. Faubus has estimated the cost may run under $70,000, which figures at less than $10 a square foot, but if it doesn't actually run into six figures then Mr. Faubus is the greatest cost cutter since Sewell

There are various yardsticks on the size of gifts that a public official may deem proper: One celebrated set of definitions was drafted by a Washington official who listed what his assistants might accept in detail, ruling out for example any ham that weighed over 12 pounds. Another rule of thumb is that the only proper gift is one that may be eaten or drunk at a single sitting. We have heard of no rules governing contributions to a private home, but we are confident that the mansion fund fails any of the tests from the 12-Pound-Ham Rule on up the line.

There have been no disclosures of the identities of the people who have been asked to contribute, and one can only speculate on how personal interest may or may not be inter-related in each case with the state's business. But the simple acceptance of such a gift would in itself be a violation of the code governing conflicts of interest that is deeply rooted in the public policy, if not in the law, of this country.

AFTER WORD of The Fund leaked out last week, we withheld comment (other than facetious comment) pending the governor's return from a vacation. Now that he has returned we know no more of his intentions about the proposed gift than we knew before. His non-committal response at a press conference this week was not what we might have expected from the governor's office a few years ago. In pure conjecture, can anyone imagine a Francis Cherry or a Sid McMath or a Ben Laney daring to respond in such fashion even if he found such a proposed fund tempting? This far the state has come in these six terms.

We do not know whether or not Governor Faubus is going to douse the whole project with a word, as he can. He has disavowed any prior knowledge of what his friends were undertaking and we believe him. But let us define the issue precisely, for the record:

It is grossly improper for a public official to receive large gifts, from individuals or from groups. It was grossly improper for the Faubus friends to inaugurate the mansion fund. It would be grossly improper for Governor Faubus to accept it.

Desegregation Lags, Lawyer Tells LR Board

Ark Gazette.
2/25/66

By BILL LEWIS
Of the Gazette Staff

John W. Walker, a Negro lawyer, urged the Little Rock School Board Thursday to take the lead in carrying out school, athletic and faculty desegregation rather than leaving it to its "delegated agents."

Walker and Board members made some rather abrupt statements in the brief exchange, which took place during a period of the Board's regular meeting set aside for audiences with groups and individuals.

Walker began by observing that the Board—then with a totally different membership—had started a plan for school desegregation in 1956 that was to have ended in 1962 or 1964.

"This is 1966, and there still remains a lot of school segregation," he said. "I think it's time for the Board to address itself to the problem and have it settled by the Board, not its delegated agents."

As to teacher segregation, Walker began by quoting Superintendent Floyd W. Parsons as saying the Negro teachers were not adequately trained.

"Mr. Walker," said Parsons sternly, "I did not make that statement."

Walker then said he thought all School Board meetings were "supposed to be public." The Board had just concluded an executive session on what President W. C. McDonald said were "disciplinary problems."

McDonald told him the Board's attorney had assured it that the executive sessions were proper. Walker started to say something else, and McDonald cut him off by delaring, "Thank you very much for your statement."

Walker persisted. The character of the schools now is "not substantially different" from 1956, he said. "For example, we still have Negro schools partici-

Russell H. Matson Jr. told him that it had been reported in newspapers that athletics were to be desegregated. Others said Negro students could request transfer under the freedom of choice plan next year. Dr. John A. Harrel Jr. said that on some things—like teaching staff integration—the Board had gone farther than the majority of the District's patrons wanted it to, without court order.

Walker began again to discuss the teachers, saying that Parsons and Deputy Superintendent Paul R. Fair had said in January 1965 that Negro teachers were not "equally prepared."

Parsons interrupted him and said, "Mr. Fair, did you make that statement?"

Fair answered, "I did not make that statement but I agree with it."

Walker was asked if it were true. He said he didn't think so.

"Then why don't you sit down and let us operate the schools?" Matson demanded.

The matter was resolved for the moment by Mrs. Jean Gordon, who said three organizations—the Conference on Race and Religion, the League of Women Voters and the Special Committee on Public Education—had asked for audiences with the Board to discuss desegregation. At her suggestion, the Board agreed to set a date for such a hearing later.

Members Chided, For 'Rudeness'

After that occurred, Ozell Sutton, associate director of the Arkansas Council on Human Relations, and a Negro, arose to say he was "surprised at some of the things we're hearing today," particularly the "rudeness of some of the Board members." The remark was greeted with applause by some SCOPE members and others present.

"The question has been raised that the structure of our school system is still the same," Sutton said. "You know it, we all know it. It's still segregated. All that's been done is to let a few Negroes who are bold enough go to white schools. Until the structure is removed, there's not going to be full desegregation."

He said he felt Negro teachers, including his wife, had reason to question the objectivity of the staff in assessing their qualifications and "have reason to fear any judgment of the staff on it."

Bennett Denies Negro's Charge In Job Lawsuit

Attorney General Bruce Bennett, speaking for the state Revenue Department, denied Thursday an allegation that Mrs. Mildred Tennyson of Little Rock, a Negro, had been sent to a Negro politician to get a recommendation before she could get a temporary job in the Department.

Bennett filed an answer in federal District Court to a request by Mrs. Tennyson's attorney, John W. Waker of Little Rock, that he make 14 admissions of fact in connection with Mrs. Tennyson's lawsuit against the Revenue Department.

Mrs. Tennyson contends that she applied December 27 for a Revenue Department job to sell automobile licenses and that she was told that she would have to see a local Negro politician for a recommendation. She said this violated her rights under the Fourteenth Amendment.

Her lawsuit also said she had passed examinations by the Merit System Council for jobs in the Welfare Department and Employment Security Division but that an assistant to Governor Faubus referred her to a Negro political leader for a recommendation.

In his original reply, Bennett said only that a screening committee had not been authorized by the governor or Revenue Department.

Dissatisfied, Walker filed his request for 14 admissions of fact on February 14.

Bennett denied the charge that Mrs. Tennyson was referred to a Negro politician for a recommendation and that all Negro applicants for the temporary jobs were sent to Negro politicians.

He also denied charges that the Revenue Department had set a fixed number of jobs for politicians were assigned quotas Negroes, that various Negro to fill and that the temporary employes were assigned jobs on a racial basis. Walker had said that Negroes were assigned to jobs only in substations in Negro areas and that the staffs at the substations were either all-white or all-Negro.

The Revenue Department replied that the employes were assigned, at their request, to substations nearest their homes.

Bennett's reply also said the federal court did not have jurisdiction in the case and that the Fourteenth Amendment did not apply to temporary jobs in the state Revenue Department.

Mercury Stays Above Freezing

After a morning low of 32 degrees Thursday the temperature stayed above freezing the rest of the day. The high was 44. Most of the snow that was exposed to the sun melted.

The record low for February 24 is 17 in 1899 and the record high is 78 set in 1890, 1891 and 1918. On February 24, 1965, the high was 47 and the low 21.

Excluding Alaska and Hawaii, the hottest and coldest places in the nation Thursday were Miami Beach, with 80 degrees and 10 below zero at Havre, Mont. At Anchorage, Alaska, the high was 22 and the low 4 and at Honolulu, Hawaii, it was 70 and 64.

Negro Slain in Cold Blood, Jury Is Told at Hamburg Trial

Gazette State News Service

HAMBURG—Prosecutor Frank Wynne said Thursday that the state would prove that Ed Vail, 40, a Hamburg mechanic, shot Lee Edward Culbreath, 14, a Portland Negro, in "cold-blooded murder for no reason more than meanness in his heart."

Vail's trial opened before Circuit Judge G. B. Colvin with the selection of an all-male jury and the opening statements by the prosecuting attorney and John F. (Mutt) Gibson of Dermott, the defense counsel.

The jury, composed of businessmen, farmers and mill workers from all sections of Ashley County, included one Negro. Five Negroes were questioned as prospective jurors but several disqualified themselves when they said they did not believe in the death penalty.

The state is asking for the death penalty for Vail, who is charged with first-degree murder in the fatal shooting of the young Negro as he was standing in front of a cafe at Portland about 6 p.m. December 5.

In his opening statement, Wynne said he would call as a witness Bobby Golden, 14, of Portland, who he said would tell of riding into Portland on a bicycle with young Culbreath and letting him off in front of the cafe. He said Golden would testify that Vail, who was in a pick-up truck, fired a .22 caliber revolver four times. Culbreath was hit in the lungs, Wynne said, turned into the Negro entrance of the cafe and died in the arms of another Negro.

Wynne said another witness would testify that he saw Vail point the gun out of the truck, which had a Christmas tree in the back. The prosecutor said arresting officers and ballistic experts would testify about taking the gun from Vail and that the bullet which killed Culbreath was fired from his gun.

"This is a serious crime, an uncalled-for crime so the state is asking the death penalty," Wynne said.

Defense Claims Vail Was Drunk

Gibson said the defense would prove that Vail was "completely, totally dead drunk and did not know where he was at the time." Vail was so drunk at the time of his arrest, Gibson said, that he could not be questioned.

Gibson said the defense would admit that the bullet was fired from a gun in Vail's possession but that Vail did not know whether he had shot a Negro boy. He said the defense would show that the boy was standing in the shadows under an awning.

"There was no premeditation. It was a pure and simple accident brought on by a man dethroned of his reason," Gibson said.

Several hundred persons, about one third of them Negroes, were in the courtroom part of the day. During recesses, several white persons shook hands with Vail.

Vail's brother, James, also was charged in the shooting. He will be tried later.

The trial is expected to continue through Saturday.

Negro Vote Can't Yet Obtain Full Equality, Council Told

Vernon E. Jordan Jr., director of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, said Saturday at Little Rock that the Negro vote was powerful but not strong enough to gain full equality for Negroes.

He said an education program geared to showing the newly registered voter the relationship between his vote and "bread and butter issues of better housing, employment, schools, paved streets, police protection, recreation and the like" was necessary to aid Negroes.

Jordan, 30, a native of Atlanta, spoke to the 11th annual meeting of the Arkansas Council on Human Relations at the Albert Pike Hotel. More than 100 attended.

He called on the Council, and similar groups, "to move into the hard-core areas of the community" with education programs.

He said that although the Civil Rights Act and the Voting Rights Act have provided many opportunities for Negroes, many Negroes have been unable to take jobs because of inferior education, many Negroes live in slum and ghetto conditions, many Negro children beg for bread and dimes, many Negroes are resigned to their plight and the welfare rolls, and that many men refuse jobs because of the shame involved in signing an "X" on their checks.

Jordan said that in 11 Southern states more than 2.3 million Negroes are registered to vote and that 2 million remained to be registered. He said the Negro vote saved Arkansas, Florida, Tennessee and Virginia for the Democrats in 1964. In Arkansas, he said President Johnson's margin over Barry M. Goldwater was 65,400 votes and the estimated Negro vote in Arkansas was 67,600.

VERNON E. JORDAN JR.

The Council adopted resolutions calling for:

★ Abolition of the freedom-of-choice desegregation plan in schools where one or more schools are rated superior and others inferior.

★ Assignment of Negro teachers on an interim step to all white schools in 1966-67 in proportion to the number of Negores attending and for white teachers to be assigned to predominantly Negro schools in "meaningful numbers."

★ Compliance with Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 in both letter of the law and with the spirit which the funds were designated — to help meet the needs of students from low-income families.

★ A requirement that Housing Authority and Urban Renewal comprehensive plans include detailed information as to how the projects will contribute toward eliminating patterns of racial and economic segregation in housing.

★ White residents who live in racially segregated areas to promote principles of open occupancy and aid in its implementation.

★ Negroes who are seriously seeking housing to consider purchasing or renting in now all-white neighborhoods for the creation of a harmonious, inclusive community for all residents.

★ Aid from moral and religious agencies to dispell the "myth concerning integrated housing" and to prevent panic caused by "misinformation and groundless fears."

Another resolution called on members of the Council to accept "a personal responsibility to get involved in the local level in organizations and committees in the areas of voter registration, economic opportunity, employment, public education and housing."

The Council re-elected Rev. Walter B. Clancy president, Dr. William H. Townsend and William G. Kelly II, vice presidents, Mrs. Frank N. Gordon secretary and Rev. A. M. Roberts Jr. treasurer. All are of Little Rock.

Hays Expected to Enter Arkansas Race Today

Wash. Post 4/14/66

Special to The Washington Post

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., April 13 — Former Congressman Brooks Hays, of Little Rock, is expected to announce Thursday that he will be a candidate for Governor of Arkansas on the Democratic ticket this fall.

Hays would only say late today that he would announce his decision at a press conference Thursday morning.

Hays, now Associate Director of the Community Relations Service, is an avowed moderate on the race issue, a fact that cost him re-election to his House seat in 1958.

He lost, after serving eight terms, to Dr. Dale Alford, also of Little Rock, who ran against Hays as a write-in candidate with the backing of Gov. Orval E. Faubus.

Faubus has said that he will not seek a seventh term as Governor in November and a general scramble for the Democratic nomination is expected.

At least eight and perhaps as many as ten Democrats are expected to file for their Party's primary to see who will oppose Republican Winthrop Rockefeller. Rockefeller, running for the second time, is given a good chance in the race for Governor.

Two Democrats, State Rep. Kenneth S. Sulcer of Osceola, and former State Supreme Court Justice Jim Johnson, have already filed. Johnson is a founder of the segregationist Citizens Council of Little Rock.

Alford, who served two terms in the House, has also hinted that he might enter the gubernatorial race.

Hays, now 67, ran for Governor in 1928 and 1930, losing both times. During the 1958 congressional campaign, Hays took a moderate stand on the Little Rock desegregation crisis when Faubus used National Guardsmen to block school integration. Hays' position cost him the election.

A FIFTH DEMOCRAT IN ARKANSAS RACE

68-Year-Old Businessman Is Seeking Governorship

Special to The New York Times

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., April 22—Raymond Rebsamen of Little Rock, a millionaire industrialist and philanthropist, became a Democratic candidate for Governor today.

The announcement surprised the state. Mr. Rebsamen, 68 years old, had not been mentioned in speculation about the race. He was the fifth Democrat to enter the primary contest. Several others are expected to file before the deadline for filing next Wednesday.

The primary will be held on July 26. If no candidate gets a majority, a runoff will be held Aug. 9. So far, Winthrop Rockefeller is the only announced candidate on the Republican side.

Mr. Rebsamen disclosed late yesterday that he would run. He paid his $1,500 filing fee in cash this morning. Before filing, he resigned by telephone as chairman of the board of directors of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis.

Mr. Rebsamen also is a member of the board of directors of the Arkansas Louisiana Gas Company, which furnishes natural gas for most of the state. He said he would resign shortly from that position.

Linked to Stephens

The board chairman of Arkansas Louisiana Gas is W. R. Stephens, who is known as a king-maker in Arkansas politics and the key man behind Gov. Orval E. Faubus. Mr. Faubus is not seeking re-election to a seventh term.

"I don't believe I would have wanted to oppose Governor Faubus," Mr. Rebsamen declared.

He refused to critize the Governor's administration.

Mr. Rebsamen said he did not intend to spend a large amount of money to be elected. He is widely known, especially in central Arkansas, where he has contributed money and land to many civic projects.

Mr. Rebsamen first became successful with a general insurance agency he established in 1928. He now owns the largest Ford dealership in Arkansas and over the years has moved into banking, hotel, and land development businesses and has been a stockholder in a number of companies.

Others Expected to Run

Two other major candidates are expected to file tomorrow —Sam H. Boyce, 34, prosecutor of Newport, who is a former assistant attorney general and a persistent critic of Mr. Faubus, and Dr. Dale Alford, 50, of Little Rock, an ophthalmologist who was elected to the United States House of Representatives in 1958 as a segregationist. Dr. Alford opposed Mr. Faubus for Governor in 1962 and has since relaxed his segregationist views.

Democrats already in the race are Brooks Hays, 67, of Little Rock, a former representative; Jim Johnson, 41, of Jacksonville, a former associate justice of the Arkansas Supreme Court who ran an unsuccessful segregationist campaign against Mr. Faubus in 1956; State Representative Kennedy S. Sulcer, 40, of Osceola, and Winston G. Chandler, 46, of Little Rock, president of a trailer convoy concern, who opposed Senator J. W. Fulbright, Democrat of Arkansas, in 1962 and lost by a vote of 250,000 to 130,000.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., April 27 — The qualifying deadline for the July 26 primary elections in Arkansas passed at noon today and for the first time in 12 years the Democratic ticket did not include the name of Orval Eugene Faubus.

The six-term Governor, who has dominated the state's politicf longer and more thoroughly than anyone in Arkansas history, kept his pledge of March 21 to step aside this year.

He had made the same pledge in two previous elections and had changed his mind at the last minute

The Governor's retirement inspired the largest numbzr of gubernatorial candidates in years. Eight Democrats and two Republicans are running.

The scramble for office spread to other races. United States Representatives Wilbur D. Mills, James W. Trimble and E. C. Gathings all have opposition. So do Senator John L. McClellan and Attorney General Bruce Bennett.

The opponents of Mr. Mills and Mr. McClellan are political unknowns, but the opponents of the others include some experienced politicians.

6 Seek Harris Seat

Five Democrats and one Republican are seeking the seat vacated by Representative Oren Harris, Democrat, who resigned to accept a Federal judgeship.

The Republicans were forced to hold a statewide primary when Gus McMillan, a Democrat, switched parties and entered the race for the Republican gubernatorial nomination yesterday. He will oppose Winthrop A. Rockefeller, Arkansas Republican National Committeeman and brother of New York's Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller.

6 Seek Harris Seat

Five Democrats and one Republican are seeking the seat vacated by Representative Oren Harris, Democrat, who resigned to accept a Federal judgeship.

The Republicans were forced to hold a statewide primary when Gus McMillan, a Democrat, switched parties and entered the race for the Republican gubernatorial nomination yesterday. He will oppose Winthrop A. Rockefeller, Arkansas Republican National Committeeman and brother of New York's Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller.

Republican officials are skeptical of Mr. McMillan's conversion and are speculating openly that the Democrats put him into the race to cause the Republicans the expense and labor of a primary.

Frank Holt, who resigned Monday as an associate justice of the State Supreme Court to seek the Democratic nomination for Governor, has emerged as a leading contender.

An easy-going man, Mr. Holt had managed to stay relatively free of political entanglements all through the Faubus years. But when he filed for Governor on Monday, he was accused at once of being the handpicked candidate of the "Faubus organization."

Denies Label

He denied it, although he acknowledged having discussed his candidacy with W. R. Stephens, board chairman of the Arkansas Louisiana Gas Company and chief financial pillar of the Faubus administration. Several other major friends of the Faubus administration are lining up with Mr. Holt.

A few Faubus supporters, however, are joining other candidates. Lieut. Gov. Nathan Gordon, a long-time Faubus stalwart, is promoting the candidacy of Brooks Hays, a former United States Representative and Presidential adviser.

Others seeking the Democratic nomination for Governor are former United States Representative Dale Alford who, as a segregationist, defeated Mr. Hayes, a racial moderate, for Congress in 1958; Jim Johnson, a former State Supreme Court justice once known as a segregationist firebrand but now, along with Mr. Alford, trying to change that image, and Sam Boyce, an outspoken critic of Mr. Faubus and, at 34, the youngest man in the race.

Also seeking the nomination are Raymond Rebsamen, a Littl Rock millionaire and civic leader; Kenneth Sulcer, a state legislator from the Mississippi River Delta, and Winston Chandler, a right-wing conservative who unsuccessfully opposed Senator J. W. Fulbright in 1962.

DEMOCRATS BEGIN ARKANSAS BATTLE

Arkansas

Tired Political Machine and No Heir Left by Faubus

By ROY REED

Special to The New York Times

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., April 28 — The contenders to succeed Orval E. Faubus as Governor, now that he is definitely out of the race this year, are feverishly courting his old supporters behind the scenes.

Meetings and quiet talks are being held all over the state to attract the key men in the banks, utilities, industries, construction companies, plantations, labor unions and courthouses.

Some Faubus men were committed to new candidates even before the ticket for the July 26 primary elections closed here yesterday. There is a feeling, however, that many are waiting to see how the eight Democratic and two Republican contenders shape up before taking a stand.

Frank Holt, an associate justice of the State Supreme Court who resigned to run for the Democratic nomination for Governor, is said to be the leading contender for the support of the Faubus organization, or what is left of it.

The organization is splintering. Before the primary deadline closed, two Faubus stalwarts, Lieut. Gov. Nathan Gordon and Sheriff Marlin Hawkins of Conway County, had gone to work for the candidacy of former United States Representative Brooks Hays, a racial moderate who was an adviser to Presidents Kennedy and Johnson.

Alford Running Again

Carl Adams, a former welfare commissioner for Mr. Faubus, is campaigning for former United States Representative Dale Alford, a one-time segregationist who defeated Mr. Hays for Congress in 1958 and in turn was defeated by Mr. Faubus when he tried for the Governor's office in 1962.

Just how much of the Faubus organization will be left to inherit is not certain. There are indications that the machine of the 56-year-old Ozarks Populist has abou worn out durng the 12 years he has been Governor.

Three of his most trusted advisers had serious heart attacks during the last year.

Several of his legislative leaders have died or are retiring because of poor health. Others are threatened with expulsion because of court-ordered reapportionment of the rural-dominated Legislature.

Mr. Faubus is at odds with his most important agency, the Highway Commission, because of a scandal over several hundred thousand dollars worth of secret pay raises, placed on the payroll after office hours one night, for selected employes of the Highway Department. The raises were granted with the Governor's knowledge but apparently without the knowledge of the commission.

Because of a 12-year accumulation of political problems, the Governor is enjoying his worst relations ever with the state's Congressional delegation, with local politicians in various sections and even with certain of his own department heads in state government. He is rumored as a possible candidate against Senator J. W. Fulbright in 1968, and he was half expected to run against Senator John L. McClellan this year.

The race issue, which catapulted Mr. Faubus to fame and a third term after the Little Rock desegregation crisis of 1957, has subsided in Arkansas and is not expected to be a major concern in the elections this year.

Besides a general fatigue over the question, a rising Negro voter registration has helped engender moderation. Negro registration is estimated to have risen from 80,000 to 100,000 during the last year, and it will go higher before the election.

Mayor Ben Butler of Osceola, a crusty Faubus man from the Mississippi River Delta—and a Holt backer this year—remarked on the new moderation in a telephone interview.

"A man is a damn fool," he said, "if he thinks he can be in politics now and not pay any attention to them [the Negroes]. There's gonna be 100,000 of them vote this year."

It has been widely assumed that Winthrop Rockefeller, the leading Republican candidate, who ran a strong race against Mr. Faubus in 1964, would get most of the Negro vote again this year. That is not necessarily true.

Mr. Rockefeller has had little success in welding an organizational following among Negroes during the last two years. With most of his possible Democratic opponents untainted by racism, he no longer can take the Negro vote for granted.

Taxpayers' Math Gives Revenue Men Headache

CHICAGO (AP)—Taxpayers' math is giving Internal Revenue men an outsized headache.

More than 3.9 million errors in "tax arithmetic" turned up in a check of 62.9 million individual income tax returns for 1965. Commerce Clearing House says this is 1.3 million more errors than the previous year.

Most of the errors were in favor of the taxpayer.

Verification resulted in the collection of an extra $194-million in taxes, an increase of more than $28.5-million from the previous year.

Increases averaging $98 were asked from more than 1.9 million taxpayers.

Hall Boundaries To Stay the Same; Protests Heard

By DOUG SMITH
Of the Gazette Staff

After more than an hour of lively discussion Friday, the Little Rock School Board Friday let the new Hall High School attendance boundaries stand.

An outspoken group of parents whose children will be required to attend Central High School this fall because of the boundaries adopted by the Board on May 9 packed the meeting room to ask that their children be allowed to attend Hall.

Board member Warren K. Bass, who said he had voted against the boundaries, moved that their request be granted, but his motion died for lack of a second.

About 60 children who will enter the tenth grade this fall will be required to attend Central because the Board set West Markham Street as the southern boundary for attendance at Hall. The Board said the boundary was necessary because Hall was overcrowded.

Dr. Paul N. Means of 7509 Choctaw Road said some of the children in the group had attended six schools in nine years. This is a traumatic experience for them, he contended. He said some of the students lived within a mile of Hall and from three to six miles from Central and that this would create a transportation problem.

Dr. Means said the parents wanted the School Board to put up temporary classrooms at Hall for a year. The proposed new high school at John Barrow Road and West Twenty-seventh Street is to be completed in a year and the Board says it will relieve the overcrowded conditions at Hall.

Herbert M. Chafin of 311 Cherokee Circle said he had two children who had graduated from Hall, one who will be a senior there next year and another who will enter the tenth grade next fall and refused to attend Central.

Chafin said there was a keen rivalry between the two schools and that for Hall students, Central was the great nemesis. "I'd rather she'd be assigned to Fort Smith or Pine Bluff," he said. He said that when his daughter told him she wouldn't attend Central, he told her, "Well, you can go to Metropolitan and be a cosmetologist."

Billy B. Bowe of 22 Flag Road said the Board had created a

Coates said if there was one thing Little Rock schools weren't deficient in, it was committees. He said he valued the School Board's independence from the various committees that offer advice and thought it would be a mistake to give one official status. He said that when his daughter told him she wouldn't attend Central, he told her, "Well, you can go to Metropolitan and be a cosmetologist."

Billy B. Bowe of 22 Flag Road said the Board had created a gerrymander when it set the boundaries. He said two Board members who lived in the Hall district lived farther from Hall than the objecting parents did. Temporary classrooms wouldn't be objectionable for special classes, he said.

Board member Dr. J. A. Harrell Jr. said the problem at Hall wasn't classroom space but laboratory space, cafeteria space and hall space. He said students attending Hall while it was overcrowded were getting a second-rate education.

David Feltus of 7502 Choctaw Road told the Board, "If there's ever been discrimination in Mississippi, it's nothing like what we're getting here."

After some more of that, Bass offered another motion, this one to let the administrative staff assign students to Hall. That, too, failed to get a second and it set off a debate between Board Member Russell H. Matson Jr. and a member of the parents' group who wanted to know why the Board wouldn't trust the administrative staff's judgment. Matson said the Board members were elected to make controversial decisions and to act as a buffer between the staff and the school patrons. Board member James M. Coates Jr. told the group that the Board had considered six alternatives to relieve the overcrowding at Hall and that all of them were controversial.

"If we'd adopted any of the others, there'd be just as many people down here," he said. W. C. McDonald, chairman of the Board, agreed and asked for the third time if there was a second to Bass' first motion. There wasn't.

"We're not here as a group of irate property owners," Dr. Means told the Board at the start of the meeting. They looked irate when they left.

Board Votes to Hire Advisory Specialist

The Board voted to hire Dr. H. Hardy Perritt, chairman of the Division of Humanities and professor of English at Miles College at Birmingham, Ala., as an advisory specialist on human relations on the recommendation of School Superintendent Floyd Parsons. The School District has received a $32,314 grant from the Office of Education to set up the position.

Miles is a Negro college, but Perritt is white. He is 48, a native of Wesson, Miss., and received a bachelor's degree in history and English and a master's degree in speech and political science from Louisiana State University. He received his doctor's degree in speech and political science from the University of Florida. Parsons said Perritt would report August 1.

The Board voted to talk with a desegregation survey team from the University of Oregon about making a survey of Little Rock schools. The team, headed several similar surveys, Parsons said. The Board said it would invite a member of the team to Little Rock for an interview.

The last item of the meeting was brought up by McDonald. He said he favored setting up a citizens advsory committee as an official body. ARKANSAS RUNOFF TESTS PRESIDENT

Democrats Pick Candidate for Governor Tuesday

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 6 (AP)—Arkansas takes a second step Tuesday toward selecting a successor to Gov. Orval E. Faubus in a Democratic primary runoff that one candidate calls a test of President Johnson's political strength.

Jim Johnson, an outspoken critic of the National Administration led the ticket in the July 26 preferential primary with 106,000 votes. He called it support for his attacks on "Federal authoritarianism."

"This has put a crack in Lyndon Johnson's armor on invincicility that will be seen around the world," Mr. Johnson proclaimed.

His runoff opponent is Frank Holt, a career politician who says the election of Mr. Johnson might endanger Arkansas' extensive Federal aid programs.

A co-feature of the governorship runoff is a race between two young lawyers, David Pryor of Camden and Richard Arnold of Texarkana, for the Fourth District Congressional seat nomination.

Mr. Pryor, 31 years old, led the five-man ticket July 26, campaigning largely on his record as a state legislator for six years.

Must Face Rockefeller

Mr. Arnold is a newcomer to politics. The post was vacated in February by the resignation of Oren Harris, who became a Federal judge. The winner faces Republican opposition.

The winner of the Johnson-Holt contest must face Winthrop Rockefeller and a revitalized Republican party in November. The Democratic nomination no longer amounts to victory in this once "safe" Democratic state.

A major issue in the Governor's race was whether Mr. Holt was the Faubus administration candidate and would keep it on power, even though Mr. Faubus is retiring after 12 years in office.

Mr. Holt said he was a "free and unfettered" candidate.

Mr. Faubus declined publicly to back any candidate, but Mr. Johnson and the five eliminated in the first primary charged that Mr. Holt had the Governor's tacit support.

Segregation was not an issue, although Mr. Johnson vaulted to state-level politics as a spokesman for segregationists during racial troubles of the nineteen-fifties, a fact he recalled to voters' minds several times.

They Agree on Some Issues

Mr. Holt is regarded as a moderate on civil rights but he has refused to say where he stands on the question.

Both candidates promised to enforce civil rights laws.

Both resigned from the state Supreme Court to make the race.

Both have extensive programs for developing the state.

There the similarities end.

Mr. Johnson's career has been marked by controversy, spectacular success and sharp setbacks. He upset an incumbent Senator for a state legislative position, lost in a previous race for Governor, and easily won a Supreme Court seat.

Mr. Holt, who has never opposed an incumbent, has never lost an election. He has moved steadily through the ranks, from prosecutor to attorney general to state Supreme Court justice.

Johnson's attacks on the National Administration are not new. He supported state Democrats in 1964, but threw his support to the Republican Presidential candidate, Barry Goldwater.

In this campaign he has said several times that the only good Lyndon Johnson is doing in the President's chair "is keeping Hubert Humphrey out of it."

Fear and Resentment Tied to Johnson's Victory

ARKANSAS

By ROY REED

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 10 — The nomination of Jim Johnson, a hard-core segregationist, as the Democratic candidate for Governor of Arkansas yesterday was interpreted today by political observers as a clear expression of fear and resentment among white voters.

The Johnson victory had many roots. But mainly it was regarded as a protest asainst the domestic policies of President Johnson and the national Democratic party, the civil rights movement and racial violence.

Some voters were also believed to be expressing their dissatisfaction with the political organization headed for 12 years by retiring Gov. Orval Faubus.

Mr. Johnson, 41 years old, defeated J. Frank Holt, 55, a racial moderate supported by liberals and many of the old Faubus people, by 210,646 to 195,660, with all precincts unofficially reported.

Mr. Johnson's nomination is believed certain to encourage Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama in his plan to seek the Presidency again in 1968 on a campaign of opposition to the National Democratic Party.

Mr. Johnson is a friend and admirer of Governor Wallace. He campaigned across the South for Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona in the 1964 Presidential race.

The Johnson victory presents a challenge to the revived Republican party in Arkansas in its attempt to capture the Governor's office at the November general election.

Challenge to Rockefeller

It is believed that Winthrop Rockefeller, the wealthy, racially moderate Republican candidate, will be hard put to match Mr. Johnson's vivid oratory and white supremacist appeal.

The Republicans quietly aided the Johnson campaign by urging Negroes and liberals to stay away from the polls, or to vote for Mr. Johnson. They theorized that Mr. Johnson would be easier to defeat than Mr. Holt.

Mr. Johnson skillfully exploited whites' fears of Negro unrest by assuring the voters that as Governor he would deal firmly with street violence and agitation.

He said that the Federal Government was abetting Negro unrest through civil rights legislation and the guidelines for speeding desegregation of schools and hospitals.

He denounced the guidelines vigorously, putting a finger on an issue that disturbs whites across the South this year.

Mr. Johnson ignored his opponents' charge that his elec-

He denounced the guidelines vigorously, putting a finger on an issue that disturbs whites across the South this year.

Mr. Johnson ignored his opponents' charge that his election, far from preventing violence, would thrust the state into turmoil, "setting class against class and race against race."

Racist Campaign in '56

Mr. Johnson's first campaign for Governor, in 1956, when he unsuccessfully opposed Mr. Faubus, was more openly racist. The white Citizens Council, which he had helped to found in Arkansas, was in full flower. Many whites at the time still hoped that they could avoid integration. Since then, token integration has been accepted in most of Arkansas.

Mr. Johnson's victory was apparently more than racial backlash. It also appeared to be a protest against strange, sophisticated political methods, "socialism," higher taxes, wastful spending, bureaucracy, even secularism.

His main theme was a return to the old values. Arkansans, he said, are courageous, stable, friendly and energetic. Denouncing what he called waste in both state and Federal programs, he appealed to the rural instinct for thrift. He pledged never to raise taxes and said his first act as Governor would be to cut some of them.

He also denounced the Supreme Court's decision that a public school could not require daily prayers.

Mr. Johnson's public style is similar to that of a traveling Fundamentalist preacher. His language is Biblical and his drawling voice, tremulous at the high notes, evokes in an audience believable demonic images, so that "socialism and usurpers in Washington" becomes a clear and present danger.

Prayer Before Rally

He began one small rally in southern Arkansas by saying, "Let's kneel and have a word of prayer," whereupon 75 voters dropped to their knees and prayed.

His campaign also offered the excitement of seeming conspiracy. He told the voters that he had reliable information that President Johnson and Vice President Humphrey had personally sent orders, through the Faubus machine, to "defeat Jim Johnson at all costs."

Mr. Johnson was almost as hard on "the machine," meaning the Faubus organization, as he was on President Johnson, the Supreme Court and what he describes as "that gang of parasites in Washington."

He said the "machine" had become entrenched and was making its friends wealthy.

Two other "machine" candidates were defeated along with Mr. Holt.

Claude Carpenter, a former aide to Mr. Faubus, was defeated by James H. Pilkinton, City Attorney of Hope, for the Lieutenant Governor's nomination.

Attorney General Bruce Bennett lost his bid for a fifth term nomination to Joe Purcell, a former municipal judge at Benton, in spite of quiet campaign help from Faubus workers.

James Douglas Johnson

~~ARKANSAS~~

Special to The New York Times

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 10—At the barbecues and rallies when all the candidates for the Democratic nomination for Governor would speak, the crowds would mill around and chat and sip their drinks. Then James Douglas Johnson would start to talk and the crowd would hush and listen. His language was Biblical, his drawling voice compelling, his vocal images vivid. "When I look on the national scene," he shrilled to one audience, "and I see drunk men at the head of the Government, and I see high-placed preachers on the President's staff dancing vulgar dances until 3 o'clock in the morning while our boys are fighting and dying in the jungles of Vietnam, I cringe, I tell you. If that's the Great Society, Jim Johnson wants no part of it."

Man in the News

A majority of Arkansas Democrats must have agreed. They chose Mr. Johnson yesterday as their candidate for Governor, the high point so far of a political career that began quietly but started to catch fire after the United States Supreme Court decision in 1954 outlawing school segregation.

Mr. Johnson, until then an undistinguished state senator, began to appear in the news as a spokesman for white supremacy. He became director of the White Citizens Council. In 1956 he ran a bitter campaign against Gov. Orval E. Faubus. He said Mr. Faubus was "pussyfooting" on the racial question and "leading Arkansas squarely down the road to racial integration."

For Mr. Johnson, the racial question was simple. He was born and brought up in the Ku Klux Klan territory in the southeast Arkansas pine woods and he is, according to the people who watch Arkansas politics, a segregationist "true believer."

A Change Was Noticed

This year, the newsmen who followed his campaign found a change in the genial nature he used to show in private. This year he appeared to be grouchy toward the press and he seemed disturbingly intense.

When he inveighed against the "Socialists and usurpers in Washington," the image became clear and real to his audience and he appeared to be deeply convinced of its truth himself.

One thing that did not change was his persistent public reference to religion. He told the voters often that he was close to God. His wife Virginia, who campaigned with him, told a television audience last week that her husband prayed each night before retiring.

He was born Aug. 20, 1924, in Crossett. As a boy, he worked in his family's general store there. He earned his law degree at Cumberland University, Lebanon, Tenn. During World War II, he served in the Marines. In 1947, he married the former Virginia Morris of El Paso, Ark. They are the parents of three sons, Mark Douglas and twins, John David and Joseph Daniel.

Associated Press

A racial true believer

In 1950, Mr. Johnson was elcted to the State Senate from Crossett.

He ran for attorney general in 1954 and was beaten. He ran for Governor in 1956 and was beaten. In 1958, he ran for a seat on the state Supreme Court and won.

The Johnson performance on the bench was mixed. He took part in a decision voiding convictions of some Negro sit-in demonstrators—a fact he pointed to when he was accused this year of racial prejudice. But he found himself unable to "bite my tongue" and, while continuing as a judge, spoke out often on public issues. In 1964, he toured the South for the Republican Presidential candidate, Barry Goldwater.

If the Johnson oratory is strident, the Johnson appearance is not. He is 5 feet 9 inches tall, slightly built, well tanned, his hair graying.

Patches of Humor

His vocabulary is good and he is a remarkably effective speaker. He paces his speeches well, interspersing his denunciation of Big Government in Washington with patches of humor.

"I'm convinced that the greatest service Lyndon Johnson is performing for the people of this country is the fact that his sitting in the Hubert Humphrey out of it," he told one appreciative audience.

In his successful campaign this year, Mr. Johnson did not use a colorful fund-raising technique he had used in 1956. He would put a metal bucket then at the front of the platform and, as in some small country churches, the audience would file by and drop in their contributions.

But the religious orientation remained in the language. "Don't you make me fight your battle alone," he would implore. "Don't you make me carry this cross alone. And when this fight is over, let's be able to emulate Paul who said, 'I have fought a good fight. I have finished the course. I have kept the faith.'"

Parsons Says Coleman's Criticism Is That of an Uninformed Newcomer

Ed. - Ark. Gazette

By BILL LEWIS
Of the Gazette Staff

Superintendent Floyd W. Parsons personally delivered his reply Thursday to an attack on the school administration Wednesday by Elijah Coleman, acting director of the Arkansas Council on Human Relations.

Parsons told Coleman in a meeting that was admirable but frank that he had delivered his reply in person because I want to show you the courtesy of handing you a copy before showing it to the press." Coleman had sent his statement to the Gazette but sent none to Parsons.

In it, Coleman renewed the Council's offer to serve as an advisory group to the School Board on desegregation matters, charged the administration with "dishonest representations" and cited a couple of examples of what he considered the school administration's bad faith in carrying out desegregation or in repair of a Negro school cafeteria.

Parsons noted in his written three-page reply that Coleman was a new resident of Little Rock and "evidently felt compelled to attack something or somebody in order to let our citizens know he was here."

The superintendent noted that while the Council pleads for the School Board to use its resources as consultants, "the press is filled with reports of strife, misunderstanding and disunity in purpose among the wide variety of organizations interested in the civil rights movement" and to select the Council for this purpose would be "parallel to selecting one church group or one denomination as consultants to the school system."

Parsons conceded that, as charged, the dual system had not been "disestablished" but said progress toward it is "almost unbelievable" and has been cited nationally.

"We will be glad when this problem is solved once and for all," he said. "Then the time-consuming and energy-consuming sparring with community groups can be replaced by productive efforts to build a more effective program of education for all children."

Referring to Coleman's questioning of the Board's employment of consultants to make a survey on the ground that local people aren't aware of specific problems, Parsons asked: "Where has Mr. Coleman been during the past few years? The problem has been thoroughly and completely identified. We are now in the process of seeking solutions to the problem, and the team of professional educators will study housing patterns, locations of existing buildings, proposed school sites, financial requirements, sociological impingements and educational involvements in creating a unitary system of education for our community."

had lost its 'A' rating. We proceeded immediately to make corrections required to restore the rating. The necessary corrective measures were made, the rating of the cafeteria restored, and we have received no notification that this cafeteria fails to meet the required standards."

Then he got to the charge of "dishonesty" by the school administration.

"I will not say that the many false and erroneous statements made in his press release were based upon a dishonest appraisal of the Little Rock Public Schools," Parsons' statement said. "I will, however, state that his charges were based upon lack of information, misinformation and extremely poor judgment." He said Coleman has held his position too briefly to make a full public appraisal of the school operations.

Parsons concluded, "I am convinced that the two of us are striving for the same ultimate goal but derogatory and false charges flagrantly made to the general public may serve to impede rather than accelerate solutions to the problem."

Parsons Illustrates School's Progress

Parsons' statement cited facts illustrating progress the school district has made toward desegregation since 1961. At that time, he said, 14 Negro students were enrolled in formerly white schools; now there are 1,360 Negroes in schools formerly identified as white. Five years ago, he said, all Negroes were taught by Negro teachers and all white students by white teachers; this year, more than 4,000 students are being taught by teachers of another race. Athletic competition five years ago was segregated; this year it is open on a non-racial basis; since 1961, all faculty meetings and in-service programs have ben totally desegregated; freedom of choice has been substituted by pupil placement; and the number of children experiencing integrated education has increased from a handful to almost 15,000 this year. There are 24,103 students enrolled in the public schools this year.

In his brief conversation with Coleman, which was attended by a newsman, Parsons invited Coleman to visit the School Board offices and to discuss problems with school officials. He told Coleman he did not think Coleman fully understood the problems "when you made this premature release" and said he was delivering his to Coleman in person to "show you the courtesy you didn't show me."

9-16-62

Coleman said his objective was to "keep the general public informed" and Parsons replied that he agreed this was needed and while communication is never as good as it should be, "I think the public here is reasonably well informed."

Parsons told Coleman he thought the two of them "can communicate with each other much more effectively than we can communicate through the press.

"We are working for the same goals," he said. "If we start lambasting each other through the press, it could serve to impede progress toward a solution rather than accelerate it, and we are tremendously interested in accelerating the progress within the framework in which we are operating."

Coleman suggested a Negro deputy superintendent might be appointed. Parsons said this would necessitate displacement of well-qualified people already on the staff and that advancements should be made in those other areas where displacement would not be necessary.

existing buildings, proposed school sites, financial requirements, sociological impingements and educational involvements in creating a unitary system of education for our community."

Repair Work Criticized

Coleman had criticized repair of temporary structures at Carver Elementary School because they were late and were made only after classes had begun. Said Parsons: "When general repairs and refurbishing have been accomplished for a classroom or a building and then vandals break all the glasses, destroy the window frames and spread paint and debris over the classrooms, we proceed to repair the damages within time schedules permitted by the work load of the Maintenance Department. The classrooms in question at Carver School were completely repainted prior to the time that the vandals struck. Much of the work previously done had to be redone."

Coleman also had criticized operation of the Carver cafeteria, and Parsons said this was one question he did not understand.

"Last year we were notified that this particular cafeteria

School Board Member Implies Criticism Of Parson's Action

ARKANSAS

A member of the Little Rock School Board issued a statement Saturday implying criticism of Superintendent Floyd W. Parsons for his reaction to the statement issued by Elijah Coleman, acting director of the Arkansas Council on Human Relations.

Without naming Parsons, Mrs. Jean Gordon expressed the hope that "we school officials can be open enough to sit down, discuss and act upon these problems with people who have shown their concern for children by pointing out these problems."

To imply, she continued, "that citizens making complaints to us do not have the authority to do so belies our stated policy that we welcome interest on the part of any citizen."

Coleman's statement, issued to the Gazette, was critical of the administration's desegregation progress and accused it of "dishonest representations."

Parsons, who delivered his reply to Coleman in person, said that as a new resident of Little Rock, Coleman "evidently felt compelled to attack something or somebody in order to let our citizens know he was here."

Mrs. Gordon said that one of the problems cited by Coleman — a situation at Carver-Pfeifer School — had been brought to the attention of school authorities through "regular methods of appeal" but that they had been "to no avail before Mr. Coleman took his case to the press."

Different Viewpoints Called Unfortunate

Mrs. Gordon called the exchange of "different viewpoints" by Parsons and Coleman "an unfortunate occurrence."

"Since I happen to be on the Board of both organizations [the School Board and the Arkansas Council on Human Relations] I feel that I have some understanding of each viewpoint. As a School Board member, I think it is very important that these differing points of view be reconciled."

She said it was the School Board's stated policy "that we welcome and need interest and help from our citizens in the form of suggestions and criticism. Two of our biggest tasks as school directors are doing away with our dual school system and equalizing educational opportunities by enriching school programs for deprived children."

She said she was proud of the progress toward the goals of abolishing the dual system and of creating a single quality system "but I feel we must be realistic about the problems still to be solved."

Parsons emphasized in his brief conversation with Coleman that he would welcome Coleman to his office to discuss problems at any time but criticized him for issuing the statement to the press without providing him a copy first. His prepared reply, however, was more sharply worded, calling many of Coleman's statements "false and erroneous" and based on "lack of information, misinformation and extremely poor judgment."

In the matter of school desegregation, Mrs. Gordon said it seemed essential to her "that we co-operate with, in particular, the bi-racial committee which has been set up by a broadly representative group of Little Rock people as well as organizations like the Arkansas Council on Human Relations" and said the Board already had agreed, by a resolution adopted in April, to do so.

Coleman had renewed the offer of the Council to serve as an advisory group to the School Board on desegregation issues. Parsons said the Board could not single out any one group to the exclusion of others.

GOVERNOR'S CHAIR

Arkansas Foes Ready for Race

By JOHN R. STARR

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 15 (AP)—The wraps are about to come off in the Arkansas governor's race between Democrat Jim Johnson and Republican Winthrop Rockefeller after two months of nothing more than some gentle sparring.

The lull has been Johnson's doing. Rockefeller came out ready to fight just after Johnson won a bitter Democratic runoff primary with less than 52 per cent of the vote Aug. 9.

But, while Rockefeller paraded across the state, Johnson stayed in his headquarters and worked at patching up the Democratic party organization, split by the primary campaign.

Fearful of wearing himself out while his opponent was in hiding, Rockefeller quickly cut back his schedule.

Success in uniting the party behind him is critical to Johnson. Already some top Democrats have defected. Most are reported ready to.

Planter R. E. L. Wilson of Wilson and manufacturer Dansby Council of Fort Smith head an aggressive Democrats for Rockefeller organization. Rockefeller's finance chairman is Jack Pickens, a wealthy Little Rock contractor who has been close to several Democratic administrations.

AN EARLY FEAR among voters that election of Johnson might precipitate racial demonstrations and violence appears to be diminishing. Johnson has refused to discuss the race issue, except to admit that he is a segregationist.

Rockefeller has continued to call Johnson a radical on the race issue, as did Johnson's opponents for the Democratic nomination.

Fear of Johnson's position on the race issue is high in the minds of voters, said Rockefeller in a recent interview. He said Johnson probably would prefer that the topic be dropped, and added, "If I had his record, I wouldn't want to talk about it either."

Johnson has made it clear that he will try to make this a "poor boy vs. rich man" race such as Gov. Orval Faubus ran successfully against Rockefeller two years ago.

Faubus, retiring after six two-year terms, is not working openly for Johnson, although he has said he would rather see a Democrat win than a Republican.

HOUSTON TO AVOID RIGHTS LEGAL AID

~~HOUSTON~~ TEXAS

Agency Reacts to Criticism in School Integration Case

9/20/66

By FRED P. GRAHAM

Special to The New York Times

HOUSTON, Sept. 19—The director of the Office of Economic Opportunity's legal aid agency here, stung by criticism of its involvement in a school desegregation case, said today that the agency would avoid future civil rights cases.

Sam D. Johnson, director of the Houston Legal Foundation, which received a $704,000 grant this year for legal aid to the poor, announced last Friday that the foundation would drop the desegration case.

The foundation's position could make it a test case as to the obligation of a federally subsidized legal aid unit to represent poor Negroes in civil rights litigation.

Mr. Johnson said in an interview that he knew of no poverty office regulation that required local agencies to undertake civil rights cases. He said the foundation would not take such cases in the future unless it was instructed to do so by its 21-member board of trustees.

Letter to the Board

The controversy arose last week after a foundation lawyer had written a letter to the school board on behalf of Mrs. Melvyn Davis, a 39-year-old Negro barber, who wished to enroll her son Darrell in a still segregated class of a partly integrated school.

School authorities had refused to admit Darrell to the ninth grade of the school, citing a court-approved plan for a gradual desegregation.

All grades but the ninth had been integrated under the plan. The ninth grade will be desegregated next year.

The letter explained that the plan would require Darrell to attend an all-Negro school twice as far from his home as the integrated school. It cited a recent Supreme Court ruling that Negro children in such situations must be admitted to the integrated school, despite a gradual plan.

This action generated heavy behind-the-scenes pressure from conservative elements, plus open opposition from a new lawyers' organization that said the foundation was draining paying clients away from private practitioners.

In a letter to the foundation, the Texas Society of Practicing Lawyers, Inc., charged that Mrs. Davis was not indigent because her divorced husband could have been required to contribute to their son's legal expenses.

Mr. Johnson agreed and withdrew the foundation from the case.

He said that a poverty office agency could not legally duplicate a function being performed by another Federal department and contended that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 had made the Justice Department the proper agency to handle school desegregation suits.

J. Charles Whitfield Jr., president of the Practicing Lawyers Society, said Mrs. Davis's suit was "a test case by the civil rights groups to see if they can get a free ride off the Federal Government."

Mr. Whitfield, a State Representative with a reputation as a liberal who is a member of one of the few racially integrated law firms in the nation, said the foundation should handle civil rights cases for truly indigent clients.

housing desegregation strikes a raw nerve.

W. J. (Dukes) Duford, the friendly ex-football coach now serving as Commissioner of the St. Louis Council on Human Relations, insists there is no outstanding racial difficulty. But he told a visitor:

"We'd have problems if outside groups came in here and demonstrated, even if they were peaceful demonstrations. A lot of people would get stirred up."

St. Louis, a mid-American city of 100,000 persons, is typical of the nation's metropolitan centers. Its boundaries have been frozen since 1876, and a massive flight to the suburbs has left the usual residue of urban vexations.

The bustling downtown business section is dominated by a 630-foot stainless steel arch conceived by Eero Saarinen, the architect. Glinting in the sun, the graceful structure is a symbolic gateway to the West.

Instead, whites appear more prone to draw on a considerable reservoir of prejudice against Negroes, to voice antagonisms that have lain there, just under the surface, all along.

The comments of whites are marked by a sputtering irritation over demonstrations, the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., black power, riots in other cities and other signs of Negro unrest.

They speak bitterly about welfare costs, complaining that most of the money goes to Negroes. They express resignation over having Negroes as fellow employes. There is muted anxiety about the busing of Negro children to outlying schools.

But in both blue-collar and middle-class sections, housing seems uppermost in virtually every mind. One knowledgeable authority asserted:

"There isn't a white neighborhood anywhere in St. Louis that you can have a colored family move in without it falling apart at the seams."

"Sometimes they'd even sort of bow and say, "Good evening, ma'am.' But you know what they'll do now? Why, they'll bump you right off the sidewalks."

He said he had worked brief as a "turn-on, light-up" man f the local gas company a often had called at homes Negro slum areas. It made hi sick, he said. The rats we sometimes terrible.

ARKANSAN TERMS RIGHTS PANEL SOFT

ARKANSAS

Adviser Says U.S. Agency Diluted Recommendations

12/4/66

Special to The New York Times

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 3 —The chairman of the Arkansas advisory committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights denounced the parent commission this week.

Ted Lamb, a Little Rock advertising executive charged that the commission had diluted a report submitted by his advisory committee before it was published. Mr. Lamb disavowed the report.

"They have taken our clear and precise language and reduced it to a hodgepodge of bureaucratic mumbo jumbo to avoid recommending the sanctions of the Civil Rights Act," Mr. Lamb said. "I charge the members of the Civil Rights Commission staff and the people who wrote this report with having no stomach for imposing the sanctions of the Civil Rights Act."

Mr. Lamb, 39 years old, was a member of the Little Rock school board from 1958 to 1964 and withstood an attempt by segregationists, supported by Gov. Orval E. Faubus, to oust him in a recall election in 1959.

The advisory committee's report grew out of hearings it conducted in April in Eastern Arkansas. Mr. Lamb disclosed Thursday that the committee had recommended the following:

That Federal funds be withheld from seven school districts for failing to comply with Federal desegregation guidelines;; that all Government contracts with a rubber manufacturing plant at West Helena be suspended; and that Federal poll watchers be sent to Eastern Arkansas for the elections this year.

None of the recommendations was in the final report, Mr. Lamb said.

Discrimination, Mr. Lamb asserted, is built into a union contract with the Mohawk Rubber Company and into company policies on the hiring of women. The committee recommended that Federal contracts with the company be suspended until it stopped the practices.

The request for poll watchers was the result of charges of election fraud made by the Student Nonviolent Coordinating committee and the Election research Council, a private organization created in 1964 as a watchdog over elections.

The Election Research Council, which is headed by John H. Haley, a Little Rock lawyer, has received much of its financial support from Winthrop Rockefeller, the Republican Governor-elect of Arkansas.

Commission's Version

The Civil Rights Commission's version of the recommendations said that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and the office of Federal Contract Compliance should review the policies of employers in four counties, that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission should investigate charges of discrimination in hiring, and that the United States Office of Education should study the school districts' compliance with Federal desegregation guidelines more frequently and more intensively.

As for the election charges, the commission's version said that a voter education program should be started by the commission and that the staff should investigate allegations of racial discrimination in voting.

The Civil Rights Commission had the report revised five or six times, Mr. Lamb said. "They beat us down."

The commission has not acted on the report.

They were inserted after a bullet shattered the animal's bone.

FAUBUS MAY RUN FOR A 7TH TERM

Observers Read Intention in Appointments of Negroes

Special to The New York Times

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 4 —Some political observers here feel that Gov. Orval E. Faubus has decided not to keep his campaign promise of a year ago to give up the Governor's office in 1966.

Mr. Faubus is keeping his plans to himself, but evidence is mounting that he will seek a seventh term. One indication has been his intentness lately on making his peace with the Negro voters, a growing force in Arkansas politics.

The Negor vote may be strategic if the Governor's Republican opponent is Winthrop Rockefeller, a racial moderate, next November as it was last year. It could come in handy, too, if the growing anti-Faubus elements in the Democratic party finally find a strong opponent for the summer primaries.

Mr. Faubus was a racial moderate until the crisis at Little Rock in 1957, when he resisted court-ordered school integration. He then became a symbol of Southern resistance.

Lately, however, Mr. Faubus's remarks about integration have been temperate. A "Democrats-all-the-way" campaign, aided by President Johnson's popularity, delivered him large numbers of Negro voters in his race against Mr. Rockefeller in 1964.

Ten days ago, he announced that he was hiring more Negroes for state jobs and that he intended to put them on state boards and commissions. Before, they had served only on boards of Negro institutions.

Mr. Faubus followed this up last week by appointing George Henry, the director of the Urban League at Little Rock, to the State Manpower Development Council.

Mr. Rockefeller, Governor Rockefeller's brother, is co-chairman of the South-wide Advisory Committee for the league.

Without Mr. Johnson on the ticket next year, Mr. Faubus's task will be harder. A few Negro leaders are talking in terms of a Negro registration of between 150,000 and 200,000 next year and a bloc that size for Mr. Rockefeller would be hard to overcome.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 4 —The American Friends Service Committee has announced plans to send young American volunteers to Vietnam to work with Vietnamese youth in programs of service in rural villages and hamlets.

The volunteers will work with the Voluntary Youth Association of Vietnam or a similar group. The association was established by young Vietnamese, some of whom had been part of Quaker work camps and seminars in Japan.

It is noteworthy, the committee said, that these young people work in border villages without being disturbed by the Vietcong or South Vietnamese.

Mr. Faubus is keeping his plans to himself, but evidence is mounting that he will seek a seventh term. One indication has been his intentness lately on making his peace with the Negro voters, a growing force in Arkansas politics.

The Negor vote may be strategic if the Governor's Republican opponent is Winthrop Rockefeller, a racial moderate, next November as it was last year. It could come in handy, too, if the growing anti-Faubus elements in the Democratic party finally find a strong opponent for the summer primaries.

Mr. Faubus was a racial moderate until the crisis at Little Rock in 1957, when he resisted court-ordered school integration. He then became a symbol of Southern resistance.

Lately, however, Mr. Faubus's remarks about integration have been temperate. A "Democrats-all-the-way" campaign, aided by President Johnson's popularity, delivered him large numbers of Negro voters in his race against Mr. Rockefeller in 1964.

Ten days ago, he announced that he was hiring more Negroes for state jobs and that he intended to put them on state boards and commissions. Before, they had served only on boards of Negro institutions.

Mr. Faubus followed this up last week by appointing George Henry, the director of the Urban League at Little Rock, to the State Manpower Development Council.

Mr. Rockefeller, Governor Rockefeller's brother, is co-chairman of the South-wide Advisory Committee for the league.

Without Mr. Johnson on the ticket next year, Mr. Faubus's task will be harder. A few Negro leaders are talking in terms of a Negro registration of between 150,000 and 200,000 next year and a bloc that size for Mr. Rockefeller would be hard to overcome.

In 1964, when Arkansas held its last election under the old poll tax system, about 100,000 of the 700,000 registered voters were Negores.

A permanent registration system went into operation this year and Negroes turned out heavily in the early months of registration.

Mrs. Daisy Bates, former state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, organized a statewide registration drive, but she suffered a stroke midway in the drive and it faltered.

Faubus Not Ruled Out

She said Friday that information from her workers indicated that about 125,000 Negroes had signed up. The drive will resume in the spring, she said.

Negro leaders are not counting Mr. Faubus out as a contender for these votes.

"The Negro vote is not going to be in the bag for anyone," one Negro leader said this week. "If Mr. Rockefeller doesn't go after it, he won't get it."

Mr. Rockefeller's silence last year cost him many Negro votes, he said. "Negroes are getting pretty nasty about white liberals who are ashamed to have it known that they are asking for the Negro vote," he said.

So far, the Governor's actions have not impressed Negroes.

"Most of the hiring," one said, "has been for federally financed programs where there is pressure from Washington. We don't blame him for capitalizing on it politically, but if he's serious we want him to start with the State Board of Education."

Mr. Rockefeller did not stop campaigning after his loss last fall. His large campaign staff is intact and he has been touring the state talking with local leaders about regional development.

Mr. Faubus has not had significant opposition in the Democratic primaries since 1962, but he is having problems keeping his party in line.

The insurgents in the Legislature increased this year and a group calling itself Democrats for Arkansas was formed in the summer to bring the state Democratic party into harmony with the national party.

MAY RUN AGAIN: Gov. Orval E. Faubus appears to seek new term in Arkansas.

For the first time since 1957, Mr. Faubus lost control of the state Young Democratic organization in a bitter battle this fall.

Sam H. Boyce of Newport, 33 years old, who is a prosecuting attorney and a former assistant state Attorney General, took the presidency of the organization. Mr. Boyce is known to be willing to run for Governor if he can find the support.

Friends Service Group Planning Vietnam Project

Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 4 — The American Friends Service Committee has announced plans to send young American volunteers to Vietnam to work with Vietnamese youth in programs of service in rural villages and hamlets.

The volunteers will work with the Voluntary Youth Association of Vietnam or a similar group. The association was established by young Vietnamese, some of whom had been part of Quaker work camps and seminars in Japan.

It is noteworthy, the committee said, that these young people work in border villages without being disturbed by the Vietcong or South Vietnamese.

City Government Inadequate For Present Day, Report Says

ATLANTA AJ 2/23/66

By RALEIGH BRYANS

The team of experts which has just rendered a report critical of the Atlanta city government's administrative structure offered a variety of critical comments on city departments and operations.

These critical comments are sprinkled liberally through the report and apparently were offered by the experts in documentation of the conclusions they reached about the city's administrative setup.

Their conclusions add up to one major one—that the existing city government structure is too loose and, hence is inadequate for present day needs.

The experts who rendered the report (at city request) were members of the staff of the Public Administration Service of Chicago, a nationally and internationally recognized organization.

According to them, "It seems inescapable that it is the system, the plan of government, which is to blame for existing and growing difficulties" in the Atlanta government.

Here are some of the difficulties and deficiencies the experts noted in their report:

RENT-FREE HOUSES. Another way of padding out low salaries. Atlanta provides such quarters to 54 employes in five departments. Law requires that rent be paid; none is. Some of the houses are valued at over

Turn to Page 6, Column 1

City's Government Called Inadequate

$30,000. "In 1965, two new houses (were) built, one apparently without full authorization. In the latter case the construction cost was met from a budgeted appropriation item: 'Shop and distribution system-general repairs.' The major abuse is that all employes in the same class do not receive housing . . . Fifty-four employes receive free housing and have the same titles, duties and salaries as 221 coworkers who do not. This situation is a justifiable source of resentment among coworkers."

PLANNING. The Planning Department "still lacks depth in staff" but is better off than formerly and "is receiving better recognition and being consulted more regularly." It is not organizationally located "in such a way as to be sufficiently accessible and responsive to the needs of the city's chief executive." The department "is beholden to too many boards and committees and must fritter away too much of its time providing staff assistance to them."

HOUSING CODE enforcement. The Building Department uses a multiple permit card for structures being repaired due to housing code actions. Each inspector (plumbing, electrical, etc.) is supposed to sign the permit card. "Some inspectors refuse to. In addition, the (card) is used only on repairs ordered by the housing division but not for other repairs (and) some repair jobs have cards while others do not. This situation creates confusion even among the inspectors."

URBAN RENEWAL. "The record of urban renewal in Atlanta is not outstanding. So far eight projects have been authorized for execution. Five began in 1956-57 and one each in 1961, 1962 and 1963. Only two of the eight projects—those that began in 1961 and 1963 — have been completed. These two are small projects involving less than five acres and were specifically designed to increase the facilities of a local educational institution. Greater success has been realized in those projects designated for predominantly commercial or institutional reuse than for residential reuse. . . . Overall, less than half of the 770 acres of land cleared for resale in urban renewal projects has been sold or committed for sale."

PENSIONS. In 1962, the city's pension systems were estimated to have an unfunded liability in excess of $100 million. Failure to fund these systems in order to meet currently incurred liabilities could result in a large portion of future annual budgets being devoted to pension payments.

COMPUTER USE. The comptroller in the past year instituted a central data processing center. This was "hastily organized," is operating on only a single shift now while the city searches about to find ways to utilize the computers. Yet even before the new computer proved its value, an even more sophisitcated machine was ordered. If it is delivered (the report urges that its delivery be delayed or canceled) the rent the city must pay the manufacture "will jump from $66,000 in 1964 to $250,000 in 1966."

PERSONNEL POLICIES. The city, as a result of a state law, must give first preference to on-the-job employes in filling new posts. This contributes to a "serious inbreeding of municipal employment." Better qualified people from outside the service are limited in securing city jobs. "This is hurtful in technical, professional and managerial situations."

OVERTIME PAY. Some departments pay no overtime for hours worked beyond the normal workday or workweek. Others pay overtime by increasing the number of actual overtime hours worked by 50 per cent. Some employes receive salary supplements by being assigned car allowances in excess of realistic use. Others are assigned city cars which they garage at home and use only in traveling to and from work.

CONSTRUCTION DEPARTMENT. It is "poorly supported financially," suffers a "critical shortage" of professional personnel eligible for advancement to top jobs, has a high rate of personnel turnover, is "poorly equipped." "The chief of construction and a few other long term professional personnel are holding this department together by sheer force of personal energy and dedication."

WATER DEPARTMENT. By contrast, it is well-financed and "liberally staffed and equipped." The end result is "a technically excellent waterworks fully able to meet both the present and future demands of the city and the surrounding area." But some of the department's operations "need closer analytical scrutiny." "Some of its administrative facilities and appointments appear to border on the luxurious."

SANITARY DEPARTMENT. The department has complained of inability to meet all demands for its services. However, there are "enough personnel" to accomplish garbage and trash collections. "There is observed idling by garbage collection crews which indicates either that field supervision is lax or that collection routes are not well analyzed and arranged. . . . Internal management and personnel practices are a contributing factor. . . ."

TRAFFIC ENGINEERING Department. Its operations are "Subject to political pressure and tampering." None of the department's personnel is college trained in traffic engineering. The staff enlargements recommended in a 1963 report have only partially been accomplished and the department is still 20 positions below what was recommended. It is forced to cope with only routine operations, to neglect planning.

AIRPORT. Operates with "remarkable efficiency." Its big problem is its location, which inhibits expansion.

POLICE DEPARTMENT. "Is not well organized, nor does it function to the best advantage. . . . Could profit from some significant internal realignments and from the adoption of more modern management and operational concepts. . . . Training is presently inadequate from the standpoint of developing fully integrated and knowledgeable command and supervisory staffs. Promotional practices and procedures need more careful development. No formal, consistent planning is done . . . nor are criminal analyses carried out. Internal security arrangements are deficient. A recent alteration (in internal security) . . . is not likely to improve the situation.

FIRE DEPARTMENT. Discipline is good, but department, overall, is undermanned. The department in ratings by the National Board of Fire Underwriters ranks about average within its group. Fire alarm system covers central city fairly well but covers outlying areas poorly.

PRISON FARM. Buildings are not satisfactory for continued operation of the prison under current population circumstances. Pay and qualifications of employes are too low. Buildings do not meet fire regulations. Prisoners receive little or no developmental training and have little to occupy them during lengthy periods of time when inclement weather prevents their working on the farm or city work projects. Circumstances contribute to repeating by prisoners. "Some prisoners are in effect serving life sentences on an installment plan." "The possibility of transfering this (facility) to (a) Fulton County, (b) to a group of counties in the Atlanta Metropolitan Region, or (c) to the state, should be fully explored."

PARKS DEPARTMENT. The department was long all but ignored. More recently it is being given needed attention. It still is strapped for personnel and funds, is weak in planning "in relation to need." It should abandon the practice of giving out free passes to parks facilities. "In 1965, over 450 such passes were given out which entitled the holder and a party of four to use the golf courses, swimming pools, or visit the Cyclorama free."

AUDITORIUM. Fees charged at present auditorium are "rather low" in comparison with those charged in other cities. (Implication: Fees for use of new auditorium, once these are established, should be higher.)

LIBRARY. Operations performed in an acceptable professional manner. The library, like most other departments, has high personnel turnover, is strapped for professional personnel particularly.

MUNICIPAL COURT. The general division is in "deplorable" quarters that were "designed as an afterthought" when the new Police Headquarters Building was being constructed. Judges have inadequate chambers, and when a point of law is raised, witnesses and the jury must leave the courtroom and wait in hallways. Three probation officers carry out their functions "under the most frustrating circumstances." Judges don't have prisoners records before them and sometimes end up placing on probation a prisoner who already is on probation. The "halfway house" for alcoholics originated by the court is a splendid operation but it is questionable if it should be continued, since health functions properly should be performed by the county and the state.

YANKEE LAMPOONS RACISM IN GEORGIA

ATLANTA

Integrated Audience Hails Outspoken Cabaret Skits

NYT 8/1/66

ATLANTA, Feb. 28 (AP)—A Yankee named Phil Erickson nightly lampoons the racial feelings of the solid South—and gets away with it—in a desegregated Atlanta cabaret called Wits' End.

In a typical skit, which would have been unthinkable here a few years ago, three masked girls come onstage in the garb of the Ku Klux Klan. They do a dance, singing:

"We're the female members of the K.K.K.

"The P.T.A. of bigotry.

"We can bomb a church as well as any man.

"And at lynchings, we rig the tree."

One by one they remove their masks. The first two are white, the third Negro.

Mr. Erickson, a former resident of Danville, Ill., and stage partner of the comedian Dick Van Dyke, says:

"Southerners can take a lot of ribbing, although it's only in the last 2½ years we felt we could go into the racial angle.

"Until then, my stockholders wouldn't have approved. For one thing, they've become more broad-minded, and so has the public. The truth is, the racial bit isn't as pungent as it used to be. It's getting to be almost old hat."

Wits' End is packed nightly with a mixed but predominantly white audience. The jokes are on the Southern white customers, but the sharpest barbs win laughter and applause.

"I see where one of our boys has been selected by Time Magazine as man of the year," says a white politician in one skit, referring to the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

"And what have you done to honor him?" asks a newsman.

"Well we've decided to let him register to vote," says the politician, and the customers roar.

Another favorite skit spoofs Lester Maddox, who closed his Atlanta restaurant rather than comply with a court order to desegregate.

Members of the troupe include Mr. Erickson and his wife, Nancy, Bill Sims, Kay Mason and Janet Meshad, who are white, and Sally Street, a Negro. The chief writer is Jack Kaplan, an advertising man.

Mr. Erickson opened the cabaret eight years ago. He said he had received so many inquiries about his show from other Southern spots that he was forming a road company.

"Starting March 5, we're doing country clubs, theaters and colleges in cities over the southeast," Mr. Erickson says.

"And we've had requests from Macon and Columbus, Ga., Greenville, S.C., and Montgomery, Ala., to use some of our racial skits in their own theater group. Some have even paid royalties to use our material."

Fulton Jurist Upholds State Statute Evicting 2 Atlanta Rent Strikers

By REUBEN SMITH

Fulton Superior Judge Luther Alverson Tuesday upheld the constitutionality of the Georgia law that permits a landlord to evict tenants.

Two Negroes, participating in a rent strike in the Markham Street area (SW) of Atlanta, attacked the state statute, contending that it discriminates against the indigent.

In ruling, Judge Alverson also refused to grant Sam Martin and Willie Williams restraining orders that would have prevented landlord Joseph N. Shaffer from evicting them.

Martin lives at 445 Miller's Alley and Williams at 424 Markham Street. Both have withheld payment of rent until demands for repairs are met.

Shaffer obtained dispossessory warrants against the two Negroes. They, in turn, sought a restraining order on the grounds that Martin and Williams had an interest in their dwellings in that they had made repairs and had not been reimbursed.

The plaintiffs were represented in court by Howard Moore, Negro lawyer, who also represents Rep.-elect Julian Bond and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee in Atlanta.

Moore told the court that he believed the Georgia law outlining eviction proceedings was unconstitutional in that it required a tenant to post a bond in event a dispute arises over being evicted.

The lawyer contended that the statute was discriminatory because a "poverty stricken" person is unable to post bond.

Moore also insisted that the law violates the rights of his clients under the 14th Amendment of the Constitution.

Judge Alverson said the question before the court did not affect the freedom or property rights of Martin and Williams.

Saul Blau, lawyer for Shaffer, said the law is not discriminatory. He said it treats all people the same. He continued that the plaintiffs were attempting to set up different rules for people with different incomes. He contended the court if it ruled the law unconstitutional would then have to determine what constitutes a poor man.

Blau contended that to strike from the law the bond requirement would mean that criminals would be able to get out of jail without posting bond by simply representing themselves as poor.

Following Judge Alverson's ruling, Moore asked the court to grant a stay order until the case can be appealed to the Court of Appeals.

A stay order would have the same effect as a restraining order. Judge Alverson withheld a decision until Wednesday. Blau opposed the motion for the order.

Negro Rule Is Possible Here, Williamson Says

ATLANTA By ACHSAH POSEY AC - 3/3/66

Alderman Q. V. Williamson told the Hungry Club Wednesday that if the present trend of the white flight to the suburbs continues, the population of Atlanta will be more than 50 per cent Negro.

Soon "we'll be electing a Negro aldermanic board," the city's first Negro alderman added, and the traditional feud between the city and county governments will take on racial aspects.

Williamson said that during a squabble about 30 years ago the aldermen cut off city water to some areas outside the city limits. "I can see the Negroes cutting off the water and sewerage to the suburbs," he said. That's why open occupancy is so necessary to Atlanta, he asserted.

Williamson, president of the National Association of Real Estate Brokers and a member of Atlanta's Empire Real Estate Board, said the Empire board supported fair housing laws only because "they give the white people an excuse to do right, and the people of Georgia need this excuse."

Admitting that present laws allow people to sell their homes to anyone who can afford them, he said Georgia still needs a fair housing law for an "excuse." Currently, he said, Atlanta desegregates by Negroes moving in and whites moving out and soon the racial balance is just what it was, only in different places.

Hubert Jackson of the Atlnata Housing Administration praised the moral and financial support given public housing by the Empire board.

He said that all public housing projects, of any age, in the nation are covered by the 1964 Civil Rights Act's anti-discrimination provisions, but he said most Southern cities have chosen to operate under freedom of choice, with very little integration resulting.

In many cases Negroes did not even know where white projects were to request them, Jackson said, but now the local agency is required to give applicants lists of all projects with units of the size and type of housing needed.

"There are lots of ways to handle it, though," he added. "Like the person taking the application saying, 'You might prefer Project A, mightn't you?' "

Eviction Ordered For Rent Strikers

AC 3/5/66

By REUBEN SMITH

Fulton Superior Court Judge Luther Alverson ordered the sheriff's office Friday to evict two Markham Street area residents who have been participating in a rent strike.

The judge's order came after an attorney for the two Negroes —both of whom have refused to pay rent because of alleged poor housing conditions—failed to obtain a stay order from Federal District Court.

Judge Alverson earlier this week denied Willie Williams, 424 Markham Street SW and Sam Martin, 445 Miller's Alley, restraining orders that would have prevented landlord Joe Shafer from having them evicted.

STATE LAW UPHELD

The judge in denying the restraining order also ruled that the Georgia law outlining eviction proceedings is constitutional.

As a result of Judge Alverson's ruling, lawyer Howard Moore went to federal court in an effort to obtain a stay order while the case is on appeal.

Judge Alverson allowed Moore to seek the federal order before instructing the sheriff's office to proceed with eviction of the two Negro tenants.

DENIED BY HOOPER

Federal District Court Judge Frank A. Hooper denied Moore's clients a stay order, then set a preliminary hearing on the issue for next Thursday before Judge Sidney O. Smith.

However, by that time the question of a stay order will be moot since the sheriff's deputies plan to evict Martin and Williams Saturday morning.

The two Negroes are four weeks behind in their rent, according to Saul Blau, lawyer for Shafer.

Moore is expected to appeal Judge Alverson's decision through either the state or federal courts.

BIAS CONTENDED

The Negro attorney contends that the Georgia eviction law is unconstitutional because it discriminates against the poverty-stricken.

Georgia law provides that a person contesting an eviction must post cash bond. This, Moore contends, is unconstitutional because a "poor" man cannot post bond.

At the hearing before Judge Alverson Moore said his clients have an interest in the property in that they have made repairs and have not been reimbursed.

Negroes Pressing Gillis To Open I-20 Segment

ATLANTA
A 3/9/66

By WAYNE KELLEY

A delegation of Atlanta Negro leaders Wednesday met with State Highway Director Jim Gillis Sr. to demand early completion of a section of Interstate Route 20 through the west side of the city.

State Sen. Leroy Johnson said that the area in question was predominantly Negro and that the uncompleted segment of I-20 constituted a hardship to residents.

"Interstate 20 from the Industrial Boulevard to Douglasville has been completed, but the stretch through the heart of the community has been incomplete for two or three years," the senator said.

Attending the conference with Sen. Johnson were Rep. Ben Brown, Rep. William Alexander, and Negro community leader Jesse Hill.

Sen. Johnson described Mr. Giilis' reception as "warm," and said that the highway director promised "to do everything humanly possible" to speed up work on the highway.

CONSTRUCTION of I-20 through the west side community is not scheduled for completion until November 1966, the senator said.

But the Negro delegation asked that the highway be opened from Ashby Street to Hightower Road immediately, or that portions of this section be opened.

"We said that we would get the city to provide police to relieve the contractor of liability," Sen. Johnson commented.

The community representatives said they were anxious to see the highway opened from Ashby Street through Fairburn Street as soon as possible.

The highway department promised a "crash program" with increased work crews, according to Sen. Johnson. "They told us we may expect the highway open from Ashby to Longhorn Streets in a matter of weeks," he said.

No Fathers in Half Of Low-Rent Units

ATLANTA A.J. 3/11/66

By RALEIGH BRYANS

The Atlanta Housing Authority in an annual report for the past fiscal year notes that half of the families living in authority-managed low-rent housing units are families without fathers.

It indicated that the percentage of families with a woman as head of the household is increasing and expressed a concern that has been voiced nationally in this regard.

"This (the fact that 50 per cent of its households are without fathers) is very significant . . . since it implies the existence of serious family problems, some of them economic, and some social," it comments.

The authority's annual report covers the fiscal year which ended last June 30. As of that date, it shows, the authority had 30,269 persons living in the 8,145 dwelling units in 10 low-rent projects.

THE AVERAGE TOTAL family income for tenants, it reports, was $2,509.12, and 21 per cent of all families received some type of assistance from the Department of Family and Children Services.

Of the total number of persons living in public housing, 2,059 were elderly persons, a total of 12,493 were adults, and 17,776 were minors.

Eleven families had total yearly incomes of $900 or less. Thirty had incomes ranging from $1,000 to $1,999; 32 had incomes ranging from $2,000 to $2,900; 21 had incomes ranging from $3,000 to $3,900, and six had incomes of $4,000 or over.

The report said families earning $4,000 or more were on notice to vacate, since their incomes had exceeded the limit for continued occupancy. It gave these figures on length of occupancy by families:

FIVE PER CENT entered between 1936 and 1946, 6 per cent between 1947 and 1952, 13 per cent between 1953 and 1955, 4 per cent in 1956, 4 per cent in 1957, 4 per cent in 1958, 5 per cent in 1959, 5 per cent in 1960, 6 per cent in 1961, 8 per cent in 1962, 10 per cent in 1963, 20 per cent in 1964 and 10 per cent in 1965.

During the 1965 fsical year, the authority interviewed 9,039 applicants for housing, took 2,766 applications, processed 2,391 of these to approval, and admitted 1,935 of the latter by last June 30.

During the fiscal year, the authority collected $3,452,564.97 in rents from its tenants, for an average of $35.96 monthly per dwelling unit, according to the report.

Court Declines to Drop Rent Eviction Test Case

3/17/72 AC

Landlord Joseph Shaffer asked a federal judge Thursday to dismiss a suit by two tenants evicted from his property for going on a rent strike. Shaffer's attorney, Sol Blau, contended the problem was made moot by their eviction.

U.S. District Judge Sidney O. Smith, who had called the hearing on a motion for a temporary restraining order to prevent the eviction, said he could not dismiss the case, which is to be heard by a three-judge panel March 25.

The tenants' attorney, Howard Moore, withdrew the motion for a temporary restraining order. Both sides agreed that would be moot since the tenants had been evicted by the Fulton County sheriff, also a defendant in the case.

Major issue before the three judges will be the constitutionality of Georgia's law providing that tenants about to be dispossessed can prevent it until trial of their case by filing a counter-affidavit with a bond. Moore contends this deprives people too poor to post bond of due process.

Atlanta Is Plowed And Replanted

To have the new 250-unit, high-rise public housing project on Ashby Street named for him is the kind of monument John O. Chiles would have wanted. The late city-developer didn't make much noise about his good works. But he had his heart in the unpaid job of being chairman of the Atlanta Housing Authority.

Men like him have remade the middle of this city in the last decade. Public housing itself dates back to the 1930s when pioneers like Charles Palmer brought the nation's first project, Techwood, to Atlanta. But urban renewal, with its massive promise, was added on in the 1950s.

The full sweep of things done since then cannot be readily grasped. No fewer than 2,600 acres of the central city have been or are being reclaimed from blight. Nearly $45 million in federal money is being poured into the work, coupled with a third again that much raised locally.

Four thousand displaced families and individuals have been relocated. Three out of four are now known to be living in decent housing. Into the former slums is pouring $80 million in private investment; examples are the Marriott and Holiday Inn motels, Landmark Apartments, and office buildings of the John Hancock and Oxford Manufacturing companies.

Millions more in public spending are reclaiming the former waste. Besides the $26 million for the city's new stadium and auditorium, Georgia Tech alone projects spending of $25 million on renewal-cleared land. Georgia State plans to invest $30 million.

The progress is phenomenal. So are the problems.

Construction of public housing proceeds in order to provide low-rent quarters for low-income families. But there's not enough in the face of population climb and urban renewal displacement.

Rehabilitation of existing neighborhoods is now a central part of urban renewal. But crooked contractors have moved in to sting the recipients of the repair and renovation grants; they pocket the people's money and botch the job. Those birds will have to be seen to.

Private enterprise is building acres of housing. The Rev. William Holmes Borders' church formed a nonprofit corporation, borrowed mortgage money from a Negro-managed local insurance firm, and put up one of the nicest new apartment developments, Wheat Street Gardens, whose 520 units are now occupied with rents starting at $69.50. But there simply aren't enough nonprofit groups doing this kind of thing yet. And private builders are far from supplying the demand for decent low-rent or low-cost housing. The plight of the families on the Markham Street sidewalk shows that. (The city is, however, offering those evicted families housing help whenever they decide they want a solution instead of an issue.)

There is far to go. But the newly named John O. Chiles Homes on Ashby Street make a monument to how far we have come.

Bond Asks High Court For Assembly Seat

WASHINGTON, March 16 (AP)—Julian Bond, an outspoken critic of U.S. policies in Viet Nam, asked the Supreme Court Wednesday to clear the way for him to take his seat in the Georgia House of Representatives.

Attorneys for Bond, 26-year-old Negro, pacifist and official of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), said he was barred "solely because of his public statements on issues of national concern."

They asked the court to consider whether his right to free speech was impaired and whether his constituents were disfranchised.

"The questions are substantial," Bond's brief said, adding "this is the first case before the court in which a legislative body has refused to seat an elected representative because of his public expression of opinion."

Specifically, Bond asked the high court to review a Feb. 10 decision by a panel of three federal judges from Atlanta upholding 2 to 1 the Georgia House's refusal to seat him.

Biracial Panel Urged To Avert Watts Here

State Sen. Leroy Johnson and Atlanta Alderman Q. V. Williamson, both Negroes, have asked Mayor Ivan Allen to create a biracial committee that would work "to avert a Watts situation in Atlanta."

They have in mind, they said, "a committee of Negro and white citizens armed with professional staff workers and charged with the responsibility of working with city officials and community organizations in bridging the gap between the slum dwellers, the culturally deprived, the low-income group and the rest of our society."

In a news release issued jointly Thursday, the two Negro leaders declared that a recurrence of rioting in Watts, a Los Angeles slum area, "reminds us that we should put the solutions of our own slum problems on an emergency basis."

They charge that "bureaucratic delays, indifference, ignorance and prejudice" have mitigated against effective solution of the slum problem in Atlanta, although they concede that programs to rid the city of the problem are being undertaken with some earnestness.

THEY SAID "red tape" could be cut through special emergency crash programs. But they said Atlanta needs "above all a heightened public conscience and an increased awareness that the evil conditions which spawned the Watts riots affect not only those who live under them but the entire community. . . ."

"Nobody desires a Watts in Atlanta," they said. "All citizens, Negro and white, must pledge themselves to greater efforts to eliminate the basic causes which may lead to trouble in our city.

"We call upon the community organizations, the churches, city officials and citizens of good will to join with us to speed up slum clearance and redevelopment. We call upon them to take moral and direct responsibility in housing programs which will not only supply better living space but will also create those environmental conditions, physically, socially and morally, which will make real the promises of education, better jobs and equal opportunity.

"This is the democratic way, our way, to good citizenship and under such conditions we need not fear a Watts with its attendant violence in Atlanta."

City's Shame in Shadow of Its Pride

ATLANTA'S PLUSH STADIUM TOWERS OVER SLUM'S POOR

By WAYNE KELLEY

In the shadow of Atlanta's pride, the new $18 million municipal stadium, live 30,000 poor citizens jammed into slums, without adequate city services and without much faith in the future.

When the lights go on in the stadium, the slums to the south are invisible.

But a report issued by the Community Council of the Atlanta Area, Inc., has shed some light on the condition of the people who exist there day by day.

THE COUNCIL report is the result of group interviews with residents and 15 weeks of intensive study of five small areas, each a block or two in size.

What the researchers found were: poor housing . . . no recreation . . . low income . . . alcoholism . . . illiteracy . . . poor health . . . exploitation of people . . . despair and ingrained skepticism about the promises of help

The area described by the council report includes the two communities of Summerhill and Mechanicsville. It is bounded roughly by the East Expressway on the north, the Southern Railroad on the west, Atlanta Avenue on the south, and Cherokee Avenue on the east.

Although the study centered on the blight surrounding Atlanta Stadium, the council said that most of the preliminary conclusions "are applicable to the other slums of Atlanta."

The researchers found "a very high rate of malnutrition, including just plain starvation." There was also the problem of premature births and contagious diseases.

EDUCATION, the great hope of the young for escape from the "poverty cycle," is beset by a combination of poor schooling and limited parental awareness of its importance, according to the report.

"On one block in each of four streets, staff found 39 different children in about two and one-half days who were not in school, but should have been," the report stated.

The study is one of several being prepared for the city administration to provide information on local problems. It is intended for use by Atlanta's Community Improvement Program officials.

But the report does not go easy on the city's role in the slum situation.

"People living in slums have never received an equal share of services in the city," the study pointed out.

NEWS ANALYSIS

"Their streets are unpaved; the schools are much more crowded; the enforcement of sanitation, housing, and other standards is much less stringent; in many neighborhoods street lights are virtually nonexistent.

"COUPLED with the absence of service have been many unfilled promises to improve conditions. Bond issues have been sold on the promise of improved schools or streets or parks, but these services have not materialized. Public officials have stated their desires to improve this or that situation, but conditions remain essentially unchanged.

"It should be no surprise that almost everyone living in the slums of Atlanta is extremely skeptical of the local government's motivation," the report said bluntly.

"It should be no surprise that most people simply do not believe the benign expressions of good intent made by local officials," it added.

Neglect of children is widespread in the area because of splintered families and the need for both parents (if a child has both a mother and father) to work.

"Whether the parents are at home or away, it is common to see small children and even infants playing in the streets or among dangerous junk and trash piles that litter the area," the researchers said.

FAMILY income in the area is exceedingly low. Annual income of 8 to 12 per cent of the families is below $1,000. For another 15 to 25 per cent the family must exist on between $1,000 and $2,000 during the year.

The problem is not limited to low income, however. "Many grocery stores in slum areas sell cheap and even spoiled foods at fairly high prices," the report noted. "Door-to-door salesmen sell cheap merchandise at many times the cost of good quality material."

With money, recreation and hope severely limited, many slum dwellers turn to the temporary pleasure of drinking.

"Since drunkenness is a violation of the law, and since Atlanta police spend over half of their time enforcing this law, it is a natural consequence that residents have considerable experience with the negative side of police authority," the interviewers concluded.

UNHAPPY experiences with police temper the attitude of slum dwellers toward all authority.

The 17-page study made two recommendations:

1. A program of public information on future plans for all urban renewal clearance projects.

2. Development of two-way communications between local public agencies and the residents of low income neighborhoods.

RUBBISH WORKERS GET JOB FOR DAY

City in Bind, Hires at 'Corner'

By RALEIGH BRYANS

Atlanta's Sanitary Department is so strapped for laborers to man its rubbish pickup trucks that it is resorting to an unusual and potentially controversial means of labor recruitment.

Every weekday, it dispatches trucks to a pedestrian "island" at the intersection of Decatur Street and Central Avenue and, on the spot, recruits men whom it will work for a day and pay at day's end.

The department is, in short, doing what many Atlantans have done individually over the years when they have wanted to hire a casual laborer to do yard work or odd jobs just for a day.

The pedestrian island at Decatur and Central is a well established labor pool of sorts. Negro men interested only in casual jobs collect there each morning and wait for potential employers to drive by.

The practice has given the area the nickname "Hungry Boys Corner."

It is unorthodox for the city to do this kind of hiring. The city has prided itself over an established civil service program that in general assures a stable work force of men and women it can vouch for.

BUT A MASSIVE problem of absenteeism on the part of rubbish pickup men has forced it to throw pride to the winds in order to keep down the anguished howls of taxpayers who want rubbish picked up.

"What else can we do?" asks Stafford Graydon, city sanitary engineer, with a shrug. "If we don't pick up the rubbish, people will howl."

Mr. Graydon's department has 1,126 regular pickup men on its rolls, but absenteeism among these is such a problem that an average of about 175 men can be counted on to lay off the job every day.

One morning last week, 184 men stayed home. Another day, some time back, 292 did so. And on such days, the city's work fleet of 56 rubbish trucks would be crippled if no make-do efforts were made.

The first expedient was to use city prisoners. "We are using 45 prisoners a day," says Mr. Graydon, "but they only come in in good weather, so we get them only a little better than half the time."

The plan of going down to "Hungry Boys Corner" each day to pick up casual laborers began just last Monday and derived, Mr. Graydon says, from a suggestion made by Mayor Ivan Allen.

"THE FIRST DAY we picked up 25 men," Mr. Graydon says. "Since then word has got around and there are more men down there than we can use. One day this week there were 65 and we took 45 of them."

As the men are picked up, a Sanitary Department employe takes their names and sends these to the city comptroller's office so that their checks — for $11.30 the day — can be processed and made available at day's end.

Yes, says Mr. Graydon, this is likely to be a controversial way of filling out the rubbish pickup work force.

"The other (that is, regular) laborers are unhappy because these casual laborers get paid every day while they get their checks every two weeks," he says.

"Also, our regular workers are people who have had to go through the Civil Service procedure — take tests, physicals, things like that — and these casual workers just have to be there.

"I expect some complaints from the labor unions when they get wind of this, but my outlook is that the public is more important than the employe. The public comes first here."

Even though hiring casual labor by the day is Mayor Allen's idea, it met resistance within the city government. City Comptroller Charles Davis opposed the idea at first. So did the City Finance Committee.

BUT THE IDEA FINALLY was approved. "We were in a corner," as Mr. Graydon says. And he describes the absenteeism picture, to make that statement stand up.

The problem has two-fold origins. A general shortage of available labor in the city figures in it. So does a liberal sick leave policy.

The sick leave policy forbids the city to question a man for the first five days he stays off the job and claims sick leave. "We have to take a man's word for it," says Mr. Graydon.

"Our worst absenteeism is on Mondays. They get drunk on the weekend and lay off on Monday. If the labor pool here were sufficient, we could fire them. But as things are, we can't fire a soul. We just swallow it."

The men hired from the streets are used only on rubbish pickups, not on garbage pickups. "We don't know who they are, what they'd do," says Mr. Graydon. "We can't have them going into people's backyards."

Rubbish, by city law, must be piled on front lawns, near the street. Homeowners keep garbage pails at the rear of their homes and collectors go into the yards to pick it up.

Negroes Ask Resignations In EOA Setup

ATLANTA

By WALKER LUNDY

A group of 40 "grass roots" Negro leaders Friday demanded the resignations of the executive director of the Economic Opportunity of Atlanta and 19 appointed members of the authority's board of directors.

The Negroes gave them 10 days to answer or face large-scale withdrawal from EOA programs by an unknown number of Negro poor.

The resignations were called for in a statement prepared for release Friday afternoon which charged that the EOA was systematically leaving the poor out of the decision-making of its operations.

THE STATEMENT charged that EOA had not honored a promise made to the city's Negro community 17 months ago to involve poor people "on all levels of policy-making and program operations.

The resignations of all appointed board members — four of which are Negro — on the 23-man board and the resignation of EOA Director E. O. Emmerich were demanded.

The Negroes set a time limit of 10 days for an answer from EOA.

"If we do not receive a favorable reply . . . we shall ask all residents in the target areas to withhold all participation in the community action program of the EOA," the prepared statement said.

It also threatened demonstrations at the EOA headquarters at 101 Marietta St. and at all EOA agencies in Fulton County.

The statement was drafted by the 40 Negroes after two closed-door meetings. The group claims to represent Negro poor in all areas of Atlanta.

AMONG THE 40 signers of the statement were Rev. S. A. Samples of the Scott Crossing Civic League, Benny T. Smith of the Metropolitan Atlanta Civic Council, Rev. C. D. Colbert of the Georgia Avenue-Pryor Street Civic League, Rev. Robert Barnes of the Highpoint Civic League, William Merritt of the Joyland-Carver Homes Civic League, C. G. Ezzard of the Mechanicsville Civic League, and Edgar Hillman of the Lemuel Civic League.

Specifically, they accused the EOA of letting "nonprofessionals interview professionals," of losing applications for aid, of not following through in some cases after conducting the preliminary interviews, and of job discrimination against Negroes.

REGIONAL COUNCIL ADDS ARCHITECT

Southern Integration Group Gets City Planning Aide

By GENE ROBERTS
Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, April 2—Southerners who have followed the work of the Southern Regional Council in its 22-year campaign for improved race relations were surprised recently when it added an architect to its staff of human relations counselors.

Somehow this did not fit with the image of an organization that has devoted much of its effort toward paving the way for peaceful acceptance of racial integration.

The council quickly explained that it was becoming concerned over the tendency of Southern cities to develop "Northern style ghettos" for Negroes. So, it was dispatching an architect around the South to argue, with alternate plans, that low income Federal housing and other projects should be dispersed throughout a city.

With this sort of approach, the council is taking a position of leadership among human relations and civil rights organizations in adjusting to the "new phase" of race relations in the South.

Foundations Give Help

It is being aided in the adjustment by national foundations that once were reluctant to finance race relations programs. And largely as a result of the new foundation aid, the organization's annual budget is being revised upward this week to $125,000 — or about four times the amount of las year's expenditures.

"We're on the new frontier of race relations," said Paul Anthony, director of the council, which was organized in 1944 by such Southerners as Howard Odum of the University of North Carolina and Ralph McGill, publisher of The Atlanta Constitution. "Until recently the problem was how do you keep law and order while transferring eight or nine Negro students to a white school.

Now, however, the problem as the council sees it is one of unemployment, preventing ghettos, improving the administration of justice and the caliber of prisons, and seeing that the drive towards integration does not lag.

The council is becoming increasingly interested in cooperatives and when, for example, a group of unemployed Negro women in Selma, Ala., recently formed a quilting cooperative the council arranged for technical assistance in production and marketing.

It is also:

¶Trying to mobilize women in the South to inspect jails and demand prison reforms and rehabilitation programs, and is in the process of hiring a penologist to work with Southern states and cities in upgrading the caliber of their penal institutions.

¶Increasing the staffs of its network of human relations councils, which have been mainly active in urban areas, to include full-time workers to assist small towns and rural communities in adjusting to social change.

¶Establishing a team of consultants to help local organizations and governmental units in seeking Federal antipoverty assistance.

¶Organizing still another team of consultants to assist Negroes and whites in forming community action organizations for "self - improvement" in city slums and rural areas.

Since establishing the number of projects it undertakes, Mr. Anthony said, the council has found it easier to get funds from the Ford Foundation and similar organizations, but it is still searching for long term sources of revenue from within the region.

"The foundations are interested mainly in specific short range programs," said Mr. Anthony. "Not in long term assistance."

Despite it's new foundation-backed activities, however, the organization still devotes a major part of its effort to long-established interests such as it's state human relations councils, voter registration drives, and the dissemination of information to the Federal Government and to Southerners on racial problems.

From 1961 through 1963, the council helped register 700,000 Negroes in 11 states and recently started another voter registration project aimed at the more than 2 million adult Negroes still unregistered in the South.

"The new voting rights act made registration possible," said one council worker, "but it doesn't put Negroes on the registration books. It takes registration drives to do that."

6 Students From M.I.T. Go the Route on Subway

Six students from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology rode along every foot of tunnel, trestle and track of the city's 236.7-mile subway network yesterday, trying to set a record for the tour. But even though they were assisted by a computer that was supposed to devise the most expeditious routes, they came out second best.

The students, members of the Rapid Transit Club at M.I.T., rode on 77 trains, taking 25 hours, 57 minutes and 20 seconds to complete the tour. The record of 25 hours and 56 minutes was set Aug. 29, 1964 by a Geoffrey Arnold, then a 17-year-old New Jersey school boy and now a Harvard student.

Close-Up ATLANTA

Race: the Phony Issue

AC 4/4/64

Race is the shadow issue in the Sandy Springs annexation debate that nobody wants to talk about squarely.

Some of the opposition literature comes as close as anyone has to saying the word "Negro."

It says that in Atlanta, the "lowest, least educated and most irresponsible biped has the same vote as does the educated, responsible and conscientious taxpayer." It argues that higher fire insurance rates are a "small sum to pay for the freedom from bloc vote domination." It says that if Sandy Springs became a part of the city and thus obtained public parks "the same people who have rendered Atlanta's public parks virtually useless to its white citizens would soon monopolize new parks in Sandy Springs."

Yet of all the arguments raised against annexation, this is the phoniest.

In fact, the pragmatic segregationist should be heartily in favor of annexation.

His chief concern seems to be that if current population trends continue, Atlanta will be predominately Negro and will elect a Negro city government. That probably will happen—if Atlanta is restricted to its present artificial boundaries.

What's happening in Atlanta is common throughout the country. As some people prosper and move to the suburbs, the older and cheaper housing in the central city is bought by the poor, who generally are Negroes. Metropoliton Atlanta—the real city—is no more Negro than half a century ago.

It is proper and just that Negroes win seats in local government councils, but an all-Negro board of aldermen would not be representative of metropolitan Atlanta. Yet it is just such distorted representation that Atlanta is condemned to if the city limits do not reflect the composition of the whole metropolitan area. Remember, too, that decisions of the aldermen affect the whole metropolitan Atlanta economy, not the city's alone.

Intelligent, capable men and women who live in Sandy Springs could be valuable additions to city government. They can't be elected unless they are city citizens. The present mayor comes from a section added in Atlanta's last major boundary adjustment.

The antis argue that voters throughout the city would vote on Sandy Springs' aldermen if the area comes into the city. True. But so would Sandy Springs voters influence every other aldermanic race in the city.

It's not clear to me why the antis claim Negroes would travel half way across the city to visit Sandy Springs parks. And why do antis suggest the Atlanta school system would bus Negroes into Sandy Springs school from Atlanta which doesn't even have school buses? Could it be just to cloud the true issues?

U.S. Court Dismisses Rent Case

Atlanta
AC 4/19/66

By ACHSAH NESMITH

Efforts by two Vine City tenants to get a federal court to enjoin their landlord from evicting them ended in failure Monday.

The three-judge district court dismissed the request for an injunction by Willie Williams and Sam Martin and denied their move for a declaratory judgment to invalidate a Georgia law requiring a bond to fight eviction. Williams camped in a tent after his eviction last month in protest.

The two Negro tenants claimed they were effectively deprived of their day in the Georgia courts because they could not afford to post the required bond.

Their efforts in Fulton County courts to stave off eviction failed and are currently on appeal to the state court of appeals. They contended this would take so long they would be irreparably damaged before the appeal came up.

Injunctive relief would have been in violation of comity provisions of federal law which prohibit federal courts from enjoining proceedings pending in a state court, the judges ruled. Such interference is permissible only if specifically authorized by Congress or is neces-

De-Annex View Hit by Manning

AC 5/6/66

ATLANTA

DeKalb Commission chairman Brince H. Manning Jr. said Friday that 41st District Sen. Gene Sanders "ought to pay more attention to the problems of DeKalb County" before he seeks a referendum to consider "de-annexing" a portion of the county from the City of Atlanta.

Sanders had declared Thursday he planned to introduce a bill next year providing for such a referendum if he is reelected to the State Legislature.

"The senator should make sure everyone understands the consequences of de-annexation," Manning said, "and not just sound off with political statements."

Manning declared that "before any referendum is called, accurate facts and figures should be compiled so that the people know what they're voting for and the governmental bodies know what would be involved.

"For example," he said, "I see no possible way for us to take over the sewer and water systems in that section of Atlanta—and that's only one consideration."

Manning also questioned whether DeKalb's tax digest would be able to support any debt obligations the county would acquire if that portion of Atlanta were de-annexed.

"I don't know," he said. "But I think we ought to find out before anyone decides to call a referendum."

Sanders had said Thursday he thought about "75 per cent" of the people in the area "would vote to get out of the city" if a referendum were called.

The reason, he said, was "mounting dissatisfaction over public schools . . . Atlanta parents whose children would have to attend Bass High (in Atlanta) are willing to pay several hundred dollars a year to have their children go to school in DeKalb."

Meanwhile, Atlanta and Bass High School officials reacted strongly to Sanders' statements, and to charges by two parents in the area that Bass could "not provide college preparatory education."

Atlanta School Board member Mrs. Leroy Woodward said Sanders was "in gross error" when he said people in the area were dissatisfied with the schools.

"I've talked with dozens of people," Mrs. Woodward said, "and I haven't encountered any of that feeling. It's a shame our schools must be used for political advantage."

She also countered charges by Herbert L. Stewart, who said he asked Sanders to de-annex his property from the city last February "so my children could attend Druid Hills High School," that Bass wouldn't have been able to offer a college prep curriculum.

Negroes Uninvited, Met Skips Party

By MIKE DAVIES

Members of the Metropolitan Opera did not appear at an annual luncheon given in their honor Friday because the company's Negro members were not invited.

The luncheon, considered one of the top social events of the year in Atlanta and given by the Atlanta Opera Guild, was held anyway without the guests of honor at the Piedmont Driving Club.

Francis Robinson, assistant manager of the Met, said "We don't like to attend functions where all our members cannot attend."

He said that as far as he could recall the company's Negro members had not been invited to attend the luncheon in past years when it was given at the private club.

Robinson said about 10 Negroes are among the opera company's 325 members on tour.

Mrs. Claiborne Glover, president of the opera guild, said guild members had known for several months that the Met would not attend the function and that the guild had subsequently planned the luncheon around Opera Atlanta.

"We extended our usual invitation to the Met, but as our luncheon was being held in a private club, they said they could not attend," Mrs. Glover said.

She said the guild tried unsuccessfully to obtain a suitable public facility in which to hold the luncheon.

The guild was organized to foster affection for and appreciation of the opera company's annual appearance in Atlanta. Stars of both stage and management have attended the luncheon in the past.

Children Block Magnolia St. with Playground Equipment

Vine City Street Blocked 7th Day in Play Protests

Vine City residents again turned the neighborhood's main thoroughfare, Magnolia Street, into a playground for two hours Friday, blocking traffic in an attempt to obtain a park and recreation center for the underprivileged Northwest area.

This marked the seventh day of the "play in," spearheaded by the Vine City Council, a resident group seeking improvements for the area. The "playground" has been set up every school day since last Friday between 3:30 and 5:30 p.m.

Capt. Morris Redding of the police Crime Prevention Bureau said he had negotiated with Hector Black, Vine City Council co-chairman, several times and had offered to find recreation space for the Negro youngsters. Redding also said he would furnish members of his unit as supervisors for the recreational activities.

In the block between, some 150 Negro children play softball, football and frolic in a sandbox. Several members of the Southern Regional Council stand around as "interested observers."

The equipment was donated for the demonstration by a neighborhood church.

"I don't understand it," Williams, co-chairman of the Vine City Council, told a reporter. "The city spent $18 million to build a stadium and $500,000 to get the Braves and they won't give us a park."

The nearest public recreation facilities are in Washington Park, more than a mile away. The area's two elementary schools, council officials say, are already overcrowded and lack equipment.

The council requested a park from the city a year ago, but nothing came of it. After the demonstration began last Friday, the Atlanta Crime Prevention Bureau offered to block off a portion of Maple Street, which bisects Magnolia, for a recreational area, but the council rejected the idea.

"Maple Street is a narrow, gravel street and when it rains, it gets full of potholes and mud," said Black. "We can't use that."

Vine City representatives plan to go before the Aldermanic Board "possibly Tuesday," to ask that Magnolia Street be roped off until a park can be provided.

WANT PERMANENCE

Black, a white honor graduate of Harvard University who lives in the area, said the Vine City Council turned down Redding's proposal because "it would be only an interim measure. It would be fine if we could get some assurance from the city that we will get the permanent facilities we want."

A white man given a ticket for impending traffic on the Northeast Expressway was on the scene Thursday taking pictures of the week-long traffic blocking demonstration. He said he planned to use the pictures in court in his own defense.

"If they stopped me for blocking traffic, why not stop these people, too?" he asked a reporter.

Redding said most of those blocking the streets were young children acting under the direction of Black and Willie Williams, aided by two white girls who said they were former members of the domestic Peace Corps, known as Vista, stationed here.

GIVEN TICKET

One girl said "a cracker" policeman gave her a ticket for blocking traffic, then officers offered to tear up the ticket if she would see that the street was cleared. The children immediately left the street, she said. But as soon as the officer tore up the ticket, the children again blocked traffic, she said. No more tickets were given.

Annexing To Draw Big Vote

ATLANTA
AC 3/9/66

An election day turnout of perhaps 80 to 85 per cent of the registered voters is expected Wednesday when the Sandy

First of two articles.

Springs and Adamsville areas hold referendums on whether to come into the City of Atlanta.

Admittedly, such a turnout would be high for an annexation referendum.

But, as one veteran voting official said, "The interest up there (in Sandy Springs) is so great, I believe that many people will go to the polls."

Only those registered voters who reside in the Sandy Springs and Adamsville sections will be eligible to cast ballots. That was spelled out in the referendum bill which finally was passed, after much controversy, by the 1966 General Assembly.

The Wednesday voting will mark the first effort in 14 years by the City of Atlanta to expand its territorial limits by any great amount.

The last great expansion came in 1952 under the Plan of Improvement and brought into the city the Buckhead and Northside sections.

The push for annexation of Sandy Springs is spearheaded by central city leaders through a working Team for Tomorrow. The anti-annexation forces are led by the Save Sandy Springs organization.

Three days before the voting, it was the considered guess of experienced referendum observers that the anti-annexation forces are likely to come out on top.

The antis have derided Atlanta as "a melting pot" and said that the city would improve Sandy Springs in the same manner it did Kirkwood, which was annexed some decades ago. (Kirkwood is one of Atlanta's transitional neighborhoods where Negroes have been supplanting whites).

The pro - annexation forces have argued that Atlanta needs the leadership potential of Sandy Springs and that Sandy Springs needs Atlanta for many reasons.

Higher zoning standards, better police and fire protection, improved water and sanitation services also have been cited by the pros as among the gains which will accure to Sandy Sandy Springs residents.

The legislation setting up the referendum provides that if Sandy Springs votes to come into the city, elections will be held to give Sandy Springs two representatives on the Atlanta Board of Aldermen and one on the Atlanta school board.

The Rector Had Had Enough

Out in Sandy Springs, the Rev. Don Harrison received one of those anonymous anti-annexation tracts.

It was the last straw for Mr. Harrison. He could no longer remain silent. In the bulletin of St. Dunstan's Episcopal Church yesterday, he explained why.

"I became rather angry," he wrote, "at the subtle attempts to distort facts.

"An example is in the section on schools in which it is stated that the Fulton County schools provide the services of psychologists and psychometrists. The implication is that Atlanta does not provide such services. The truth is, however, that Atlanta provides many such specialists, and the few in Fulton County are usually city employes.

". . . the issues of annexation ought to be passed or defeated on the basis of an honest presentation of the facts. Some parties opposed to annexation maintain that they are afraid participation in the city will lower their 'good government' and corruption will be the result.

"I would suggest to these persons that innuendo and distortion of fact is not a very desirable basis for continuing their present 'good' government."

The rector said he personally approves of joining the city.

For everyone, he wrote, there are two major areas of concern. The first is economic. Each citizen should figure for himself—"and not to be told by opinionated persons"—what annexation would mean in terms of taxes, services, insurance and water rates, schools, etc.

The second area "which unfortunately has received far too little thought or mention," is moral responsibility.

"Honest and equitable government is desired by the vast majority, but such a state will not spring full blown from the head of Zeus. It can be achieved only by the vigorous participation of honest and equitable people.

"The city provides the framework in which suburbanites earn their living and receive other benefits, such as attracting sports events, educators, artists, etc.

"We have a responsibility, and a moral one at that, to return to the source of our economics and pleasure a portion of our income, energies and leadership. Anything else is moral irresponsibility."

To which we add only "Amen."

City's Bid Defeated by Hefty 2 to 1

By MARION GAINES

Sandy Springs residents voted overwhelmingly against coming into the City of Atlanta Wednesday by a margin of better than 2 to 1.

The community of Boulder Park at Adamsville, however, voted to attach itself to the city by a count of 198 to 151.

In Sandy Springs the vote was 5,173 against annexation and 2,504 for it. That was the story in all eight precincts and the absentee ballots as well.

NOT UNEXPECTED

It was not an unexpected setback for Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. and the Team for Tomorrow leaders who had campaigned for two months trying to woo Sandy Springs into the city.

All of the pre-referendum polls had indicated that Sandy Springs would not—and that Adamsville would—vote in favor of annexation.

City's Bid Defeated by Hefty 2 to 1

By MARION GAINES

Sandy Springs residents voted overwhelmingly against coming into the City of Atlanta Wednesday by a margin of better than 2 to 1.

The community of Boulder Park at Adamsville, however, voted to attach itself to the city by a count of 198 to 151.

In Sandy Springs the vote was 5,173 against annexation and 2,504 for it. That was the story in all eight precincts and the absentee ballots as well.

NOT UNEXPECTED

It was not an unexpected setback for Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. and the Team for Tomorrow leaders who had campaigned for two months trying to woo Sandy Springs into the city.

All of the pre-referendum polls had indicated that Sandy Springs would not—and that Adamsville would—vote in favor of annexation.

The final tally in Sandy Springs showed that 67 per cent of those who voted cast their ballots against annexation and 33 per cent voted for it.

The total turnout was 7,677 out of a total of about 12,600 registered voters in Sandy Springs.

Leaders of the Save Sandy Springs Association, which had campaigned vigorously against annexation, were naturally jubilant.

Burt DeRieux, who was one of Save Sandy Springs' big guns in the speechmaking department, declared that "we do not believe this is a rejection of our good friends, the citizens of Atlanta."

"But we do believe that it is a rejection of their city government," he continued. "We also hope that Mayor Allen is a man of his word and will leave us alone unless and until we move for annexation."

ACCEPTS DEFEAT

Mayor Allen accepted the defeat with a smile and expressed "delight that the citizens of Boulder Park voted to come into the city."

"I can promise the citizens of Boulder Park that we will begin to furnish them city services at city prices just as soon as they officially join the city next January," said the mayor.

Of the Sandy Springs fight, he said that "the fact that we came from what was a 4-or-5 to 1 position against us in the beginning to a 2 to 1 position later on is an indication that the foundation has been laid for a successful approach in the future."

"In the meantime, the city will assure the people of Sandy Sprnigs that we will continue to furnish the same high grade of services that we have in the past," said Allen. "There will be no lessening of our efforts to improve on these services and furnish them at the lowest possible cost."

Mayor Allen said he wanted to express "the city's gratitude for the fine and consistent presentation that was made of its case to bring in Sandy Springs by the leadership and workers of the Team for Tomorrow."

"This group of dedicated Atlantans waged what we knew was an uphill fight from the beginning and made material improvement every day of the campaign," he said.

"We are grateful to the Legislature for providing the opportunity to let the people of Sandy Springs vote on this matter," the mayor added.

Howard Starke, chairman of the Team for Tomorrow, called the outcome "unfortunate, and I'm personally disappointed."

"But Sandy Springs continues to be a part of Metropolitan Atlanta," he said, "and I hope it will have another opportunity to become part of what I feel is the greatest city in the South."

BIG TURNOUT

DeRieux said the anti-annexationists were "very pleased that the largest percentage of voters turned out for this referendum in the history of the area. The full sentiment of this area has been expressed overwhelmingly against annexation."

He said there was "a lot of talk" at the Save Sandy Springs headquarters Wednesday night about continuing the organization "in the future to study and promote the community, civic and governmental development of Sandy Springs primarily; but also of this entire area."

TRAIL FROM START

The pro-annexation forces trailed from the very first of the vote-counting. The Fulton County Courthouse box was the first tabulated and it came out 20 to 16 against annexation.

Then came Precinct 16A at the Morgan Falls School and the die was cast. The tally there was 164 to 28 against Sandy Springs becoming part of Atlanta.

Besides the courthouse precinct, the pro-annexationists came closest to winning in the count of absentees and Precinct 16G (Liberty Guinn School).

They lost the absentees, however, by a total count of 203 to 100. And they lost Precinct 16G by a 140-vote margin, the tally being 667 against and 527 for.

In the Boulder Park area, which has an estimated 600 registered voters, the turnout was light. This was expected since there had never appeared any doubt the Adamsville community would vote to join the city.

The turnout was so light in Precinct 24A (Utoy Springs School) that only five persons voted—four for annexation and one against, and the courthouse box was zero for and two against. The big vote came in Precinct 27 (the "400" Club) where the count was 193 for and 147 against.

ACLU Urges Citizen Board To Review Police 'Abuses'

ATLANTA 5/16/66 AC

By BILL SHIPP

The American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia issued Sunday a long report alleging numerous instances of misconduct by the Atlanta police. It proposed the creation of a civilian review board to handle complaints against the police.

Such a board would be empowered to award a maximum fine of $500 plus "provable out of pocket expenses" to any person it found injured by police "misconduct."

Richard Freeman, chairman of the aldermanic police committee, labeled the ACLU's proposal for a civilian review board "a lot of baloney."

"If the ACLU has anything to do with it, then I don't want to be associated with it," Freeman said.

"I'm getting sick and tired of the ACLU seeking cheap publicity," he said. "I think the ACLU could serve a better purpose by helping us solve problems."

The ACLU was especially critical of police methods in cases involving Negroes or poverty-stricken white persons. The study included a chapter on alleged police strong-arm activities and gave the names of several persons who said they had been mistreated.

Alderman Freeman also said he was "sick and tired" of hearing about police brutality.

"I hear very little about citizens' brutality toward policemen," he said. Freeman said, however, that some police brutality does exist, and when it comes to his attention he sees that it is fully investigated.

"Instead of going to the newspapers, I think it would have been well if the ACLU had come to me as chairman of the police committee and Police Chief Herbert Jenkins about this," Freeman said. One of Freeman's law partners is Hugh Gibert, president of the Georgia ACLU.

The ACLU report, entitled, "Police Procedures in Atlanta," quoted from a study on the Watts riot which said:

". . . Despite claims by city officials that there are avenues open to file complaints, the community has little faith that claims of police malpractice will receive a fair hearing. . . . No matter where complaints are registered, they are forwarded to the police department for investigation. Police officers are charged with investigating the actions of other police officers."

The Georgia ACLU report said: "The findings apply with equal force to the Negro community in Atlanta."

RESEARCHED BY 4

The report, compiled by four researchers and edited by Florence B. Robin, executive director of the Georgia ACLU, said:

". . . we must point out that the Atlanta Police Department does not operate in a vacuum. Is attitudes and activities stem from the customs, the traditions and the goals of the general community and its leadership. Virtually nothing, for example, has been done to deal with the problems of social deviants in a constructive, coordinated way by city authorities and community leaders. It is not surprising then, that the police employ illegal round-up techniques against alcoholics, homosexuals and prostitutes. These techniques are entirely consistent with community indifference to these groups."

The report said public hearings established by the police department in December 1965 "beaten insensible by a police officer while handcuffed."

2. An officer opened fire on a suspect when it "appeared" that he had a stone in his hand.

3. Officers attempting to arrest a man for speeding shot him because he was trying to kick them.

4. A Negro woman heard a noise late one night, went to investigate and found two policemen standing in her home. She said they had no warrant and had broken the lock on her door. She said they were searching for someone who was not there.

OTHER CASES TARGETS

The report also was critical of police handling of cases involving alcoholics, prostitutes and homosexuals.

In a section on confessions and the police's obligation to inform a suspect of his rights, the ACLU quoted an unidentified Atlanta police lieutenant.

"You bet I object to having a lawyer around when the police interview a prisoner. Those guys will do anything to protect the bums we get in here. That's because a lawyer has to make a buck, just like everybody else. It's getting so you can hardly get a confession any more."

The review board proposed by the ACLU would be similar to one recently created in New York which has stirred widespread criticism and controversy.

The ACLU said many "dedicated" men were members of the Atlanta police department and it realized that the department faces the same problems encountered by any big city police force — shortage of manpower, rising population and the resultant increase in crime.

The report said public hearings established by the police department in December 1965 failed to get much response because:

1. Many persons had never heard of the hearings.

2. Those who had "did not believe the police would listen to their complaints impartially, so attendance would be a waste of time."

STAGED INTERVIEWS

The ACLU said it got those views from a series of 88 interviews, 50 of which were conducted in Negro neighborhoods.

The report asserted that Atlanta police usually were courteous to "a , white-collar, middle class individual . . ."

"But when the encounter is between a poor white, or a Negro — poor or not — the rules of courtesy, arrest, search and seizure are violated with monotonous regularity," the report said.

The ACLU gave several examples as reported by persons who said they were mistreated. One statement came from Mrs. Eunice Cooper, an executive with the Medicare program.

The report quoted Mrs. Cooper:

"I overparked my car, and it was towed away and impounded. I went down to police headquarters to pay the impounding fee and to get it back. I asked the officer how long it would take, since I was due at a meeting and was very anxious to get there on time. 'Well,' he said, 'it looks like we got ourselves a real smart nigger,' then he began to call me other names, impugning my character and morals.

APPLIED PRESSURE

"The policeman twisted my arm behind my back and put his other arm around my neck and applied hard pressure . . . While he was choking me, another policeman jumped over the counter and helped the first one drag me down to the ground.

"They threw me into the Negro women's detention room and charged me with disorderly conduct. Luckily, on acquaintance who had accompanied me to Police Headquarters saw what was happening, so I was able to get bail."

The report also alleged:

1. A Negro truck-driver was arrest a man for speeding shot him because he was trying to kick them.

4. A Negro woman heard a noise late one night, went to investigate and found two policemen standing in her home. She said they had no warrant and had broken the lock on her door. She said they were searching for someone who was not there.

Freeman, Moore Clash at ACLU Meeting

By MICHAEL DAVIS

Atlanta Alderman Richard Freeman clashed with Negro attorey Howard Moore Thursday night at the annual meeting of the American Civil Liberties Union.

Moore, who has represented the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee in a number of legal actions, charged that Atlanta police methods were similar to "the policy of the United States in Viet Nam."

Freeman took sharp issue with Moore's statement and said the Atlanta Police Department acted as judiciously as possible in all the cases it handled.

Capt. Morris Redding of the Atlanta Crime Prevention Squad told Moore that a committee had been set up to hear grievances, but that few complaints have been heard as a result of the more than 500,000 arrests made in the city in the last year.

Moore brought up the case of Eunice Cooper in which it has been alleged that she was manhandled by police officers when she went to police headquarters to recover her car, which had ben impounded for being parked illegally.

Freeman told Moore that he had reviewed the records in the case and that after an investigation by the aldermanic police committee had found the charges to be "incredulous."

Charges of police brutality erupted later in the meeting from Hector Black of the Vine City Council and from other members of civil rights organizations.

Freeman, Redding and Police Supt. Fred Beerman said they would investigate all cases that had merit.

Requests that a civilian review board be appointed to investigate and possibly override actions of the police department were said by Freeman to be unwise at this time. He said any such body should be elected by the people if it is to serve all the people.

The first Georgia ACLU Civil Liberties Award went this year to attorney Walter Jones of Albany.

Bias Led To Attack, Tate Says

Atlanta Board of Education member Horace Tate charged Friday that "racial prejudice" is at the root of questions raised about the legality of his election.

Dr. Tate became the second Negro member of the board by defeating incumbent Seventh Ward member Glenn Frick in last fall's primary.

He qualified without a fee as a result of Fulton Superior Court Judge Durwood Pye's ruling that the city could not legally ask one. Frick paid before the decision.

A higher court later overruled Judge Pye.

Tate charged Friday that his seat was now being contested because his enemies felt they had nothing to lose since the city approved a $21.5 million school bond issue Tuesday.

He said that former Atlanta Board of Education President Oby Brewer Jr. had not questioned the legality of Tate's election earlier because it would have led to organized opposition by Negroes to the bond issue.

Pennsylvania Grads Hear Allen Praise Rights Laws

Special to The Constitution

HUNTINGDON, Pa. — Enactment of national civil rights legislation was described here Sunday by Atlanta Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. as one of six "landmarks of American liberty" of the past 100 years.

Ivan Allen Jr.

Mayor Allen was the commencement speaker at graduation exercises of Juniata College.

Besides civil rights legislation, the "landmarks" were listed by Mayor Allen as:

1. Abolition of human slavery; 2. Abolishment of child labor, which he called a "disguised but very cruel and very real" type of slavery; 3. Legalization of labor's right to organize and bargain collectively; 4. Legalization of women's right to vote; 5. Social Security legislation.

He recalled that each of these movements had encountered violent opposition but that after each was achieved "the predictors of doom were forced to eat their words."

The duty of voting goes with the rights of citizenship, said the Southern political leader, adding:

"It is most encouraging to all of us who believe in freedom — and most discouraging to all enemies of freedom — that more and more Americans, year by year, are accepting this responsibility of voting."

The number of Americans voting in presidential elections has increased more than five times during the 50 years from 1910-1960 when the nation's population was doubling, he said.

"These figures show that Americans are determined to stay free," he said.

Mayor Allen told the graduates:

"This year of your graduation marks the completion of a century of progress in our nation unmatched by any other nation since time began.

"You also are entering upon a second century of potential progress that blazes with challenges to achievements which will far eclipse all the attainments of the past century, brilliant as those have been."

'Guidelines' Road Bumpy, But Progress Made

(Mr. Peart is a member of The Birmingham News editorial page staff.)

ATLANTA

THE U. S. OFFICE of Education acknowledges it erred by overemphasizing the flexibility of the 1966 public school desegregation guidelines.

The frustrating result: Politicians, with an eye cocked at the voters, insisted they had gained major concessions from the federay agency. Consequently, local school districts, in many instances, have refused to accept the new desegregation standards.

Actually, the guidelines are flexible. They aren't a set of rigid regulations that can't be bent and which must be effected immediately.

But the degree of flexibility is conditioned on progress, the speed with which local districts are moving to comply with the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

The Office of Education realizes that a certain set of circumstances just won't apply in every situation. There are different patterns of "progress" in different areas, but for the OE, progress is the key.

DAVID SEELEY, HEAD of the Office of Equal Educational Opportunities for the Office of Education, made those points during a day-long seminar sponsored by the Southern Education Reporting Service in Atlanta last week-end.

Seeley told the seminar that the 1966 guidelines are "basically no different in theory from last year's guidelines." The 1965 guidelines, however, didn't require a "performance test." The ones issued this year do.

But, Seeley said, the politicians and many editorial writers attacked the new set of standards as illegal.

"As a result," he told the group of newsmen, who represented the 17 Southern and border states, "many schools are sitting back and seeing what the Office of Education will do. Even the moderate Southerners (who didn't seriously question the 1965 guidelines) are beginning to think they are unlawful."

He said such an unrealistic attitude was "disastrous—because the schools must comply." According to Seeley, the new guidelines contained no surprises for educators.

THE OFFICE OF EDUCATION'S strategy—issuing the regulations in March so schoolmen could make them effective this fall—backfired.

"The majority took no action," Seeley said, "when action was needed. The time lost will never be regained. The damage has been done."

Seeley said that Alabama sits at the bottom of the compliance totem poll. And Allen Alexander, Office of Education information officer who accompanied Seeley to Atlanta, agreed with a newsman that Alabama is the "most prickly thorn of them all."

Gov. George C. Wallace, of course, has urged Alabama educators not to sign the controversial compliance form, claiming that it's illegal. Now the governor reportedly will travel into some local areas to try to put pressure for non-compliance on local school boards.

"WE ARE TRYING to administer a law," Seeley said, "and the law says there can't be a dual (segregated) system. And Congress says if we don't have one system, then there will be no (federal) funds."

The OE official is aware of the de facto school desegregation in many Northern areas. But the law in its present form doesn't permit the federal agency to "grapple with that problem." He feels that "Northern school segregation is in many ways more severe, more harmful than that of the South."

Seeley made this comment in a recent speech: "Whatever the cause for the condition, the fact of the matter is that these schools are serving to perpetuate a brand of segregation which lacks even some of the mitigating factors of the paternalistic system of the South, and it is coupled with such a complex of welfarism, defeatism and alienation, that if it is not solved it will be the undoing of our society. It is certainly a more clear and present danger than any enemy beyond our borders."

In his address, Seeley said "schools are the key to racial segregation in America." The schools, he said, will "either help to bring about the desegregation of our society or they will serve as an instrument to preserve segregation."

THE U. S. OFFICE of Education is enveloped in problems. Seeley notes that the office has engaged in "little long-range planning because, unfortunately, we are always on the battlefronts."

The civil rights groups pressing for accelerated desegregation complain the OE is dragging its feet, that it isn't "putting the heat on" the local school districts.

The segregaionists contend the OE "is sitting down with Snick."

"But all we are trying to do," Seeley said, "is to follow the guidelines."

THE OFFICE OF EDUCATION'S task is touchy. Unquestionably, it has made—and even compounded—mistakes as it has implemented both the 1954 Supreme Court decision and 1964 Civil Rights Act.

But the office has made some headway, too, just as many local school districts have moved responsibly to meet the requirement of biracial classrooms.

Despite occasional jolts, progress has been made—for the most part quietly. The latter—in a quiet, calm, atmosphere conducive to learning—is a considerable educational asset.—WILLIAM PEART.

Vine City and Black Power

Vine City is fast becoming a sociologist's dream, for here in a six-by-four-block slum area in the heart of Atlanta one can study all the forces at work in the power politics of the civil rights movement.

But for anyone concerned with the plight of the poor people living there, Vine City is becoming a nightmare.

Up until about three weeks ago these people had a lot going for them. Following street-blocking "play-in" demonstrations the city moved in and, with federal help, built and staffed two playgrounds for children who had no place to play before except in the streets.

Then Mayor Ivan Allen announced a crash program of street repairs, improved sanitation services and better housing code enforcement there and in other slum areas. Other groups, including many United Appeal agencies, made plans to move in with financial help.

But when the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, fresh from its "Black Power" march in Mississippi, moved back into Vine City after a long absence, the area became a "no-man's land" for many organizations that were helping or getting ready to help.

Latest target of SNCC in Vine City is Hector Black, whom militant SNCC workers in the Atlanta Project try to ridicule as a "White Jesus." Hector Black is the guiding force behind the Vine City Council, a group that has been in the forefront of a campaign to bring attention to needs of the area. He came to Vine City under auspices of a Quaker group and has made a lot of enemies within and without the civil rights movement—and a lot of friends.

Just recently Mr. Black received a $4,700 government antipoverty grant for tutoring Vine City youngsters. This immediately brought protests from the Vine City Improvement Association which has been getting support from SNCC black-power advocates to oppose the Vine City Council.

And, over on the extreme right wing—again considering only the forces now at work in Vine City — is Dr. Martin Luther King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

All this leaves Hector Black in center aisle, and he and his organization are catching it from both sides. His motives are being challenged; he is being called pink and even darker shades of red, as well as "White Jesus."

But this Harvard educated self-styled slum fighter continues to work with his few white and Negro volunteers in Vine City. He is a thorn in the side of the slum lords and of some city officials who resent the pressures that result in crash improvement programs even in areas as long neglected as Vine City.

Which all brings us back to the forgotten people in Vine City—the people who live there. Some of them have taken sides in the power struggle, but most are still very much confused. SNCC sound trucks tour the streets on hot nights spewing racial hatred and "black power" slogans.

Many responsible groups that could go into Vine City and provide leadership to counteract this venom have decided to stay out. One of their leaders said his group would spend no more money there until "the confusion" is cleared up.

This must be music to the ears of SNCC workers in Vine City who say "Watts" in tones almost reverent.—JIM RANKIN.

Negroes Demanding Play Lot Clog Street with Game Here

By MICHAEL DAVIS

More than 40 Negro teen-agers protesting a lack of recreational facilities in the Mechanicsville area blocked traffic on Pryor Street SW for 30 minutes Tuesday night by playing football in the street.

Buses and automobiles at the corner of Hendrix Avenue and Pryor Street SW were forced to a halt from 7:15 to 7:45 p.m. until an elected official of Economic Opportunity Atlanta persuaded the demonstrators to leave.

Edward Moody, who identified himself to Atlanta police Capt. A. C. Bryant as a member of the Mechanicsville Civic League, promised another demonstration Wednesday night.

Moody said he was leading the protest because Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. and other city officials had reneged on promises to provide adequate recreational facilities for the neighborhood.

Bryant asked Moody to take the problem to city officials Wednesday morning.

"I know you need a place to play," said Bryant, "but there is nothing I can do about it right now. The street is certainly no place for a football game."

Moody, demanding "immediate action," refused.

"We want a playground," he shouted. "The school yard (Pryor Street School) is full of rocks and broken glass and we got just as good a chance of getting hurt there as we do in the street," he said.

"I know you don't want to block buses and traffic," said Bryant. "Why don't you clear the streets now and let's get this thing settled later?"

Meanwhile, Louis E. Peters, an elected representative to the Neighborhood Advisory Council Committee (NACC), an arm of Economic Opportunity, Atlanta, walked to the center of the crowd and said, "This ain't the way I do things. I want you people to break this thing up now. This doesn't solve the problem. You all know that Moody is leading you wrong."

Peters walked through the crowd speaking to the teen-agers individually, urging them to return to their homes.

As the crowd started to disperse, Moody said, "We'll be back tomorrow and this time we'll stay."

More than 200 persons watched the demonstration, according to estimates by police and newsmen.

Negro Summit's Leaders Deplore Use of Violence

ATLANTA

By MARJORY RUTHERFORD

Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee representatives—passing out posters reading "Who's Afraid of Black Power?" and "Stop Police Brutality"—showed up here Friday for an Atlanta Summit Leadership Conference.

There, the summit coalition of Negro community leaders and the Atlanta NAACP pledged "our strong cooperation with all the forces of law and order."

The Rev. Samuel W. Williams, NAACP president, had a few SNCC hecklers at a televised press conference at Friendship Baptist Church where he read a formal "Affirmation Atlanta" signed by 18 persons including Negro representatives to the Georgia Legislature, presidents of area Negro colleges, and business leaders.

The minister also presented, on behalf of the NAACP, a statement headed "Violence Is Not the Way!"

Both statements expressed concern over unrest in the Negro community.

"The events occurring in our city a few nights ago when a few people interfered with an officer of the law in the routine execution of his duty has caused some alarm and deep concern," the NAACP statement noted. " . . . Negro people have been and still are victims of injustices and wrongs. We are just as determined as any to work continuously and with vigor to eliminate any and all injustice in this city. We do not believe, however, that one wrong can be made right by committing another wrong. The way of violence, no matter by whom perpetrated, is wrong and creates more problems than it solves.

". . . There is a way to protest. The framework is set out in the Constitution. All people should work to see that it is preserved and honored, that all who live under it live by it. Violence or inciting to riot does neither of these."

The summit "Affirmation" cited "with pride the substantial progress . . . in many areas of our social, civil and economic life particularly in the last five years."

"For the first time," it declared, "many of us feel that we not only are a part of the city, but that we have deep and significant stakes in its welfare and in its progress."

ADVANCES NEEDED

Admitting there are "still areas in which we need to make more significant advances," the summit declaration expressed disturbance over "elements in the city which do not have the total welfare of the groups which they appear to represent."

"These individuals, we are afraid," the statement added, "believe that progress can be made through disturbing the best rather than working with other wholesome elements in our population to keep Atlanta headed in the right direction.

"We want all good citizens to know that while we deplore certain shortcomings still to be found in our social, economic and civil life that we do not feel that violence or the breaking of laws will be very helpful to achieve the complete human equality for which we work and for which we will continue to diligently strive to achieve.

"We pledge our strong cooperation with all the forces of law and order and that Atlanta will become a completely open city which we desire where every man regardless of his social, racial or economic status will have completely those opportunities for the good life which any other citizen may achieve."

STATEMENT SIGNERS

The summit statement was signed by the Rev. Mr. Williams, Atlanta alderman Q. V. Williamson, Sen. Leroy Johnson, Reps. William Alexander, Mrs. Grace T. Hamilton, John Grier, John T. Hood, NAACP executive secretary B. T. Smith, Dr. Martin Luther King Sr., father of the civil rights leader, AME Methodist Bishop E. L. Hickman, NAACP representative Mrs. Eunice Cooper, Morris Brown College President Dr. John A. Middleton, Moorehouse College President Dr. Benjamin Mays, Atlanta University President Dr. Rufus E. Clement, also a member of the Atlanta Board of Education, Spellman College President Dr. A. E. Manley, Interdenominational Theological Center President Dr. Harry V. Richardson, the Rev. M. R. Dinkins, and Charles Hart.

During the press conference the Rev. Mr. Williams several times told SNCC representatives who tried to engage him in debate that "this conference was not called for that purpose." SNCC representatives attempted to discuss an incident at the Atlanta Stadium involving Mrs. Hank Aaron, headlined in current issue of The Atlanta Inquirer.

SNCC workers passed out their own statement at the summit meeting. This statement recorded alleged "roughing up" and jail beatings of Negroes in March and April.

"Who will be next?" their statement ended. "We must join together to stop police brutality."

The summit and NAACP statements referred to an incident involving several hundred Negroes and a policeman Tuesday. Negroes had swarmed around the officer when he started to write a traffic citation for a Negro motorist. The officer was rescued by other policemen.

HATE, CHAOS RULE ATLANTA

'You Should've Seen It, Man ...It Was a Bad Scene'

By BILL WINN

A riot is a frightening experience. Everything is chaos, violence and hatred. People don't shout; they shriek, they cackle.

"Lady," an officer was saying, "Lady, we're on your side."

"I can't help it," she shrieked. "You sent me down that street and they broke out all the windows in my car. How am I going to get home? It's your fault."

"Lady," said the officer, his voice rising, "Lady, I told you . . ."

Shots crackle down the street. White reporters stick to the center of the street and watch lines of sullen black faces staring at them.

GLASS IS EVERYWHERE. The acrid smoke of a tear gas grenade hangs in the air, an invisible cloak that chokes and stings with incredible effectiveness.

Police attempt to charge a crowd only to encounter a wall of their own tear gas. It spins the men around like puppets. They fall back, temporarily blinded. From out of the darkness a mocking Negro laugh reaches the gasping policemen.

"My babies are in there," screams a Negro woman. Her face is streaked with tears from the gas. "My children are in that house."

Several men attempt to fight their way through the gas to reach the children. They can't make it. A Negro man climbs onto the roof and enters an open window.

"I don't think there are any kids in that house," one man says.

Suddenly, a man lurches out of the door. He is carrying a tiny child. Three more children and an old lady are brought out. They are all rushed to the hospital in an ambulance.

"It's gonna get dark man," says a young Negro. "It's gonna get dark. Watch out." He keeps his voice low so that police can't hear him. His friends can hear and they smile.

"Get them out of here," hollers a policeman. "Move back, move back!" A cordon of Negroes gives ground grudgingly.

SUDDENLY, there is the flat twang of a rifle shot. In the darkness it is hard to see what is going on, but the police rush toward a man near a white car. They arrest him and then spread out through an apartment development, their flashlight beams finding pair after pair of frightened but defiant eyes.

"Did that guy actually fire that gun?" a reporter asks. "Yeah, somebody threw a bottle and he just hauled off and shot. I think he hit a garbage can."

A car, its windows shattered, can be seen turned upside down on the pavement like a turtle on its back.

"Mayor Allen, his face splotched from the street lamp and the blue police lights, firmly stands behind the police force:

"The only brutality here has been against the policemen," he is saying. "They were provoked beyond all degree . . . I can't tell you what an effort we made."

POLICE SUDDENLY realize that a Negro man standing quietly in a crowd is wearing a pistol. They level their shotguns on him.

"Take his gun away and empty it," says the Mayor. "Give it back to him and tell him to go home."

Guns bristle everywhere. Carloads of police ride up and down the darkened streets, Guns sticking out of every window.

"Thank God for tear gas," says one officer. "If we hadn't of had that gas we would have been in real trouble. I mean it."

"They were throwing paving tile," says another policeman. "My God, somebody could have gotten killed."

"They would go into that store and buy soft drinks, chug-a-lug them, and then throw them at us," said a plain-clothes detective.

"You should've seen it, man . . . it was a bad scene."

73 JAILED IN NIGHT OF RIOTING; CHILDREN HURL ROCKS AT 2 CARS

Jenkins, Allen Blame SNCC

2 City Officials Vow to Take Firm Steps Against Outbreaks

By ORVILLE GAINES and RALEIGH BRYANS

Mayor Ivan Allen and Police Chief Herbert Jenkins Wednesday charged that Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) members were directly responsible for Tuesday's rioting near Atlanta Stadium.

In separate press conferences, the two officials promised that the city will deal firmly with further outbreaks of rioting, using whatever methods are necessary to control them.

"Mr. Carmichael will be met wherever he comes, under whatever conditions he seeks to impose," the mayor said. SNCC chairman Stokely Carmichael was reportedly among those urging the rioters along.

The mayor said the disorders were "the result of a deliberate attempt by certain members of SNCC to create an incident of this very nature." He promised that those members will be dealt with under the law if they committed any crime during the rioting.

CHIEF JENKINS, in an angry mood, said SNCC has gotten into the hands of "irresponsible and hoodlum leaders" and that its rank and file consists "mostly onstrated their opposition to violence and will give law and order good support. "Regrettably," he said, "there is a small group that advocates and provokes violence."

According to the chief, the police department has been aware for some time of a small group of people in Atlanta who stir up trouble, whatever the cause.

"Snick clearly demonstrated here in 1963 that is had gotten into the hands of irresponsible and hoodlum leaders," he said.

Fire department officials said a gasoline-filled bottle was hurled over the fence and into a window of the structure after the outbreak of racial violence near Atlanta Stadium Tuesday. Flames swept through the huge warehouse and sales offices, gutting the building. The fire department, undermanned because of a strike, was plagued with a number of false alarms and five other fires. No injuries were reported in this particular fire, according to officials.

Summit Negroes Call Meet Here

Heavily armed police Wednesday afternoon blocked off the Capitol Ave.-Ormond St. intersection where Tuesday's riot occurred. Several persons were arrested, including one with a "black power" emblem pasted across his chest. Police kept the area clear after reports were received that members of SNCC were en route there.

Atlanta police armed with shotguns, submachine guns and tear gas patrolled an area near Atlanta Stadium Wednesday where hundreds of Negroes rioted Tuesday.

The six-block wide area, stretching from the stadium southward on Capitol Avenue for eight blocks, seemed mostly normal, but police refused to dismiss the possibility of a second day of violence.

A COMMITTEE of 10 members was selected with the assignment of drawing up a list of grievances to be submitted to Mayor Allen. The committee met at the Economic Opportunity Atlanta, Inc., Wednesday afternoon.

The chief continued, "it (SNCC) is now the Non-Student Violent Committee. And we must and will deal with it accordingly."

WARNING that the police department uses only "live ammunition," the chief made it clear that the force presently is strengthening its organization and equipment to meet whatever demands are made upon it in the future.

"We've had quite a supply of riot equipment, including an armored car, on hand for years. Last night was the first time we've had to use it—and I hope it's the last. But it's ready to go. The ammunition and tear gas we had to use last night is being replaced now," the chief said.

Chief Jenkins pointed out that the great majority of both white and Negro citizens have demonstrated their opposition to violence and will give law and order good support. "Regrettably," he said, "there is a small group that advocates and provokes violence."

According to the chief, the police department has been aware for some time of a small group of people in Atlanta who stir up trouble, whatever the cause.

IN THE Southwest Atlanta area where the violence occurred, children went unperturbed to school Wednesday morning. City prisoners were cleaning up the broken glass and debris and the streets were quiet.

Around midnight Tuesday, half the 750-man police force was relieved and told to return to duty Wednesday at noon for another 12-hour shift. Normally the men work three eight-hour shifts.

The Atlanta Summit Leadership Conference, an organization composed of top-stratum Negro leaders, announced it would meet in special session Wednesday afternoon to explore ways of averting further difficulty. The organization asked Mayor Allen to attend its meeting and the mayor said he planned to be there.

The glass and the bricks and the spent shells lay over the street like a ragged blanket, and when the lights of a patrol car swept over the street the bits of glass would catch the light and sparkle like diamonds.

It was 8:30, and now the people had gone into their crowded frame houses and were peering through the windows and they could see the cops standing around in loose groups with their white helmets on their heads and their rifles cradled in their arms and, yes, it was much better now.

John Hood, a Negro member of the Georgia House of Representatives, stood under a spreading tree on the corner of Capitol Avenue and Little Street. The building to his back was the Capitol Avenue Elementary School, and a spotlight played on the cop in the white shirt, and the gun he held, as he perched on top of the school and scanned the street below him. It had been a long day.

John Hood wore a white dress shirt with a tie and no coat, and the sweat rolled down his face as he stood there and talked to the people gathered around him.

Somebody said, "When did you get here?"

Cong Continues Terror Attacks As Election Day Draws Near

SAIGON, Sept. 7 (AP)—American fighter-bombers again chopped up the two North Vietnamese rail lines between Hanoi and Communist China, the U.S. military command reported Wednesday.

In simultaneous blows at the vital supply links, Air Force F105 Thunderchiefs pounded the northwest line 102 miles from Hanoi Tuesday while others bombed the northeast line 55 miles from the capital.

Ground fighting slowed to scattered small actions, but reports of Viet Cong terrorism aimed at disrupting the national elections Sunday came from several sections of the country.

U.S. Air Force, Navy and Marine pilots flew 136 multiplane missions against North Viet Nam Tuesday, 20 short of their record. They hit oil depots, supply areas, a missile site and barges as well as the major rail lines.

The pilots bombed and strafed a 15-car train on the northeast line, destroying five box cars and damaging 10 and cutting the line in three places, the spokesman said.

On the northwest or Red River route, other Thunderchief pilots reported knocking out a bridge and ripping up the rails in three places.

Pilots reported bomb hits on three fuel dumps and said they damaged or destroyed 24 buildings, 16 bridges, 45 cargo barges, 13 junks and three antiaircraft sites. Navy fliers from the aircraft carrier Intrepid reported knocking out a surface-to-air missile site eight miles southwest of the coastal city of Vinh.

Demos Remain Temperate On Black Power, Use of Force

By CHARLES POU

Georgia candidates for governor Wednesday had a local color angle on black power as an issue in the Democratic primary. But all the contenders expressed their opposition to use of force in civil rights matters, in varying degrees of fervor, and the comments generally were temperate.

Headquarters of one candidate issued a strongly phrased denunciation of Tuesday's rioting — and a declaration on what should be done about it—and then sent telegrams to news media asserting the statement should not be used. A later comment was milder in tone.

Praise of handling of the situation by Atlanta Mayor Ivan Allen came from Hoke O'Kelley. "I'm glad that the mayor showed up so well," he said. "The fact that he's meeting his obligations courageously and intelligently makes it all worth while."

IN A POLITICAL way, candidate Lester Maddox offhand would be figured the man to benefit the most from racial disorders. He learned what was going on in Atlanta Tuesday while campaigning in Madison.

"The cities have compromised themselves repeatedly," he said. "That's what causes these things."

But later in the day he praised Atlanta police for their efforts to put down the riot and commended Negroes who took no part in the explosive situation.

"I denounce black power, racial violence, insurrection and civil anarchy," said Ellis Arnall. "I condemn lawlessness and irresponsible extremists of both races wherever they may be . . . The shameful action by Stokeley Carmichael and those members of the Student Nonviolence Coordinating Committee who precipitated civil disturbance and bloodshed . . . was revolting and irresponsible."

He added: "The responsible citizens of both races, white and Negro, want peace, harmony and tranquility. We uphold our

PINEY WOODS PETE Says:

DEAR MISTER EDITOR:

Our news services entertain as well as inform. One tells of an incident showing how skittish Russians can be. Off the Oregon coast a couple of American tuna fishermen came alongside a Russian craft. After preliminaries, a deal was struck to trade some American beer in the new snap-tab opener cans and cigarettes for Russian cigarettes and dolls.

When a Russian pulled the tab on the first can of American beer it began to hiss like a booby trap bomb. When they saw it didn't explode, the Russians lapped up the product of the American brewers' art.

By the way, I always thought a brewmaster was a skilled workmen, but hardly an artist. Maybe we'll be hearing of a one-man beer art show one of these days.

Yours truly,
PINEY WOODS PETE.

Defendants in Riot Cases Fined in Municipal Court

Atlanta Municipal Court Judge T. C. Little began meting out fines Wednesday against persons arrested during Tuesday's riot.

Of those appearing before him at a morning session, the judge gave seven fines of $27 or 25 days each for creating a disturbance. Another defendant was bound over to Fulton Criminal Court under a $500 bond each on charges of assault and battery and assault with a deadly weapon, and four others were assessed 30-day suspended sentences for disorderly conduct.

The judge also fined a 13th person $15 on a drunk charge.

A Negro witness at the hearing told Judge Little that police were "running around grabbing people like rabbits."

THE WITNESS said, "I agree that some of them needed to be arrested. But the majority didn't. Most of those arrested were put into jail just for making smart remarks to police. It was not a riot. It was just a show."

Judge Little interrupted the witness and said that it was "rather an expensive show, when cars are overturned and people get hurt with rocks and bricks."

An arresting officer testified that police used patience for two hours, trying to talk the crowd into dispersing. "We begged and pleaded for them to move off the streets. Instead they started throwing objects and on one occasion shook the mayor off the sons had been jailed and 16 had received hospital treatment for injuries suffered in the disorder. Most of the injured were struck by bottles, stones and bricks hurled by Negro residents of the Southwest Atlanta area. A number of them were motorists injured when bricks and rocks were hurled through windows of their cars as they drove through the area.

Crowds of Negroes formed Tuesday afternoon after 25-year-old Harold Louis Prather was shot in the hip and side as he tried to avoid arrest on an auto theft charge.

The shooting occurred at 1:18 p.m. A crowd of protesting Negroes began to gather and by 4:20 p.m., the point at which the disturbance turned into a riot, hundreds were milling in the street at Capitol Avenue and Ormond Street SE.

The crowds remained calm until officers said members of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) whipped them into a frenzy with "black power" chants and denunciations of policemen.

Among the SNCC personnel on hand as the unruly mobs formed was chairman Stokely Carmichael, who disappeared when the outbreak of stone and bottle tossing began.

Another SNCC member involved, police said, was William Ware. He was jailed on a charge of inciting a riot and creating a disturbance. Ware was being held on bonds totaling $10,050.

Mayor Ivan Allen, who earlier had urged the crowds ranging from an estimated 800 to 1,000 Negroes to accompany him to the Atlanta Stadium parking lot nearby for an orderly discussion, later ordered police to clear the streets.

MAYOR ALLEN also refused to withdraw police as recommended by a number of Negro ministers. Amid threats from the throngs, Mayor Allen told the Negro assembly that police would remain in the area until calm was restored.

Most injuries and damage to motor vehicles occurred from 6 to 10 p.m. After that, the him he had a warrant for his arrest, the officers reported.

Prather leaped from the car and ran. Harris ordered him to stop several times, then fired three times, with two of the shots striking Prather in the left side and hip, police reported.

Prather continued running until he collapsed on the front steps of his home at 39 Ormond St. SE, the officers said.

A crowd estimated at about 200 persons formed around the officers and wounded man, but police were able to remove Prather to a hospital with no problem from the assemblage.

WITNESSES to the shooting of Prather, including his half-brother, Emmit Boyd, 26, and two men in the car, Willie Frank Alfred, 43, of 77 Ormond St. and Tom Bush, 40, of 1041 Washington St., said they heard Harris tell Prather he was under arrest and shout several times for him to halt, investigators reported.

After milling about for a while the crowds grew in size, but order was maintained until the sudden outbreak of thrown bricks, bottles and stones.

The crowd was kept relatively under control until five minutes before 6 o'clock, when a barrage of bottles, stones and bricks was hurled from Ormond Street just west of Capitol. A car in that block was overturned, and policemen began advancing and firing pistols into the air.

OTHER OFFICERS fired tear gas into the crowds, and ordered the people back. Several persons in the group of demonstrators were injured by thrown objects, including a young Negro boy who was struck in the eye by an open pocket knife hurled from the throngs being forced back along Ormond. The child was rushed to the hospital in a police paddy wagon.

Mayor Allen, advancing with police and wiping his eyes with a handkerchief from exposure to the tear gas, ordered the officers to "clear it up. Move them out of here."

Police Capt. O. W. Jordan, also wiping his eyes from the tear gas, ordered patrolmen to block off the area for three drawn from the area. This group included Rev. J. T. Bickers, Rev. Clyde Williams, Rev. Hunter and state Reps. John Hood and J. D. Grier.

Most vocal of the group was the Rev. Mr. Williams, who insisted "these people own their houses and businesses here. They're not going to burn them down."

Mayor Allen and police officials disagreed. One officer said "there wouldn't be a plate glass window left if we pulled out." Another reported the only looting noted was of a soft drink truck driving along Fraser Street. Slowed by the crowds "it looked like a swarm of ants over it" as members of the crowd snatched bottles from crates on the truck, the officer said.

A number of police cruisers in the area were seen with smashed windows and windshields and dents from the rock and brick barrages. Only two had been reported so badly damaged they had to be towed to a garage, a police wrecker service spokesman said in the early evening.

AT 7:50 P.M. police were notified by radio that a detachment of state troopers, numbering about 300 men, were standing by at the stadium, fully equipped for riot control. At was treated for face cuts from a thrown rock and detective R. A. Davis received injuries from an exploding tear gas grenade.

All four officers were released after emergency treatment.

A hospital official said a woman and five children also came to the emergency room complaining of having suffered tear gas exposure. An examining physician reported no injuries and they were not treated.

The sporadic disturbances resulted in the entire police department being rescheduled for two 12-hour daily tours of duty. One shift was placed on duty from midnight Tuesday to Wednesday noon, and the other scheduled to work from noon until the following midnight "until further notice."

POLICE CHIEF Herbert Jenkins said Mayor Allen authorized him to set the police work week at 66 hours, with personnel to be paid overtime for all time above their normal 44 hours weekly.

The personnel problem was aggravated due to 89 officers having been detached for duty with the fire department due to the firemen's strike. At least one of the officers on fire department duty was on duty at the riot scene. This was Capt mer Lt. Gov. Garland Byrd was holding a press conference. For future records of Georgia political history, it can be observed by observers he was not aware the rioting was under way—but he commented: "When I get to be governor, there won't be enough room in the state for me and SNCC. after the shooting."

"What really happened?"

HOOD pulled a folded sheet of paper from his shirt pocket. "Here's the police report."

"What did you do?"

"I went to see his mother. Then I went to see him at the hospital. Then I came back. When I got back there were a lot of people milling around. The sound truck was here by then."

Someone out of the crowd asked, "What were they saying?"

"They were giving their version of what happened."

"Who was 'they'?"

"I don't know. I just can't say."

"Was it the SNCC truck?"

"I don't know that. It was a truck similar to the one they use."

"What effect did that have on the crowd?"

John Hood bit it off. "I think the whole thing could have been avoided if the truck hadn't come in here," he said.

And at that instant the empty beer bottle came flying out of the darkness up the street, and it was answered by a police revolver, and on Tuesday night in a Negro slum called Summerhill, everybody knew that the worst was yet to come.

THE LID became unscrewed on what is delicately called "the racial situation," and it began the same way most of the riots in far-away places like Watts and Hough and Harlem have begun.

A white policeman had his warrant. He found his man, in this case a 24-year-old Negro with a record already behind him, and told him to stop. The Negro ran. The policeman shot him. A crowd gathered. The crowd yelled "police brutality."

Violent young Negroes stirred the pot. And by 5:30 in the afternoon, four hours after the shooting, the city which has held its breath and tried to right the wrongs of the centuries, began finding out what Watts and hate and mistrust and passion and irrational thinking are all about.

Mayor Ivan Allen had been winding up a session with the ple here have run wild and torn up property. This is not true. This is the best way for you to be heard."

The crowd became nasty. A young Negro with bushy hair, wearing a faded blue sweatshirt and glasses, grabbed the megaphone and yelled, "The mayor told the preacher to say a prayer."

"Yaaahhhhh."

"But this ain't no place for prayers."

"Yaaahhhhh."

"Atlanta is a cracker town. It's no different from Watts. The mayor walks around on plush carpets and wears $500 suits and eats big steaks, while we eat pig foots and chitlins."

"Yaaahhhh."

AND THAT WAS all it took. A Negro fireman who is on strike tried to talk but they would not let him. They began rocking the patrol car and the mayor had to jump off or be thrown off. The mayor began walking again, asking everybody to go home and cool off, but they were in no mood for that.

"I have told y'all if five of these people will come and talk about this, we will do it."

"We're ready to talk right here, mayor."

"All right, let's clear the streets."

"Get your po-leece off our streets, mayor."

"Everybody. Go to your homes."

"You take that po-leece off the force that shot that boy."

"Let's go home. Come on, let's go home."

"You're picking on us."

"Nobody's picking on you."

From somewhere out of the crowd, a brick came hurtling into the air. Then a pop bottle. And a plank.

And another brick, which hit a young white patrolman named R. L. Braswell behind the ear. More than two dozen shots were fired into the air above Capitol Avenue by police.

THE CALL went out for tear gas. Negroes were dragged and thrown into paddy wagons.

by tear gas came out of the houses along Capitol Avenue. A white Falcon sedan lay on its side in a gutter, all the windows broken out.

But the little story which was the biggest, the one which probably told as much as any other about this long day and night, took place on the front porch steps of one of the two-story frame houses lining Capitol Avenue.

MAYOR ALLEN had asked several prominent Negro ministers to come and see what they could do about calming the people down, and after dark an orderly contingent came striding down the sidewalk wearing nice suits and ties and looking as calm as anything anybody had seen all through the day.

Rev. William Holmes Borders led the way. They walked up to the front porch, where nearly two dozen Negroes stood and craned their necks, and all tried to talk at the same time. Empty beer cans littered the yard.

"All right, all right," the Rev. Mr. Borders said. "Now let's be calm and talk about this thing."

A teen-ager in a dirty T-shirt and blue jeans said, "We want him back."

"Who?"

"That boy they come up here and took right out of the house."

"All right, we'll get him. Now, what else?"

One of the others said, "There was four in all."

"Yeah, and three of 'em was women."

"Can you give me their names?" the Rev. Mr. Borders said. "Give me their names and we'll get them out of jail for you."

"And we want you to get them po-leeces out of here."

"I'll talk to them about that, too."

"And we want our freedom."

"What do you mean by 'freedom'?"

"Uh . . ."

"Jobs? Education?"

"That's right."

"We'll see about that, too. Now what you've got to do is calm down."

"Get the po-leeces out of here, Reverend."

"If we ask the police to go to the outskirts of this area, you will be orderly?" said the Rev. Mr. Borders.

"Yes."

THEN IT went to pieces, all of it. A tall Negro, an older man with bushy hair, began raising his voice: "Business is business.

was chairman Stokely Carmichael, who disappeared when the outbreak of stone and bottle tossing began.

Another SNCC member involved, police said, was William Ware. He was jailed on a charge of inciting a riot and creating a disturbance. Ware was being held on bonds totaling $10,050.

Mayor Ivan Allen, who earlier had urged the crowds ranging from an estimated 800 to 1,000 Negroes to accompany him to the Atlanta Stadium parking lot nearby for an orderly discussion, later ordered police to clear the streets.

MAYOR ALLEN also refused to withdraw police as recommended by a number of Negro ministers. Amid threats from the throngs, Mayor Allen told the Negro assembly that police would remain in the area until calm was restored.

Most injuries and damage to motor vehicles occurred from 6 to 10 p.m. After that, the streets were quiet and patrolled by policemen in cars equipped with shotguns, rifles and submachineguns.

But an outbreak of fire alarms followed, including two in which Molotov cocktails were used. Fire department officials said a gasoline-filled bottle was hurled through a window of the Sexton Brothers Tire Co. at 717 Ashby St. NW. Flames quickly swept through the huge warehouse and sales offices, gutting the building and contents.

The loss was expected to run into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

An undermanned fire department, bolstered by 89 Atlanta policemen assigned to duty with them, was plagued throughout the night with a number of false alarms and five other fires.

AMONG THEM was the fire bombing of a one-story frame house at 150 Dahlgren St. SE. The home, occupied by Thomas McDowell, caught fire from the incendiary device tossed on the roof, but the fire was quickly brought under control, a fire department spokesman said.

These were the only two blazes specifically listed as arson by fire officials. But others of "a suspicious nature" included a fire in a vacant building at Glen Iris Drive and Forrest Avenue; a blazing pile of scrap lumber at Englewood and Boulevard Drive NE, and a pile of crossties found burning at Grant Street and the railroad, fire officials said.

Another fire, which destroyed a one-story frame building at 1449 Simpson Road, NW, was caused by an electrical short circuit, Battalion Chief H. H. Wright reported.

The fires occurred between 11 p.m. and 3 a.m.

Seventeen automobiles had been reported damaged in the rioting, including a number of police cars with smashed windsheilds and windows.

No looting was reported during the night, but two market owners had plate glass windows shattered by bricks which witnesses said were hurled by young Negroes.

These incidents were at Buehler's Market, 1021 Georgia Ave. SE, and Sol Shafer Grocery, 1992 Boulevard Drive NE.

THE INCIDENT which triggered the rioting began shortly after 1 p.m. Tuesday. Detective R. H. Kerr and patrolman Lamar Harris reported they attempted to take Harold Louis Prather into custody on an auto theft charge.

They saw a car driven by Prather stop for a traffic light at Ormond and Capitol, and Harris called Prather and told ly under control until five minutes before 6 o'clock, when a barrage of bottles, stones and bricks was hurled from Ormond Street just west of Capitol. A car in that block was overturned, and policemen began advancing and firing pistols into the air.

OTHER OFFICERS fired tear gas into the crowds, and ordered the people back. Several persons in the group of demonstrators were injured by thrown objects, including a young Negro boy who was struck in the eye by an open pocket knife hurled from the throngs being forced back along Ormond. The child was rushed to the hospital in a police paddy wagon.

Mayor Allen, advancing with police and wiping his eyes with a handkerchief from exposure to the tear gas, ordered the officers to "clear it up. Move them out of here."

Police Capt. O. W. Jordan, also wiping his eyes from the tear gas, ordered patrolmen to block off the area for three blocks on each side of Capitol Avenue. This confined the activity to an area eight blocks deep and six blocks wide, along Capitol from Glen Street on the north to Vanira Avenue southward.

Several protesting young men were hustled into patrol wagons at Ormond and Capitol immediately after the tear gas barrage. Two young women on Ormond just east of Capitol shouted obscenities at policemen as they ordered the people from the street and sidewalk into their homes.

Both women were arrested a few minutes later when they hurled concrete block chunks through the windows and windshield of a police car parked nearby.

ARRESTS were sporadic at first, although a total of 63 persons had been taken to jail by 11 p.m. Among the arrested was William Ware, a SNCC member who reportedly is responsible for police department public hearings last December on his charges of "police brutality" while in jail.

Ware also initiated a campaign last month in Vine City to raise $35,000 appeal bonds for 12 SNCC pickets arrested and convicted after a brawl with police at the Army Induction Center in Atlanta.

Two cars passing through the area, one eastbound on Ormond and another going west, driven by white occupants, had smashed windshields and rear windows. The driver of one had blood on his face.

Among Negro ministers who sought to calm the situation around 7 p.m. were Rev. William Holmes Borders and Rev. Robert Hunter.

"We want to get what you want," the Rev. Mr. Borders told one protesting youth, "but you'll have to tell us what it is."

The youth, who identified himself as Bobby Upshaw, said he wanted a relative who had been arrested released, and three other persons who he said were not guilty of any wrongdoing freed. Upshaw said he was not a member of any organization.

AS DARKNESS approached around 7:30 one young Negro shouted, "You'd better get these police out of here before 9 o'clock."

Just before 8 p.m. Rev. Ralph Abernathy of the Southern Christian Leadership Council arrived and suggested to Mayor Allen that the crowd of protesting people be moved to the Atlanta Stadium and their complaints heard there.

Other Negro leaders who crowded around Mayor Allen just outside the Capitol Avenue Elementary School argued that all policemen should be with-

They're not going to burn them down."

Mayor Allen and police officials disagreed. One officer said "there wouldn't be a plate glass window left if we pulled out." Another reported the only looting noted was of a soft drink truck driving along Fraser Street. Slowed by the crowds "it looked like a swarm of ants over it" as members of the crowd snatched bottles from crates on the truck, the officer said.

A number of police cruisers in the area were seen with smashed windows and windshields and dents from the rock and brick barrages. Only two had been reported so badly damaged they had to be towed to a garage, a police wrecker service spokesman said in the early evening.

AT 7:50 P.M. police were notified by radio that a detachment of state troopers, numbering about 300 men, were standing by at the stadium, fully equipped for riot control. At that time a police official estimated about 750 policemen were in the riot area.

After hearing the suggestions of the Negro ministers and the two representatives, Mayor Allen told them "we will remain here during the night."

A few minutes later one shot rang out and a patrolman said he fired into the air when a beer bottle was thrown into the street from apartments at 783 Capitol Ave. The bottle shattered in the street without hitting anyone.

The list of injured treated at hospitals numbered 16 persons. A number of policemen were struck by various items thrown but did not leave the scene for treatment.

THE INJURED were:

Eighteen-month-old Bobby D. Richards Jr., of 307 Woodward Ave. SE. The child was treated at South Fulton Hospital for glass cuts received when the windshield of his father's car was smashed by a brick at Vanira Avenue and Capitol Avenue.

—Montine Scarborough, 64, of 609 Cherokee Ave. SE, head injury from being hit by a brick on Capitol Avenue.

—Dorothy Hart Price, 24, of 733 Capitol Ave., body cut from being hit by brick.

—Robert Lee Moore, 36, of 307 Woodward Ave. SE, admitted to Grady Hospital with broken jaw from being hit by a brick.

—Mozelle Ridley Ellison, 20, of 34 Ormond St. SE, tear gas in eyes.

—Ernestine Smith, 14, of 932 Fern St., tear gas.

—Eloise Harriett Pitts, 22, of 783 Capitol Ave., tear gas.

—Donnie Harris, 6, of 11 Ormond St., tear gas.

—Curtis Lindley Jr., 5, 11 Ormond St., tear gas.

—Laura Jane Chandler, 14, of 11 Ormond St., tear gas.

—Roosevelt Williams, 17, of 976 Washington St., SE, facial injuries from thrown object.

—Joe Lamar Thaxton, 17, of 373 Augusta Ave. SE, face cuts from a thrown rock.

FOUR POLICEMEN, including two injured in a traffic accident as they rushed to aid fellow officers. Patrolman C. J. Spicer suffered arm, leg and shoulder injuries, and detective C. O. Hestley received arm and back injuries in the collision.

Investigating officers said a car occupied by detectives Hestley and B. L. Barron was struck from the rear by officer Spicer's car as the detective car braked to avoid a street sweeper when an oncoming vehicle failed to yield right of way to the police vehicles. The detective car was catapulted into a street sweeper by the collision with patrolman Spicer's car.

Patrolman Charles Brownlee

an and five children also came to the emergency room complaining of having suffered tear gas exposure. An examining physician reported no injuries and they were not treated.

The sporadic disturbances resulted in the entire police department being rescheduled for two 12-hour daily tours of duty. One shift was placed on duty from midnight Tuesday to Wednesday noon, and the other scheduled to work from noon until the following midnight "until further notice."

POLICE CHIEF Herbert Jenkins said Mayor Allen authorized him to set the police work week at 66 hours, with personnel to be paid overtime for all time above their normal 44 hours weekly.

The personnel problem was aggravated due to 89 officers having been detached for duty with the fire department due to the firemen's strike. At least one of the officers on fire department duty was on duty at the riot scene. This was Capt E. O. Mullen, whose normal duty is in the license bureau.

sit-ins at restaurants.

"Yesterday and last night (Tuesday)," the Chief said, in referring to the riot, "is a day we'd like to forget. I'm sure we've gained strength and knowledge from it. The Atlanta Police Department proved to me that, as I've often said, it compares with the best of any police department anywhere."

At a conference with superior officers Wednesday morning the chief was informed that several of those arrested during the riot already were wanted by the department for various crimes. He also was told that the city remained relatively calm during the early morning hours with no trouble of significance being reported.

Officers have been instructed to inspect all riot equipment and replenish whatever is needed to meet further trouble.

A court clerk said records of the police department show that 33 persons arrested during the riot on disturbance charges chose to post $15 cash collateral bonds each rather than appear in court for a hearing.

Twenty-seven others are scheduled for hearings later Wednesday and Thursday.

ALBANY publisher James Gray commented: "Black power has exploded in Atlanta. Anger is the obvious reaction but sorrow is the true result. Stokely Carmichael and his followers posed the threat to the nation on the Meet the Press television program three weeks ago but liberal apologists chose to excuse their jungle talk. There is no excuse . . .

The candidate said the question "no longer is one of civil rights—it is a matter of lives."

He asked, "When is the world of the so-called liberal politicians, who have sold their souls to the racial bloc vote, going to wake up?"

layed report announced the loss of a Navy F8 Crusader Monday night. The carrier plane was shot down 50 miles south of Hanoi and the pilot is missing. It was the 362nd plane announced lost over the north and the second shot down that day.

No significant ground action was reported by American spokesmen today, but South Vietnamese headquarters reported its forces killed 74 Viet Cong in three engagements Tuesday.

In the largest, Vietnamese Rangers killed 50 Viet Cong while taking light casualties only eight miles northeast of Saigon, a spokesman said.

In another action 48 miles southwest of Saigon, Vietnamese infantrymen reported killing 16 Viet Cong and capturing 28, while their own casualties were reported very light. In a third encounter 56 miles southwest of Saigon, Vietnamese troops reported killing eight and sustaining no casualties of their own.

U.S. forces in South Viet Nam swelled to about 305,000 men with the landing of 1,600 troops of the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment from three American transport ships at Vung Tau, 45 miles southeast of Saigon. A 400-man advance party arrived several days ago and the rest of the 4,500-man regiment will be put ashore by Sunday.

Under command of Dallas-born Col. William W. Cobb, 49, the power-packed regiment from Ft. Meade, Md., is equipped with about 1,000 vehicles, including the first of a type of heavily armed and fortified personnel carriers modified for use in guerrilla warfare. The regiment's prime mission will be road-clearing.

New terror bombings and intelligence reports pointed to a buildup of Communist violence in the final four days before South Viet Nam's election of a 117-member constitutional assembly Sunday.

A rash of bombings in the Saigon area and in the northern city of Hue injured 16 persons in the past 48 hours. Officials said a captured Viet Cong document ordered attacks on vital election personnel and "all others who are forcing our people to vote."

Premier Nguyen Cao Ky told newsmen the success of his first tentative step toward democratic rule could not be measured by the size of the vote. But he said his government would consider a 60-70 per cent turnout of the nearly five million eligible voters satisfactory.

In an incident not linked with the election, the Viet Cong ambushed a drill platoon at the South Vietnamese Thu Duc military school seven miles northeast of Saigon Tuesday.

A Vietnamese spokesman said government casualties were light and Viet Cong losses were not known.

U.S. B52 bombers struck a suspected Viet Cong troop concentration and headquarters 75 miles north of Saigon in Phuoc Long Province on the Cambodian border today.

The U.S. command said American Marines making a follow-up sweep of a battle Monday found 47 enemy bodies to raise the total of enemy killed in the engagement to 73. The fighting took place 18 miles southwest of Danang when Leathernecks of the 9th Marine Regiment clashed with an entrenched enemy force of 500 to 600 men.

a Negro slum called Summerhill, everybody knew that the worst was yet to come.

THE LID became unscrewed on what is delicately called "the racial situation," and it began the same way most of the riots in far-away places like Watts and Hough and Harlem have begun.

A white policeman had his warrant. He found his man, in this case a 24-year-old Negro with a record already behind him, and told him to stop. The Negro ran. The policeman shot him. A crowd gathered. The crowd yelled "police brutality."

Violent young Negroes stirred the pot. And by 5:30 in the afternoon, four hours after the shooting, the city which has held its breath and tried to right the wrongs of the centuries, began finding out what Watts and hate and mistrust and passion and irrational thinking are all about.

Mayor Ivan Allen had been winding up a session with the Board of Aldermen, trying to solve a walkout of 500 city firemen, when he heard what was developing.

He had walked up and down the streets trying to talk to the crowd of nearly 1,000 Negroes, but he had gotten nowhere. He had climbed atop a police car with Capt. Morris G. Redding, head of Atlanta's Crime Prevention Bureau, and tried to talk from there through a brown megaphone.

THE CROWD still would not listen. Finally the mayor handed the megaphone to a Negro clergyman, Rev. Robert Hunter of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. Hunter, in his white collar and black coat, was supposed to stop it.

"The press," he screamed, "has made it seem that the peo-

"We're ready to talk right here, mayor."

"All right, let's clear the streets."

"Get your po-leece off our streets, mayor."

"Everybody. Go to your homes."

"You take that po-leece off the force that shot that boy."

"Let's go home. Come on, let's go home."

"You're picking on us."

"Nobody's picking on you."

From somewhere out of the crowd, a brick came hurtling into the air. Then a pop bottle. And a plank.

And another brick, which hit a young white patrolman named R. L. Braswell behind the ear. More than two dozen shots were fired into the air above Capitol Avenue by police.

THE CALL went out for tear gas. Negroes were dragged and thrown into paddy wagons. Bricks and bottles flew, and people ran in all directions, and the air was filled with screams and shouts and shooting, and anyone who was there got a taste of what it is like to be caught in the middle of a firefight in the jungles of Viet Nam.

Later, everybody would have his story to tell. A Negro policeman caught another Negro wearing a .38 caliber pistol, unloaded it, lectured him and let him go.

A newsman rushed into a house and asked to use the telephone and was given a towel and Vaseline for his reddend eyes, burning from tear gas. People passing through the area, on their way home, poked their heads out of friends' houses and asked if they could stay on the streets long enough to make it home.

The cries of children affected

"Can you give me their names?" the Rev. Mr. Borders said. "Give me their names and we'll get them out of jail for you."

"And we want you to get them po-leeces out of here."

"I'll talk to them about that, too."

"And we want our freedom."

"What do you mean by 'freedom'?"

"Uh . . ."

"Jobs? Education?"

"That's right."

"We'll see about that, too. Now what you've got to do is calm down."

"Get the po-leeces out of here, Reverend."

"If we ask the police to go to the outskirts of this area, you will be orderly?" said the Rev. Mr. Borders.

"Yes."

THEN IT went to pieces, all of it. A tall Negro, an older man with bushy hair, began raising his voice: "Business is business. I work with white men every day and I get along. But when they start fooling around with my brothers, that's it. I don't care anymore. Long as his skin's the same as mine, he's my brother."

"Yeah. Hey, man, they shot that cat in the back. Right in the back."

"I tell you," the older one yelled, "if they don't get 'em out of here by 9 I'm gonna get me some stuff."

"That's right."

Me, too. Right in the back, man."

The Negro ministers, their shoulders slumped, walked away from the porch. They had not been able to reason with their own. That was the trouble Tuesday in Summerhill. Nobody could reason with anybody. The only thing anybody could understand was bricks and tear gas.

City Officials Show Anger; but Criticism by Negro Leaders Is Tempered

9/8/66

By ROY REED

Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, Sept. 7—The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, chief advocate of black power, countered new heights of hostility from its home town today as a result of the Negro riot yesterday.

Most criticism came from white officials and politicians. A few Negro leaders voiced cautiously worded criticism, but others, while not defending the student committee, emphasized that a potential for racial explosion had existed in the neighborhood for some time.

Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. and Police Chief Herbert Jenkins promised stern action to keep the committee from inciting trouble.

"It is now the Nonstudent Violent Committee," Chief Jenkins said as he announced that the police force was strengthening its riot control organization. "We must and will deal with it accordingly," he said.

Stokely Carmichael, the 25-year-old chairman of the committee, who made famous the cry for black power, was singled out for intense condemnation. He was on the scene twice during yesterday's disturbance.

Mayor is Angry

Mayor Allen, clearly angered, said:

"Mr. Carmichael will be met wherever he comes, under whatever conditions he seeks to impose."

Several candidates for the Democratic nomination for Governor in next Wednesday's primary joined in the denunciation

Ellis Arnall, the most liberal candidate and the election favorite, called the student committee's action "shameful." He said, "I denounce black power, racial violence, insurrection and civil anarchy."

Several Atlanta Negro leaders deplored the rioting. A few offered cautiously worded criticisms of the student committee, but most avoided challenging the organization directly.

A spokesman for the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference said, "We condemn the violence." But he refused to comment on the student committee beyond noting that it had filled a leadership vacuum in the area where the riot occurred.

The Rev. Roy Williams, vice president of the Summerhill Civic League in the riot area, was less restrained.

"Before Snick [the committee] arrived we had them under control," he said. "They whipped them up with hate."

Student committee officials avoided reporters and could not be reached for comment.

The Atlanta city administration has never been friendly toward the militant civil rights organization, which has had its headquarters here since it was organized in 1960. The official attitude has become even more hostile as the committee policy has turned toward black power and away from nonviolence in recent months.

Committee members led by Mr. Carmichael were active in a crowd of Negroes that threatened a white policeman after the arrest of a committee member on a traffic charge Aug. 3. A Traffic Court judge disposed of that delicate case by fining the member $30.

A few days later, several committee members took part [illegible] by a group of

A few days later, several committee members took part in an attempt by a group of antiwar demonstrators to force their way into a Army induction center here.

Facing a different judge, one demonstrator was held for grand jury action on an insurrection charge, which carries a maximum penalty of death. Two others were sentenced to 90 days in jail.

William Ware, the student committee's Atlanta project director, was charged with inciting to riot and creating a disturbance yesterday. He entered the riot area with a sound truck and denounced the police. His bond was set at $10,050 and he remained in jail today.

During the disturbance, hundreds of Negroes attacked the police with stones, sticks and bottles. The violence was touched off when a detective shot and wounded a fleeing Negro he was trying to arrest on a charge of car theft. Members of the student committee milled through the crowd that gathered and some used a loud speaker to denounce the "racist police."

16 Are Injured

Sixteen persons were injured, several cars were damaged and between 60 and 70 persons were arrested during the rioting, which occurred on Capitol Avenue two blocks from Atlanta's new $18-million stadium.

A large police force patrolled the area today. About 10 persons were arrested in the afternoon when they refused to break up a street corner rally.

A Molotov cocktail was thrown into a building in another Negro area about two miles away early this morning. The building, housing a tire company, was heavily damaged.

Four less serious fires, which officials considered possible cases of arson, were reported. Fire fighting was hindered because about 500 firemen are on strike.

The riot area, on the edge of a community known as Summerhill, is considered fertile ground for racial trouble.

Mr. Williams said:

"I have told our city politicians we were sitting on a powder keg. The conditions here are some of the worst in Atlanta."

The Community Council of the Atlanta Area, Inc., recently studied the area and said that the chances of an outbreak were "good." The council noted poor housing, dislike of the police, few recreation facilities and skepticism toward the city's promises of help.

The student committee has worked in the area several months.

ATLANTA

Text of Summit Statement Condemning Violence Here

Here's the text of the statement issued Wednesday by the Atlanta Summit Leadership Conference concerning Tuesday's racial turmoil. The conference is composed of representatives of major civil rights groups here. The statement:

Atlanta is not by far a perfect city. Yet it is too good to be destroyed by simple-minded bigots. Our work must be to build the city, not to wreck it.

We believe in demonstrations and in protests. But we are unalterably opposed to violence. So we ask our citizens all over the city to refrain from cooperating with those who would make you the tools and victims of violence. Violence is not the way to rectify the wrongs done Negro people for centuries. If we Negroes are going to resort to the techniques of violence and brutalities, so long used against us, then we are no better than they who have so abused us.

The thoughtful and responsible Negro citizens of Atlanta deplore and oppose the use of violence and condemn those who incite disorder. It was unfortunate that an officer, in the pursuit of his duty, shot a man, but that incident was no sufficient ground for anyone or organization to go into a community and incite the people. It is shameful that this irresponsible action resulted in injury to innocent children and it did nothing to correct or to solve any of the problems which the community faces. We call upon all the residents of the Summer Hill area and other sections of the city to assume responsibility and not to allow any individual to use them as pawns in any evil plot they may have to injure the city.

We accept responsibility for not having done all which we might have done to improve our city, to correct legitimate grievances, and to give all citizens sufficient reason to have pride. We therefore commit ourselves to greater effort NOW to make Atlanta a city which all people can appreciate, support and hold in high esteem.

King Condemns Rioting Here And Its Causes

Martin Luther King Jr., who left Atlanta Tuesday and flew to Chicago, issued this statement through his office:

"The riot in Atlanta followed the tragic and futile pattern of violence which has loomed over so many of our nation's cities. A riot can be justified neither on moral or practical grounds, however just the grievances of the rioters.

"It is still my firm conviction that a riot is socially destructive and self-defeating. On the other hand, while condemning riots it is just as important to condemn the conditions which bring riots into being."

He 'Bills' Snick For Wrecked Car

A 22-year-old Jonesboro man, who set out to pick up his wife at work late Tuesday, said Wednesday he wanted Snick chairman Stokley Carmichael to pay for his automobile.

Warren Rustin of 112 Heidi Lane, Jonesboro, said he was driving along Capitol Avenue Tuesday afternoon when a policeman suddenly directed him to turn on to Ormond Street SE.

Stokley Carmichael

Just as he turned, Rustin said, "I saw them bust a police car window just ahead of me. Then they turned on me. And just like that, they knocked every one of my car windows out.

"Then they started beating on me and hitting me with things," Rustin said. "I didn't think I was going to get out of there alive."

Rustin said he finally scampered out of his car, the "little kids started beating on me with their fists. I never saw nything like it."

He said policemen warded off his atackers, but his 1961 Falcon was left in ruins.

Rustin figures Stokley Carmichael should help him pay for it. He said he tried to find Carmichael Wednesday, but had no luck.

So he called Sen. Herman Talmadge. He said the senator sympathized with him.

100 Negro Students Rap SNCC

A group of 100 Atlanta Negro high school students declared Wednesday:

"We feel that the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee has now proved by Tuesday's exhibition that it is anything but non-violent, and that their organization is anything but non-violent, and that their organization has little interest in the peace and safety of the city as a whole."

The students' opinion was expressed in an "open letter" written as a result of Tuesday night's riot in southeast Atlanta. The letter was signed by about 100 students.

It said, "It is time for responsible Negro students to speak out, for we fear we have already waited too long. . . .

"Unfortunately, for the entire city, we are too often the quiet side of Negro Atlanta. Instead of us, it is the small group of irresponsible Negro students whose voices are heard the loudest."

The students said, "Understand that our criticism is not only of SNCC. We stand apart from any group or scheme that turns to selfish extremes or narrow-minded attacks against basic laws which hurt the general populace. This is our position."

ing auto theft were not permitted to talk on the loud speaker, Perry said. He said they knew the man was only shot and wounded.

Chief Judge Robert E. Jones said he, Judge Ed Brock and Judge Sparks had agreed that persons found guilty of having participated in the disturbance would be held for the grand jury under $1,000 bonds each on charges of riot.

Earlier in the day, judges hearing the cases had assessed penalties ranging from suspended sentences and $22 to $250 fines and 60 days in the city prison farm.

Judge T. C. Little assessed fines of $27 or 25 days against an estimated dozen who appeared at the morning court session. Judges Brock and Sparks promptly began handing out $250 fines and 60-day prison terms at the outset of the afternoon sessions.

Faye Bellamy, 28, and Monroe Sharp, 26, both of 2222 Telhurst Drive, requested continuances of charges against them to Sept. 15. Judge Brock agreed to continue the cases of disturbance, cursing and throwing rocks, but he hiked the appearance bonds of both from $150 to $1,000.

Miss Bellamy later was placed under $1,000 bond to Fulton Criminal Court on charges of assault and battery after she allegedly struck Bailiff J. C. Meintger on the head while being brought to the courtroom.

Jones said the court sessions would continue into the night.

Police said 73 persons were arrested Tuesday and 10 others were arrested Wednesday.

The remaining cases will be heard Thursday.

Two men identified by police as among the instigators of a riot which shook southeast Atlanta and injured at least 15 persons Wednesday were ordered held under $5,000 bonds each for the Fulton County Grand Jury on charges of inciting to riot.

They were William Ware of 142 Vine St., head of the local chapter of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, and Bobby Vance Walton, 20, of 556 Houston St. NE, identified as a SNCC member.

Municipal Judge Robert Sparks also placed both Ware and Walton under $1,000 bonds each on charges of disorderly conduct. Those charges were checked until Sept. 15 on the motion of Howard Moore, attorney for the two.

TELLS OF SOUND TRUCK

Negro Sgt. C. J. Perry said he arrested Ware and Walton at around 3:45 p.m. Tuesday at Capital Avenue and Ormond Street as they operated a sound truck in the area where police had shot and wounded an auto theft suspect.

About 20 to 25 persons were standing on the sidewalk when the sound truck arrived, Perry told the court. He said Ware began operating a loudspeaker shouting that police had murdered a man and also shouting police brutality.

Perry said he attempted to stop Ware and Ware looked at his nameplate and then shouted through the loud speaker: "Sergeant Perry tells me I'll have to leave, but first I want to tell you about the man that was murdered."

200 GATHERED

By this time, Perry said, 200 persons had gathered. He added they "were pushing . . . shoving and milling around. One of them tried to snatch my gun."

Perry said he took Ware to the patrol wagon and the crowd stormed the wagon, attempting to break the lock and turn the wagon over. He said some lay down in front of the wagon. Ware, he said, was on the inside, kicking at the door.

Under cross - examination, Perry said Ware was in the area at around 2:30 p.m. — soon after the shooting of Harold Louis Prather, 25 — and left, saying: "I'll be back."

Perry said after Ware was arrested, Walton got on the loudspeaker, yelling "black power" and urging people who wanted to tell about the "murder" to come forth. He said one woman got on the microphone and said Prather was murdered in handcuffs because he ran a red light.

Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey joined scores of Atlantans and Georgians Wednesday in congratulating Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. for the stand he took late Tuesday as Negroes rioted up and down Capitol Avenue.

The Vice President reached Allen at WSB Radio and Television, where the mayor was being interviewed, and told him:

"If there is a hero on the domestic scene today, it's Ivan Allen of Atlanta. I don't know of any mayor who has done more in the field of human relations and community progress than you have. That wonderful city of yours has been a beacon light to a lot of us."

POLICE LAUDED

Humphrey, who said, "I used to be a mayor of a city myself," also commended Atlanta's police department.

"That police department of yours was careful, restrained and effective. I want you to congratulate them for the outstanding professional manner in which they conducted themselves."

Allen replied, "It's a great city, sir, and I hope there will be no further repetition of this event and I'm grateful for your interest."

Humphrey said President Lyndon B. Johnson joined him in his congratulations.

The mayor went to the riot scene Tuesday afternoon to try to get the rioters to "sit down and talk with me." As he walked and talked, stones and bottles flew around him. He was jostled off the top of a police car as he tried to reason with the rioters.

Atlantans and people from all over the state called and wired Allen Wednesday commending him for his courage and the determined stand he took during the violence.

mounted Wednesday as the Atlanta Summit Leadership Conference, composed mostly of Negro leaders and commanding much support, came out strongly against Snick.

STAND DESTROYED

And Wednesday night a Snick storage stand and contribution center at Magnolia and Graves streets in Vine City was torn down, stacked in a neat pile and burned. Destroyed were stacks of literature advocating black power, ending the war in Viet Nam, charging police brutality, and black panther signs.

Police Sgt. Claude Dixon, who has been assigned to the troubled Vine City area since it first became a Snick stronghold, said it began this way:

During a door-to-door canvass Wednesday in Vine City, the Rev. W. C. Williams, pastor of St. John's Church in Summer Hill, and Episcopal Minister J. H. Costen, asked Vine City residents to list their complaints.

DON'T WANT THEM

A crowd gathered and a Vine City resident told the Rev. Mr. Williams, "There ain't been nothing but trouble since they (Snick) has been here. We don't want them here. Let's burn them out."

The ministers and Dixon suggested that a petition be circulated for residents to sign, asking the group to leave Vine City, instead of resorting to violence.

A carpenter spoke up and said, "I thought 'black power' meant something. It does. It means trouble. We don't want shotguns and tear gas here. We want them out."

BURNING OCCURS

The burning occurred later, Dixon said.

Shortly before midnight Wednesday numerous instances of vandalism and minor violence was reported in the Summer Hill riot area.

Several fights between Negroes were reported. Vandals broke the window out of a business establishment in the area. There were also reports of gun shots and firecrackers being set off.

Policemen who got a breather in the early part of the evening once again unsheathed their shotguns and other special duty equipment to keep the brush fire incidents from erupting into further violence.

CHARGE BY MAYOR

Meanwhile, Mayor Ivan Allen Jr., who tried to calm the angry Negroes during Tuesday's troubles, charged Wednesday that SNCC was directly responsible for the rioting.

"If Stokely Carmichael (national chairman of SNCC) is looking for a battleground, he created one last night, and he'll be met in whatever situation he cares to create," the mayor said.

Carmichael, who was in the riot-torn area for a short time Tuesday, was not in sight there Wednesday. He had reservations for a Wednesday afternoon flight to New York, but didn't show up. His whereabouts was not known Wednesday night.

The Atlanta Summit Leadership Conference, representing the top civil rights groups in the city, issued a statement calling on "citizens all over the city to refrain from cooperating with those who would make you the tools and victims of violence."

VIOLENCE NOT WAY

"Violence is not the way to rectify the wrongs done Negro people for centuries," said the statement, read by the Rev. Samuel Williams at a meeting at the Friendship Baptist Church.

"It is shameful that this irresponsible action (the riot) resulted in injury to innocent children and it did nothing to correct or to solve any of the problems which the community faces. We call upon all the residents of the Summer Hill area and other sections of the city to assure responsibility and not allow any individual to use them as pawns in any evil plot that they may have to injure the city," the statement said.

Mayor Allen appeared at the meeting before the statement was issued. He told the group that outsiders, not Atlanta Negroes, were responsible for the riot.

NO INCIDENTS

Allen left and 14 SNCC members showed up a short time later, but there were no incidents.

Tuesday's incident was touched off after a policeman shot and wounded a Negro car theft suspect at Ormond and Capitol. SNCC workers moved into the area shortly after the shooting.

Before the Summit Conference agreed on its statement, Wednesday, several Negro leaders pamphlets which stated:

"It is white cops who shoot black men in the back. It is Mayor Allen who lets white cops pull guns on black women and yell nigger, nigger. It is the black Uncle Toms who help the police and Mayor Allen just because he has a nice white smile."

The SNCC men recruited marchers and they walked around the intersection about four times. One bottle sailed through the air.

Then suddenly the police were there. Paddy wagons and an armored truck disgorged dozens of riot-quelling officers. Motorcycle men blocked off the streets.

The officers charged into the milling group and ordered participants to disperse. Anybody who resisted went to jail. It was over in seconds.

Mayor Allen showed up a few minutes later, surveyed the scene and left without comment.

Organizers of Wednesday's march got into a bluish green station wagon and drove away while police grabbed their followers.

The SNCC members got the march started after they walked in on a meeting of Summer Hill residents at the Bethel Baptist Church on Fraser Street, SE, some 12 blocks from the riot-scene.

The tense meeting was organized by Johnny Popwell Jr., 28, recreation director in the area for Economic Opportunity Atlanta, Inc., the city's anti-poverty agency. Popwell said the meeting was called to organize committees to present area grievances to the mayor and Board of Aldermen.

Atlanta Negro Alderman Q. V. Williamson and Rep. John Hood addressed the meeting and said they would see that the mayor and aldermen listened to the community's troubles.

Both men were shouted down at least once each.

Popwell fought a running verbal battle with shouting Black Power advocates who urged the 80 to 100 persons to leave the church.

The group rose and started out of the building three times. Each time Popwell got them to return to their seats.

A committee of 14 was formed, and teams of twos were dispatched to go from house to house to listen to community grievances.

Tuesday's incident was touched off after a policeman shot and wounded a Negro car theft suspect at Ormond and Capitol. SNCC workers moved into the area shortly after the shooting.

Before the Summit Conference agreed on its statement, Wednesday, several Negro leaders vehemently charged that Carmichael was responsible for the rioting.

"The first thing we've got to do is stop the insurrection," said the Rev. William Holmes Borders, longtime civil rights leader. "One man is giving us hell. We've got to stop him before he stops us."

"Our main concern here is Stokely Carmichael. Whether or not we have a riot is up to him," said the Rev. Otis Smith, who suggested the committee contact the SNCC leader.

GOES ON RADIO

Carmichael, who was unavailable for comment all day Wednesday, finally said in a taped interview over Negro radio station WAOK Wednesday night:

"While that act itself may or may not have been justifiable, what is being said is that too many times those acts have been committed in a black community," Carmichael said, apparently referring to the shooting of the car theft suspect.

"It is clear to me that in all those rebellions nobody was chanting, 'We like Snick' or 'We love Snick,' but in fact they were chanting against the Police department, which has been brutal in its treatment of black people," he said.

ALL IS QUIET

All was relatively quiet in the riot area at 10 p.m. Wednesday. Traffic moved easily along Capitol Avenue. Sidewalks were almost deserted. A number of police vehicles were stationed at the intersection of Capitol and Ormond. A large police reserve force stood by a few blocks away in the Atlanta Stadium parking lot.

Wednesday about a dozen SNCC workers appeared at the riot scene just as school was out and scores of teen-agers began crossing the area.

The SNCC members handed out "Black Panther" stickers with the motto "We're the Greatest." They also gave out

No One Group to Blame For Riot, Council Holds

An Atlanta civil rights group declared Thursday that the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee was not responsible for triggering a riot Tuesday in southeast Atlanta.

The Council on Human Relations of Greater Atlanta Inc. charged that "no one group, including SNCC, can be held responsible for the disturbances in Atlanta and that the basic responsibility lies with Atlanta's lack of concern over miserable conditions in the slum areas."

City officials have blamed SNCC with causing the riot after SNCC workers aroused the neighborhood over the shooting of a car theft suspect by a policeman.

"The Atlanta community — Negro and white — will be making a sad mistake if it writes off Tuesday's disturbances in the South Side as a plot of outside agitators, to be dealt with by replenishing the police department's supply of tear gas," the council said.

The council blamed the trouble on slums, unemployment, poor schools and racial segregation.

Bond Is Set at $11,000; Hearing Will Be Today

By KEELER McCARTNEY and BILL SHIPP

Black-power advocate Stokely Carmichael was arrested Thursday night on warrants charging inciting to riot and disorderly conduct-disturbance.

Carmichael, 25, was taken into custody about 11 p.m. by a group of officers who raided the headquarters of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (Snick) at 360 Nelson St. SW, Detective Supt. Clinton Chafin said.

Chafin said the warrants were issued in connection with the riot Tuesday in the Summerhill section of Atlanta in which at least 15 persons were injured. The entire Atlanta police force was called in to restore order.

BONDS TOTAL $11,000

The warrants, issued by Chief Municipal Court Judge R. E. Jones, carried bonds totaling $11,000.

Carmichael was scheduled for a hearing at 8:30 a.m. Friday in Municipal Court.

Attorney Howard Moore, who has represented Snick in legal matters, was at Snick headquarters at the time of the arrest and accompanied Carmichael to jail.

Julian Bond resigns from Snick. Page 6.

A group of photographers identified by police as Snick members snapped pictures at the jail along with news photographers.

OTHERS HELD

The warrants against Carmichael specified $10,000 bond on charges of inciting to riot and $1,000 on the disorderly conduct charge.

Local Snick chapter leader William Ware of 142 Vine St. SW and an assistant, Bobby Vance Walton of 556 Houston St. NE, have been ordered held under $5,000 bond each for the Fulton County Grand Jury [illegible] of inciting to riot.

A number of other persons arrested in connection with the Summerhill riot also have been ordered held for grand jury action on charges of riot, which is a misdemeanor.

NOT WELCOME

Earlier Thursday, residents of the riot area made it plain Snick was unwelcome. And across town in Vine City, once considered a Snick stronghold, a petition was circulated to oust the group's headquarters from the neighborhood.

Carmichael and other Snick workers denounced Atlanta police and Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. in the Summerhill area Thursday.

Ten policemen followed Carmichael as he went from door to door in the Summerhill area, telling residents he did not attempt to start a riot and was not responsible for the riot taking place.

Carmichael, whom city officials have blamed with provoking the riot, announced he is "not afraid of any white man or any white policeman" and does "not intend to run from anyone."

Most of the residents shrugged off Carmichael's protestations.

While Carmichael and his men worked the area, residents of Summerhill set up an organization and handed out placards reading "Good Neighbor Club."

Robert McDaniel, 32, chairman of the Good Neighbor Club committee, said residents of Summerhill were posting the signs on their houses to show that they intended to work constructively to improve their community and would not cooperate in fomenting violence.

Dozens of houses along Capitol Avenue SE displayed the Good Neighbor posters over their doors. Some residents wore "Good Neighbor" badges as a symbol of their feeling about Tuesday's riot.

Wearing "black power" badges, Snick workers during the Thursday afternoon rush hour moved into the downtown area and handed out leaflets giving their version of the riot.

The leaflets charged that Summerhill residents were "sick and tired of seeing white cops mess over black men and women, as they have been doing for over 300 years. The crowd knew that Harold Prather was only one of thousands of black men and women in Atlanta who have been brutalized and shoved around by white cops and their bosses."

The leaflets referred to the shooting last Tuesday of Prather, a car theft suspect, by a policeman. Officers said Prather tried to flee, and when he failed to obey an order to stop, he was shot and wounded.

One Snick leaflet handed out downtown was headed a "statement from Stokely Carmichael" and branded Mayor Allen a "racist" and termed Atlanta police "corrupt."

The leaflet said: "The revolt was — and is — against the bestiality of a racist mayor and his corrupt police department . . . Racist Allen has said that SNCC has run out of the black community. We are here. Here, baby! We will stay and shall keep on fighting racism."

The downtown Snick workers, operating along Marietta Street, refused to give the leaflets to anyone except Negroes.

Mayor Allen, meanwhile, met Thursday afternoon with Police Chief Herbert Jenkins and City Attorney Henry Bowden.

The mayor announced later that he had directed Bowden and Jenkins "to initiate immediate action against any and all persons responsible for the disorders which took place in south Atlanta Tuesday evening.

"They are directed to use every facility and legal authority of the City of Atlanta and the State of Georgia necessary to apprehend, arrest and prosecute to the fullest extent of the law any person involved in the unlawful creation of this incident."

"Let there be no misunderstanding about our intentions in the apprehension of these lawbreakers," he said.

Back in the Summerhill area, Carmichael declared: "The racist mayor and the white racist papers said we started a riot and ran. We did not start it and we will not run away."

Later Carmichael announced he would "leave the scene to the white policemen because we do not believe in having black people revolt to get hurt."

Over in Vine City some bearded Snick workers stood glumly around a pile of charred lumber that had been a stand for soliciting aid for Snick and for disseminating black power literature. The Snick stand was burned to the ground Wednesday night.

The word was out in Vine City Thursday that Snick and its Atlanta project headquarters would soon be out of the area.

SNICK LOSES ATLANTA

A Black Backlash, And a Sign of Hope

AC 9/1/66

By EUGENE PATTERSON

THE CANDIDATES for governor issued the expected denunciations of SNCC for staging its riot in Atlanta Tuesday. (James Gray issued two; he cancelled the first one and replaced it with a watered-down one on second stab.) Ellis Arnall's statement was a pretty good example of what the politicians said.

Arnall assailed SNCC and its black power lawlessness as "irresponsible," "shameful," "despicable," "revolting," "an insult to responsible Negroes as well as to responsible white citizens," and promised he would as governor "uphold the law . . . fight any group of extremists . . . strengthen law enforcement . . . and story mollycoddling criminals and thieves."

Eugene Patterson is editor of The Atlanta Constitution.

The candidates' statements probably made them and some white voters feel better. They didn't bother SNCC; that anarchic crowd hopes its actions will help elect hotheaded racist governors because that makes it much easier for SNCC to pick fights, start riots and burn towns.

The real news of the week wasn't covered in the stereotyped words of the politicians, or the predictable fuming of whites; that was old stuff. The new development came in the Negro community.

ACROSS THE WHOLE spectrum of that community — working class, middle class, old leaders, young students—a Negro backlash against SNCC's extremism showed up. This was something new and important indeed.

Mayor Ivan Allen, more than anyone, would deserve the credit if this Negro revulsion against violence were to take root in Atlanta and flower across the country, beginning the end of SNCC's influence. For Allen stood up to the new violence that is being loosed on American cities and he used the weapon of nonviolence that SNCC had discarded, and he prevailed.

The major deployed police force, or course, in overwhelming strength. But the heavily armed police did not shoot anybody. Between them and the violent, rock-throwing Negro mob stood the mayor, demanding nonviolence by his unarmed example. In a sense he shamed his city into peace.

(What would he have said to the mob from the top of the police car, if the rioters hadn't toppled him off as he tried to speak? "I don't really know what I'd have said," Allen said later, "except the Lord's Prayer.")

ATLANTA'S NEGRO community, including some in the mob itself, had to take a long, hard look at SNCC after the mayor so dramatized the uselessness and wrongness of its violence.

Statements condemning riot and disorder began coming from all Negro sectors—the comprehensive Summit Leadership Conference, student groups, an association formed in the riot area itself in defiance of SNCC disruption, and others. In the Vine City slum, where SNCC had moved in this summer and agitated constantly, open grumbling occurred and talk began about expelling SNCC from the neighborhood before it brought in more trouble. On Wednesday night a SNCC contribution center and storage stand in Vine City was dismantled, stacked up and burned. It was quite a switch on the old black power slogan of "Burn, Baby, Burn."

Was a Negro rebellion really taking form against SNCC. Time will tell that. But Negro resentment was manifest last week. A typical letter from a Negro man said:

* * *

"I HAVE NEVER written a letter to the newspaper before. But I cannot contain my feelings any longer. As an American, a Negro, and a citizen of Atlanta up to his neck doing his God-given best to raise three children to be law-abiding, productive members of society, I have come to the firm conclusion we cannot afford the luxury of Stokely Carmichael in our midst any longer. Every Negro that I talk to has the same conviction. I served in the Army. Why shouldn't they? My wife lost her only brother in the service of our country, and her uncle has just returned from Viet Nam. I see no reason why they (the SNCC people) should not be made to take a bath, shave and then go into the Army

"All police are not bad. By the same token all Negroes are not willing to riot."

There was a backlash in Atlanta this week, all right—a black one. And in it were signs of hope.

Carmichael Gets Support In Vine City

AC 9/11/66

ATLANTA

By United Press International

Black power leader Stokely Carmichael relaxed in jail Saturday reading a copy of "Kidnapped" and picked up important grass roots support from an organization in a slum area that officials fear is ripe for riot.

The organization, the Vine City Council, contended that neither Carmichael nor his Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) were responsible for Tuesday's Negro riot in a slum called Summerhill.

Carmichael was charged with inciting a riot Thursday night and jailed. He refused to make $10,000 bond and said he would remain in jail as a "political prisoner."

Attorney Howard Moore has filed a federal suit seeking to have the charges against Carmichael dropped.

The Vine City Council said Saturday that it has received "reliable information that all the disturbances and riots are politically inspired."

THE COUNCIL said if there is a riot in Vine City, a 6,000-acre slum, "it will be caused by people who have turned their backs on communities like Vine City, not on SNCC or Stokely Carmichael.

"The same conditions existed before SNCC or Stokely Carmichael came," the statement said. "They will exist after they leave."

The council urged Mayor Ivan Allen to stop condemning SNCC and point the blame at "responsible persons who have turned their backs for so long."

Since the riot, middle class Negroes and Negro city Councilman Q. V. Williamson have encouraged Vine City residents' to oust SNCC's sub-headquarters in the neighborhood.

The council's endorsement may negate these attempts as it is the strongest organization in the community. There have been several minor incidents in the community and one near melee involving 400 persons was broken up by police and moderate Negroes.

The incident was turned into an anti-black power rally and SNCC's subheadquarters was burned down.

Moore said the SNCC Chairman Carmichael was taking it easy in Fulton County Jail reading Robert Louis Stevenson's "Kidnapped," and several publications about the Negro struggle in Africa.

1 Killed, Policeman Shot In Violence in Negro Sector

ATLANTA

AC 9/11/66

By TOM DUNKIN and MICHAEL DAVIS

Gunfire and violence erupted Saturday night here in a predominately Negro neighborhood after one person was killed and a policeman and one other person were shot.

Sgt. M. J. Spears, 42, was reported in good condition at Grady Hospital following treatment of a gunshot wound received at the 400 block of Boulevard NE. Hubert Vorner, 16, was dead on arrival at the hospital and Roy Milton Wright was in satisfactory condition.

Early Sunday morning, police units still patroled the area to contain the situation.

A WITNESS SAID the incident broke out between white persons and Negro teen-agers.

Mrs. Harvey Bummingham, who lives in an apartment house on the block, said she heard four shots and residents were told two Negroes had been shot.

She said this was followed later by more gunfire.

Rocks and bottle throwing broke out near midnight and police continued to try to bring order.

"The thing is not over. Everytime the police turn their backs, they throw bricks — boom, boom, boom. You can hear them in the apartment," Mrs. Bummingham said.

Police arrested about 12 persons in the area.

Estimates of the number of persons on the street at the height of the disturbance ranged from 50 to 400.

Hosea Williams, chief aide to Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., and Junis Griffin, public relations director for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and Ben Clarke, an SCLC field worker, were arrested at 11:25 p.m. at the corner of Boulevard and Angier Avenue NE. The exact charge was not available.

Sgt. Claude Dixon fired in the air and arrested three men when rocks were thrown at him at Parkway Drive and Angier.

THERE WAS sporadic gunfire along Angier Avenue, which runs at right angle to Boulevard.

Two Negro bystanders were shot from a passing car in the 400 block of Boulevard. The car reportedly was driven by a white woman and it contained two white men.

Crowds began forming. Sgt. Spears was shot in the general area while answering the call on the shooting of the teenagers.

One white motorist passing by a road block said a woman in his car was injured. Boulevard was blocked off from Georgia Baptist Hospital to Ponce de Leon.

All Atlanta downtown officers were put on emergency notice.

since a riot in the Summerhill section Tuesday.

The area of the outburst, witnesses said, was well lighted. The windows of several businesses in the 500 block of Boulevard were broken.

Mayor Ivan Allen was on the scene along with police superior officers. Riot equipment, including shotguns, tear gas and helmets, were dispensed from an Atlanta police armored car.

Two witnesses, Eddie Foote, 20, 1616 Shaw Stt. SE, and Eonald Warbington, 11, 431 Boulevard, said they were standing in a coin laundry across the street from the shooting at 420 Boulevard when a blue automobile, southbound on Boulevard, stopped.

A woman was driving and a man seated on the right side asked, "What did you say, boy?" of two Negro youths standing on the sidewalk, the witnesses said.

HE OPENED FIRE when one of the youths walked toward the car, the witnesses added. Sgt. Spears, driving north on Boulevard, was on the scene about 30 seconds after the first shot was fired, the witnesses said.

The car from which the shots were fired turned around, came back and the gunman fired again, wounding Sgt. Spears, the witnesses said.

Sgt. Spears fired several shots through the rear window of the car as it sped northward on Boulevard, the witnesses said.

Foote, one of the witnesses, said he felt the rioting began because the ambulance picked up the wounded officer and left the two wounded youths.

ABOUT 10 MEMBERS of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee approached Mayor Allen at Boulevard and Forrest Avenue.

Mayor Allen was in the center of the street with policemen.

"See. They are killing us one by one. We are tired of killing," said one.

Mayor Allen walked over.

"Can you stop the killing, mayor?"

Police Alert In Riot Area

Routine Patrolling Marks Activities Along Boulevard

By DON WINTER

Atlanta police were routinely patrolling the area where the weekend riots occurred on Boulevard NE Monday afternoon, although they were ready to "make necessary arrests, and if they need help, call for help," Chief Herbert T. Jenkins said.

Police are on the alert for any new outbreaks of racial violence, the chief said, but "how can you predict these things?"

The main precaution taken has been in effect for more than a week—a 50 per cent increase in the number of policemen on the department's beats.

Since the firemen went on strike two weekends ago, and the Summerhill neighborhood spawned a riot last Tuesday, Mayor Allen urged to call Negro and white leaders together for first-hand picture of slum problems — Page 6.

Chief Jenkins has had his 750 men working two shifts instead of the normal three.

In effect the 12-hour workday means half again as many policemen cruising the city as on regular schedule.

These extra forces are not concentrated in the Boulevard area, the chief said (although the city's armored car and other riot equipment is near Boulevard), but can be summoned quickly.

POLICEMEN in the Boulevard neighborhood and in the city's other potential trouble spots have been instructed to call for all the assistance they need in carrying out their duties, Chief Jenkins said.

As an aftermath of the racial riots which struck Boulevard both Saturday and Sunday nights, residents Monday were cleaning the shattered glass and other debris which littered the streets and sidewalks.

Meanwhile, some 90 persons who were arrested during the disorders on Saturday and Sunday nights began appearing in Municipal Court Monday.

The 58 persons arrested Saturday night and the 32 arrested Sunday night were charged with offenses ranging from arson to violations of the beer and wine ordinances.

All had been engaged in the turmoil which kept hundreds of policemen in the area between Georgia Baptist Hospital and Ponce de Leon Avenue checking mobs that gathered Saturday night — and regrouped Sunday — in protest of the slaying of a Negro teen-ager.

Herbert Vorner, 16, was killed and Roy Wright, 16, injured by shots fired by a white man whom, witnesses said, thought a crowd of Negroes Vorner and Wright had been standing with spoke to a white woman in his car.

The assailant had not been identified Monday morning.

After shooting into the crowd Saturday, the man fled down Boulevard. A policeman investigating the shooting was hit by either a bullet or brick coming from the crowd, and riots erupted.

THEY CONTINUED Sunday night, as rioters set afire at least two stores, exploded a gasoline bomb under a police armored car, and broke windows deliberately at one store.

Broken glass and other litter was strewn along Boulevard after being hurled at police dispersing the crowds Sunday night. Some of it came from broken windows of cars in the area. There were no definite reports of any other damage Monday morning.

The Sunday riots did not result in any injuries serious enough for hospital treatment, although several policemen were hit by flying bricks and stones.

Saturday night 20 persons had been treated at Grady, including the wounded Negro youth and police Sgt. Marvin J. Spears, who had investigated the shooting. Others treated in-

A grocery on Angier Avenue NE, off Boulevard, was set afire by gasoline fire bombs and rocks were lobbed through its windows. Firemen putting out the blaze were hampered by surrounding crowds.

Then Mayor Allen arrived at the corner of Forrest and Boulevard and the crowds shifted to that location. They milled around him as he tried to make them go home.

Farther to the north a group of youths were gathered on the corner of Boulevard and North Avenue, shouting "black power" and heaving bricks and MAYOR Ivan Allen appeared at the scene, as he did at last Tuesday's riots south of Atlanta Stadium, before the crowds were dispersed Saturday night. He also was on the scene Sunday night.

Sunday afternoon the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and neighborhood leaders called a meeting at the Fort Street Methodist Church, south of the riot area, to protest the slaying.

SCLC official Hosea Williams, who had been arrested Saturday night for failure to obey an officer's command to move on, spoke to the meeting, counseling nonviolent demonstrations to prod the city to action on this and other matters.

However, members of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee were present, and soon led a number of people from the church.

A little later crowds had formed between Forrest Avenue and North Avenue on Boulevard, and police had arrived to break them up.

Many policemen had been in the neighborhood all day Sunday. They joined with the new arrivals in dispersing the jeering, rock and brick throwing crowds.

Biracial Slum Talk Proposed to Allen

AJ 9/12/66

By RALEIGH BRYANS

Mayor Ivan Allen was being urged Monday to call a meeting at which spokesmen of all local Negro slums would give the city's top white leadership — aldermen, businessmen and others—a "first-hand" picture of slum conditions and Negro complaints.

The request, which was relayed to the mayor by Vice Mayor Sam Massell, originated with members of an organization called the Mechanicsville-Summerhill Improvement Committee.

Mrs. Alice Nixon, chairman of the committee, and a small delegation that included Fulton Rep. John Hood, met with Mr. Massell Monday to discuss conditions in the Mechanicsville and Summerhill communities.

MR. MASSELL said the request for the meeting was the "main" thing advanced by Mrs. Nixon and her colleagues, though specific suggestions were made regarding law enforcement, school absenteeism, job training, housing and recreation.

He said the proposed meeting would include "professionals" from local agencies dealing in human relations so that these could offer possible solutions to problems detailed by the slum-area representatives.

"The idea would be that people from the slums would give first-hand descriptions of conditions and the problems these provoke, and the professionals would give any recommendations they might have for solving the problems," said the vice mayor.

Those proposing the meeting feel that it is a sound way to go about calming tensions which they feel were at the root of riots in Negro slums last week, Mr. Massell said.

Mayor Allen, meanwhile, received a delegation of Negroes that included Hosea Williams, aide to Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.; Fulton Rep. J. D. Grier, pastor of the Fort Street Memorial Methodist Church; George Dodd, an official of Economic Opportunity - Atlanta, Inc., the local antipoverty agency, and David McNair, who is with the Atlanta Housing Authority.

THIS get-together was one that evolved from a brief conversation Mr. Williams and Rep. Grier had Sunday with the mayor when Mr. Allen came to Rep. Grier's church and made his award announcement.

Mr. Williams, Rep. Grier and others in the delegation met with the mayor in the mayor's office behind closed doors.

The mayor was scheduled to meet sometime Monday with such key local Negro leaders as Rev. Sam Williams, Fulton Sen. Leroy Johnson and Jesse Hill. These presumably would

Won't Ask March, Negro Leader Says

By RALEIGH BRYANS

A top Atlanta Negro leader said Monday that the Negro leadership here isn't asking "and doesn't expect to ask" Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. to stage mass protest demonstrations in Atlanta.

In affirming this position, Rev. Sam Williams, cochairman of the Atlanta Summit Leadership Conference, took a strong verbal slap at Hosea Williams, one of Dr. King's aides, who had declared Sunday that recent riots had convinced him Atlanta must be made the targets of such demonstrations.

The Rev. Mr. Williams called Hosea Williams a "hired hand" in Dr. King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC) and said the second Mr. Williams was in no position to speak either for Dr. King or for local Atlanta Negroes.

THE SUMMIT LEADER said it is SCLC policy that the organization will not go into any community to stage demonstrations unless the organization is specifically invited in by local Negro and civil rights leaders.

"We have made no such request," he said.

He said additionally that he happens to be a member of the executive committee of SCLC and a vice president as well, and that he had been in personal touch with Dr. King since the latter arrived in Atlanta Monday morning.

Hosea Williams had made his remark about the possibility of SCLC-sponsored demonstrations at a press conference here Sunday.

Crowd Ignores Plea From Mayor Allen

By BILL WINN

Screaming, jeering Negroes hurled Molotov cocktails and bricks at police Sunday night along Boulevard Avenue in the third day of racial violence in Atlanta in less than a week.

Several homes and businesses were set afire and damaged in more than five hours of rioting as hundreds of Negroes protested the Saturday killing of a 16-year-old Negro youth by an unknown white assailant.

Police finally restored calm to the area around 2:30 a.m. Monday.

More than 250 policemen, armed with riot guns, attempted to quell the riot which broke out on Boulevard between Ponce de Leon and the Georgia Baptist Hospital. The same area was rocked by violence Saturday night following the shooting of the young Negro.

Several police vehicles were struck by fire bombs and angry mobs surrounded police vehicles in Sunday's rioting.

ATLANTA Mayor Ivan Allen walked up and down Boulevard imploring the crowds to disperse and go home. No one did.

At one point, Rev. Clyde Williams, a Negro minister from Mechanicsville, led a march of rioters up and down the street. The crowd shouted, "We want Stokely Carmichael" and "We want peace."

Carmichael, leader of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, is in jail charged with inciting a riot last Tuesday night in the Summerhill area

"Why is Carmichael in jail?" Negroes screamed at Mayor Allen "Who are you going to blame for tonight's rioting — Calvin Craig and the Ku Klux Klan?"

Mayor Allen, grim faced and calm, repeated his request that everyone go home

"Can we go home with you?" one Negro girl asked

"Maybe he ain't got cab fare," a youth said.

THE CROWD milled about Mayor Allen, who stayed in the area until relative quiet was restored late in the night

Police made many arrests, including several Negro teenagers. Most were charged with throwing bricks and bottles

Earlier in the evening, a grocery store on Angier Avenue NE was repeatedly struck by firebombs. At least three other buildings were set afire. Shortly before 2 a.m. Monday, Raymond's TV at 632 Boulevard was set ablaze. Police said the fire was started by a Molotov cocktail set in the rear of the building. Two arrests were made in connection with the fire.

Despite repeated requests from Negroes, Mayor Allen refused to send police out of the area.

"Get the cops out of here and we'll all go home," said William J. Farrell, who identified himself as a social worker and minister.

"You tell your people to go home," said the mayor.

"Get the 'roaches' out," the Negroes shouted.

AT ONE point, as he stalked up and down the street, bottles and bricks came within a few feet of Mayor Allen. Pop bottles exploded among reporters and police who walked up and down Boulevard.

No major injuries were reported, although one newsman was struck on the leg.

Late in the evening, some of the crowd marched to the Fort Street Memorial Church and sat down on the steps. Several ministers, Negro and white, attempted to calm them.

The shooting of the Negro youth which triggered Saturday night's rioting occurred on Boulevard in front of a number of apartment complexes which line the street.

Herbert Vorner, 16, was shot dead, and his companion, Roy Wright, also 16, was shot in the back and the side. The latter is reported in good condition at Grady Hospital.

POLICE are looking for a white man who was reportedly driving a black and white 1959 Chevrolet. An eye-witness told police the man stopped the car, spoke to the two Negro boys, and then opened fire. The car left the area at a high rate of speed after the shooting.

Police Sgt. Marvin J. Spears was struck in the head as he was attempting to question witnesses after the shooting Saturday. He was struck by either a bullet or a brick.

A WSB newsman, James W. Gilmier, 32, was seriously injured in the incident on Saturday. He suffered a fractured skull and face and chest injuries from thrown bricks and rocks.

Sunday, Mayor Allen told residents of the area he was offering a $10,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person responsible for Saturday's shooting.

"That ain't going to bring back that little boy," screamed several members of the crowd. "We don't want to be shot down like dogs."

Although many Negro leaders were on the scene Sunday, none of the more volatile civil rights leaders were seen in the riot.

Hosea Williams, a top aide in Dr. Martin Luther King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference, was jailed Saturday night when he failed to respond to a Negro policeman's order to move on.

Junius Griffin, another official of SCLC, was also arrested Saturday.

Mr. Williams was released from jail Sunday afternoon and he said that he was asking Dr. King to return to Atlanta and lead civil rights demonstrations.

Another SCLC aide, field secretary Ben Clark, also arrested Saturday, said he was beaten in an elevator at the city jail. He said he was kicked and clubbed by a policeman.

A large crowd of spectators and area residents gathered at a gasoline station on the corner of Boulevard and Forrest Avenue late Sunday night. Police gradually dispersed the crowd and the area was quiet again by 3 a.m. Monday.

Atlanta, After 2d Riot, Offers $10,000 for Clues to Negro's Killer

By ROY REED

Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, Sept. 11—White and Negro leaders moved today to avert further rioting by Negroes angered over the slaying of a Negro youth last night.

Mayor Ivan Allen Jr., looking weary from staying at the riot scene until early this morning, appeared at a mass meeting of Negroes this afternoon to announce that the city was offering a $10,000 reward for information on the youth's killer.

Representatives of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s Southern Christian Leadership Conference entered the troubled area and discussed the possibility of a massive, nonviolent civil rights movement in Atlanta.

The police presed a search for the white man who shot to death 16-year-old Hubert Vorner shortly after 10:30 last night. Another youth was wounded.

20 Injured, 58 Arrested

More than 20 persons were injured and 58 were arrested when angry Negroes poured into the street and hurled bricks and bottles after the shooting.

The shooting and subsequent rioting occurred on Boulevard, a busy four-lane thoroughfare that bisects a predominantly Negro neighborhood near downtown Atlanta.

A white policeman was wounded by gunfire last night, and a white television reporter suffered a fractured skull, after an angry crowd of Negroes gathered following the shooting.

Members of the crowd broke several store windows and attacked whites with bricks, bottles and fists several times during the night. The violence continued sporadically until after 2 A.M. Dozens of angry Negroes continued to mill in the street at daybreak.

This was the second outbreak of racial violence here in the last week. Fifteen persons were injured and about 70 were arrested in a Negro riot Tuesday.

Hosea Williams, director of voter registration and political education for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said he would recommend to Dr. King tomorrow that the conference conduct a nonviolent campaign of marches and demonstrations here. Dr. King was out of the city today.

A Question Posed

"The question of the present and the future," Mr. Williams said, "is whether Negroes will be able to creatively bring about meaningful social change through instrument of nonviolence, or whether they will be driven by frustration to copy the violence of the larger society."

Mr. Williams and two other staff members of the leadership conference were arrested during the disturbance last night and charged with disorderly conduct after they argued with the police about moving on. They were freed on bond.

Vice Mayor Sam Massell said today that the police might have made a mistake in arresting Mr. Williams, one of the South's top civil rights leaders. Mr. Williams said he had gone to the scene to try to restore order.

"I question whether his arrest was one that was necessary," Mr. Massell said.

Cleveland Sellers, program secretary of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, also was arrested for failing to move on. He was still being held today.

Stokely Carmichael, chairman of the student committee, already was in jail, charged with inciting Tuesday's riot.

The police, after interviewing several witnesses, reconstructed the incident that set off last night's violence. The witnesses gave this account:

A young white man driving with a white woman passed a small group of Negro youths standing on the sidewalk in front of a row of apartment houses.

The man stopped his car, backed up and said, "Did you say something?"

"No," replied 16-year-old Hubert Vorner.

The white man pulled a pistol, pushed the woman out onto the street and opened fire through the car window.

Young Vorner was shot in the head. He was pronounced dead on arrival at Grady Memorial Hospital.

Roy Milton Wright, 16, one of the slain boy's companions, was shot in the back. He is in satisfactory condition today.

Policeman Injured

Police Sgt. M. J. Spears, 42, was patrolling Boulevard less than 30 seconds away. He sped to the scene and shortly afterward was downed by a spent, possibly ricocheting, bullet that struck him in the back of the head. He was not seriously injured.

About 400 persons poured into the street as other policemen arrived to investigate. The Negroes threw bricks and bottles in a loud, undirected riot that lasted five to 10 minutes. The police quelled it, then withdrew except for a small force.

An hour later, another crowd gathered around a puddle of blood on the sidewalk where young Vorner had been shot.

The crowd was sullen at first, then restive, then angry and loud.

The police called in more reinforcements.

More bricks and bottles were thrown. A few shots were fired at policemen from the darkness of alleys and yards.

At 2 A.M. the crowd, then about 75 persons, began moving threateningly to the north toward the ghetto boundary. The police rushed to head them off.

The crowd broke wildly. Other Negroes left their houses and the crowd swelled. Groups formed quickly and ran back and forth on the glass-littered streets and sidewalks.

Store and car windows were smashed amid yells of triumph.

Several white newsmen found themselves trapped between marauding groups. Two newsmen fled through a side street to safety. One was taken away in a car by a friendly Negro.

James Giltmier, a reporter for WFB-TV who had covered racial violence in other parts of the South without difficulty, was overtaken by a gang of youths and struck to the ground. He underwent surgery today for what was described as "a moderately severe skull fracture."

Robert Fitch, a white photographer for the leadership conference, was beaten down by another gang. He was not seriously hurt.

The police restored order once more in about 15 minutes. The area was quiet but tense the rest of the night.

It's 'Napalm in Atlanta' as Gas-Filled Jar Explodes

By BILL SHIPP

A fruit jar filled with flaming gasoline hurtled through the darkness, then exploded like napalm under a policy paddy wagon. The wagon pulled away.

For a few seconds the night rained bottles. They came from the darkness of the apartment houses. The crash of glass was preceded by cursing from the same darkness.

Store windows were scattered.

The mayor tried to talk to them, but they were in no mood to listen. Some of them chanted "peace," then they chanted "power."

It was Boulevard in Atlanta on Sunday night.

It was once a quiet thoroughfare — a good place for a hospital like Georgia Baptist.

Now it was in uproar from Georgia Baptist Hospital eight blocks north. It was a good place to get hurt — or worse.

Even though the street teemed with policemen, bottles and bricks and curses still came. Someone even spread nails at one intersection.

The melee first erupted Saturday night after two teen-agers were shot, one fatally. Then it died down, only to start up again late Sunday as groups of men and women, boys and girls roamed up and down the street, cursing the killers of the youth, cursing the police, cursing their own lots in life.

FIREBOMB THROWN

Someone threw a firebomb onto a store on Angier just off Boulevard. Windows were broken.

While firemen checked out the blaze, which out in moments, the crowd taunted them and the policemen who guarded the firemen.

A minister tried to get some of them to "march off their steam."

They marched eight blocks and back again. The minister tried to talk to them. But several of the Negroes turned his pleas for "peace" aside, took over the speaking themselves and demanded the release of Stokely Carmichael, the Black Power leader, in jail in connection with last Tuesday's melee on Capitol Avenue.

MAYOR APPEALS

Back up at a service station near Georgia Baptist Hospital, the mayor showed up and ask them to go home. But the prowling, howling mob was in no mood to go home—or to talk to Ivan Allen Jr.

"You go home and eat a big steak with mushrooms, while we has to go home and eat sardines," shrieked one young Negro woman. "Let us go home with you."

"Let Stokely Carmichael go and we'll quiet rioting. How about that, man?" shouted a Negro wearing a stocking wrapped around his head.

Occasionally the crowd pushed forward, and it looked as if Mayor Allen would drown in the sea of angry faces. Only his personal aide, Police Capt. George Royal, separated the mayor from the jeering crowd during several instances.

CHARITY CROWD

A chanting crowd of about 50 was led to the Fort Street Memorial Methodist Church on Boulevard SE shortly after 10 p.m.

State Rep. J. D. Grier, who also is pastor of the church, finally got that group to promise to go home. Some said they would be back out Monday night.

Rep. Grier said there were "agitators" in the crowd, people who "want this to keep going on."

Back up the streets more bottles were thrown at policemen and newsmen. Tear gas was fired.

Lights from television newscrews seemed to turn some of the little knots of angry Negroes into a frenzy.

William J. Farrell, a Negro social worker, asked the mayor to pull all the police out of area.

"They're not going to bed until the police get out," he said. "As long as the police watch them, they'll stay up and watch the police."

Some of the officers looked dead-tired. Many had been on duty for nearly 14 hours without relief.

Shortly before midnight, the anger begin to die down. The chanters, the cursers, the bottle and bomb throwers got tired. The excitement died down.

But the police stayed and waited and watched. And in the darkness of the apartment houses, others waited and watched.

Allen Posts Reward In Slaying

A fire bomb was thrown under a police paddy wagon that was taking prisoners to jail Sunday night and the vehicle was pelted with bottles as hundreds of Negroes swarmed along Boulevard near Georgia Baptist Hospital in the second successive night of violence in the area.

The Sunday night outbreak at times appeared as much a protest for the jailing of Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee leader Stokely Carmichael as a protest to the killing of a Negro youth and the wounding of another by an unknown white gunman.

Reporters covering this story were Bill Shipp, Dick Hebert, Charles Moore and Michael Davis. Related stories on Pages 3, 6, 9 and 44.

Meanwhile, Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. posted a $10,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of the gunman.

As the police vehicle sped through the barrage of missiles, Mayor Allen repeatedly implored the crowd to "respect law and order." A number in the group shouted back, "We'll quit rioting if you'll turn Stokely Carmichael loose."

REMAINS IN JAIL

Carmichael, chairman of the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee, remains in the Fulton County jail under $10,000 bond on charges of inciting last Tuesday's initial riot.

Atlanta police, subjected to constant danger from flying bottles, bricks and stones, fired two cannisters of tear gas into a crowd in the 600 block of Boulevard as the riot intensified Sunday night.

The violence appeared to grow after officials had permitted the Rev. Clyde Williams, pastor of a church in the Mechanicsville area hit by a melee last Tuesday, to organize a parade up and down the eight-block area on Boulevard.

CHANT 'PEACE'

The idea apparently was to allow the demonstrators to let off steam but it appeared only to spur them on. They first began chanting, "We want peace. We want peace." But they soon began to chant also, "We want power. We want power." When the group neared television cameras many in the parade began jumping around and waving their hands.

After one trip to each end of the blockaded section of Boulevard, police had to split up the march.

As police tried to move the mob toward Fort Street Memorial Methodist Church, officers and newsmen were pelted by thrown bottles and missiles. As the crowd moved, Negroes broke away and took refuge between apartment houses along the route. Only 85 of more than 200 persons reached the church.

The Rev. Paul Kelley, a Hapeville Catholic priest, approached the singing group on the church steps and attempted to talk to them.

"Are they (the police) doing anything about this (the shooting)?" he asked.

"Naw," someone shouted from the steps. "All they want us to do is not to kill white folks."

Yelled another, "But we ain't!"

Armed with shotguns and an armored riot truck, police, a few minutes earlier, moved with the mob as it was led by a minister several blocks down to Boulevard Place and then back to the hospital area.

By might, police had arrested at least 22 Negroes.

Before that, stones and bricks were tossed through the plate-glass windows of at least five stores in the area and molotov cocktails were lobbed onto the rooftops of at least two stores. There were sporadic outbreaks of shooting at fire trucks summoned to extinguish the fires.

The second time the mob came to the corner of Boulevard and Forrest Avenue Northeast they found Mayor Allen, surrounded him, but refused to listen to more than a few of his sentences.

"I don't find anything that some of these people, who are burning down buildings and throwing rocks . . . are doing for you," he told the crowd.

"My record of doing what I will say I will do is pretty good."

Several times Allen beseeched the mob, "Hush up back there; let me speak."

The crowd spilled into the lot of a service station and even as Allen spoke, reporters saw one young Negro tear an Atlanta Braves sign down and other Negroes shouted the mayor down, saying, "We don't want to hear that."

"I'm asking this group to disperse quietly," Allen said. He also told of the $10,000 reward

He was either hit by a ricocheting bullet or a thrown object.

The most seriously injured person in the outbreak was James W. Giltmier, 32, a newsman for WSB-TV, who is in Emory University Hospital with a fractured skull, and face and chest injuries.

Fellow newsmen said Giltmier was hit in the head by a brick as he approached a group of about 150 Negroes.

A witness to the shooting, Ronald Barnes, told police the gunman was driving a 1959 black and white Chevrolet. Barnes said the car was moving south on Boulevard at a slow rate of speed, then suddenly stopped and backed up.

Barnes said the driver called out, "You talking to us?"

Another witness, Alex King, said, "I said 'No' and he pushed the white girl over and shot six times."

The gunman's car took off at a high rate of speed. A couple who live next to the shooting scene jumped into their car and attempted to follow. They told police they lost the Chevrolet near Houston Street NE but that it had continued at high speed south on Bouelvard.

Mayor Allen announced the $10,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction at a meeting held in Fort Street Memorial Church.

In a tense, emotional appearance before about 200 persons Sunday afternoon in the church two blocks from the site of the shooting, Mayor Allen also called for an end to rioting and racial violence in Atlanta.

The melee that lasted until about 2:30 a.m. Sunday was the second here in four days. Rioting broke out last Tuesday in the wake of the police-shooting of a car theft suspect.

In the Saturday outbreak, a police help call was sounded with the wounding of Sgt. Spears and officers poured into the neighborhood, cordoning off Boulevard at Forrest and North avenues.

There was only sporadic rock and bottle throwing until about midnight when a sudden barrage of missiles rained out of the night toward police in cars and afoot.

The area quickly quieted down under the threat of shotgun-armed police and there were only scattered incidents of to move along. As he and others in the group were hustled into a paddy wagon, he shouted, "Police in Atlanta are just as inhuman and brutal as they are in Mississippi."

Williams was released from jail Sunday afternoon. He held a press conference to say that the two Negro outbreaks have convinced him that Atlanta must be made the target of sweeping "non-violent" civil rights campaigns similar to the ones SCLC has conducted in Alabama and Mississippi.

Standing on the corner where the melee began, Williams said he would urge Negro children to make mass marches on white schools, adding, "We'll boycott the entire city if we have to."

Allen told reporters later that the $10,000 was put up by "civic minded citizens" who wanted to remain anonymous.

After Allen left the Fort Street Church, Snick field worker Willie Ricks called the mayor "the top gun in Atlanta . . . a wolf in sheep's clothing" who had "come down here to pacify you."

"We need black power! We need black power!" Ricks shouted.

But two other speakers, officials in King's SCLC, tried to tell the Negroes they would gain nothing by violence.

"I believe in marching in the streets," said Hosea Williams, SCLC Southern program director. "Now I don't believe in violence, but I believe in marching in the streets—by the thousands."

Carmichael said from jail he will conduct religious meditations for the next 96 hours and will not be in contact with persons outside of jail.

the singing group on the church steps and attempted to talk to them.

"Are they (the police) doing anything about this (the shooting)?" he asked.

"Naw," someone shouted from the steps. "All they want us to do is not to kill white folks."

Yelled another, "But we ain't!"

Armed with shotguns and an armored riot truck, police, a few minutes earlier, moved with the mob as it was led by a minister several blocks down to Boulevard Place and then back to the hospital area.

By might, police had arrested at least 22 Negroes.

Before that, stones and bricks were tossed through the plate-glass windows of at least five stores in the area and molotov cocktails were lobbed onto the rooftops of at least two stores. There were sporadic outbreaks of shooting at fire trucks summoned to extinguish the fires.

The second time the mob came to the corner of Boulevard and Forrest Avenue Northeast they found Mayor Allen, surrounded him, but refused to listen to more than a few of his sentences.

"I don't find anything that some of these people, who are burning down buildings and throwing rocks . . . are doing for you," he told the crowd.

"My record of doing what I will say I will do is pretty good."

Several times Allen beseeched the mob, "Hush up back there; let me speak."

The crowd spilled into the lot of a service station and even as Allen spoke, reporters saw one young Negro tear an Atlanta Braves sign down and other Negroes shouted the mayor down, saying, "We don't want to hear that."

"I'm asking this group to disperse quietly," Allen said. He also told of the $10,000 reward he has posted for any information leading to the conviction of any persons responsible for Saturday night's shooting of two teen-aged Negroes which touched off the weekend wave of violence.

Allen, in a return performance of the method he used to break up last Tuesday's riot, paced back and forth across the street, surrounded by the mob, as police tried to break its fringes into smaller groups.

One Negro shouted to him, "Why don't you lock up Calvin Craig? The Ku Klux Klan incited those people to shoot those boys last night."

Earlier, Allen was asked by a voice in the crowd, "Why is Stokely Carmichael in jail?"

"He is in jail because he is charged with inciting a riot," Allen responded.

Before Allen reached the scene, a grocery store on Angier Avenue Northeast, Whiteman's, was twice struck by firebombs Sunday night and rocks lobbed through front windows.

Some of the bottles shattered only a few feet from where the mayor stood in the middle of Boulevard. His only escorts were Police Chief Herbert Jenkins and Allen's personal aide, George Royal.

Allen maintained his composure despite Negroes running up and shouting in his face.

Herbert (Dukie) Vorner, 16, fell dead when a bullet hit him in the left eye. He was standing in a group on the curb in front of his home at 420 Boulevard Northeast.

Wounded in the back and side was Roy Wright, 16, of 142 Bell St. NE, who is in good condition at Grady Hospital.

A police sergeant, Marvin J. Spears, was wounded in the head while attempting to gather information in the hostile crowd that gathered mintues after the shooting at 10:25 p.m. Saturday, about 150 Negroes.

A witness to the shooting, Ronald Barnes, told police the gunman was driving a 1959 black and white Chevrolet. Barnes said the car was moving south on Boulevard at a slow rate of speed, then suddenly stopped and backed up.

Barnes said the driver called out, "You talking to us?"

Another witness, Alex King, said, "I said 'No' and he pushed the white girl over and shot six times."

The gunman's car took off at a high rate of speed. A couple who live next to the shooting scene jumped into their car and attempted to follow. They told police they lost the Chevrolet near Houston Street NE but that it had continued at high speed south on Bouelvard.

Mayor Allen announced the $10,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction at a meeting held in Fort Street Memorial Church.

In a tense, emotional appearance before about 200 persons Sunday afternoon in the church two blocks from the site of the shooting, Mayor Allen also called for an end to rioting and racial violence in Atlanta.

The melee that lasted until about 2:30 a.m. Sunday was the second here in four days. Rioting broke out last Tuesday in the wake of the police-shooting of a car theft suspect.

In the Saturday outbreak, a police help call was sounded with the wounding of Sgt. Spears and officers poured into the neighborhood, cordoning off Boulevard at Forrest and North avenues.

There was only sporadic rock and bottle throwing until about midnight when a sudden barrage of missiles rained out of the night toward police in cars and afoot.

The area quickly quieted down under the threat of shotgun-armed police and there were only scattered incidents of window-smashing. Some police reserves were released from duty about 1 p.m., but about 2 p.m. a mob of about 75 young Negroes gathered and began stoning and window smashing until police cars broke the mob into small groups who were dispersed by foot police.

Throughout Saturday evening, Mayor Allen was on the scene, attempting to ease tempers of the people in the area.

At one point, he walked up and down the nine-block area of Boulevard, going to doorways to plea, "Let's go to bed . . . let's go home . . .it's time to go to bed."

From several of the apartment houses he approached rocks and bricks earlier had rained down from upper stories onto police.

Among the 58 persons arrested were Hosea Williams and Junius Griffin, officials of Martin Luther King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

Williams, one of King's top aides, was arrested by a Negro officer when he refused an order to move along. As he and others in the group were hustled into a paddy wagon, he shouted, "Police in Atlanta are just as inhuman and brutal as they are in Mississippi."

Williams was released from jail Sunday afternoon. He held a press conference to say that the two Negro outbreaks have convinced him that Atlanta must be made the target of sweeping "non-violent" civil rights campaigns similar to the ones SCLC has conducted in Alabama and Mississippi.

Standing on the corner where the melee began, Williams said he would urge Negro children to make mass marches on white schools, adding, "We'll boycott the entire city if we have to."

Allen told reporters later that the $10,000 was put up by "civic minded citizens" who wanted to remain anonymous.

After Allen left the Fort Street Church, Snick field worker Willie Ricks called the mayor "the top gun in Atlanta . . . a wolf in sheep's clothing" who had "come down here to pacify you."

Carmichael said from jail he will conduct religious meditations for the next 96 hours and will not be in contact with persons outside of jail.

King's Associate Bars Big Protest

9-13-66

By MARION GAINES

Massive demonstrations in Atlanta by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s civil rights forces were ruled out Monday by an Atlanta Negro leader who is a national vice president of King's group.

The Rev. Sam Williams, also a co-chairman of the Atlanta Summit Leadership Conference, said Negro leaders here "have not requested — and do not expect to request" Dr. King to mount mass demonstrations in Atlanta.

Hosea Williams, an aide to Dr. King, had denounced the "bestiality and brutality" of Atlanta police Sunday and said he would urge all-out protests by King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

The Rev. Mr. Williams brushed aside Hosea Williams Monday as just "a hired hand" who "does not set SCLC policy."

CONFERENCES HELD

Both Williamses held press conferences at City Hall after leading two Negro delegations into separate conferences with Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. in a search for ways to end the racial rioting which has rocked the city three times in six days.

Mayor Allen assessed the meetings as "reasonably profitable" and expressed hope that "the calm we have now" would continue.

The mayor appeared tired and drawn from his extended on-the-scene efforts over the weekend to quell the rioting in the Boulevard - Forrest Avenue NE area which erupted Saturday night with the fatal shooting of a teen-age Negro by an unidentified white gunman.

CHIEF CONCERN

Allen met first for an hour with Hosea Williams, the Rev. J. D. Grier, a state representative, and several other Negroes. He then conferred separately for about 45 minutes with Sam Williams, Jesse Hill and Ald. Q. V. Williamson, who are co-chairmen of the Atlanta Summit Leadership Conference.

Sam Williams told the press that "our chief concern" was to seek "clemency " from the city for "some innocent people who were swept up and incarcerated" during last week's Summerhill riot and the Boulevard rioting over the weekend.

He said they had been assured "every consideration" would be given to the appeal for clemency.

Williams said the discussion with the mayor did not include Stokely Carmichael, militant head of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. Carmichael has been in jail since last Thursday under $11,000 bond on charges of inciting a riot and creating a disturbance.

Regarding Dr. King's leading protsets here, the Rev. Mr. Williams said that "the policy of SCLC has been, and still is, not to come into any city without first receiving a request from the leadership of that community."

He pointed out that he is an SCLC vice president and that both he and Hill are members of the policy-steting SCLC executive board.

TALKS WITH KING

The Rev. Mr. Williams said he had talked with Dr. King Monday morning. Dr. King, who returned to Atlanta for an SCLC staff meeting, did not issue any statement Monday.

Hosea Williams, who was jailed briefly during the Boulevard rioting, had said he felt Atlanta should be designated "a main target" for SCLC-led demonstrations.

Sam Williams said his group was "not opposed to protests and demonstrations, but we feel they should not be done needlessly.

"We do not see that there is any need for such a thing here this time," he said.

Hosea Williams, who spoke with the press before Sam Williams, appeared considerably subdued compared to his Sunday stance.

He said the meeting with Mayor Allen was "very productive" and that his group would now attempt to work quietly toward "a proper and effective settlement" in the Boulevard area.

Fulton Is Equipping Deputies for Rioting

AC 9/18/66

Leroy Stynchcombe, Fulton County chief deputy sheriff, said Tuesday his staff is being equipped to supplement the Atlanta Police department in event of any future riots.

Stynchcombe said the office can supply a minimum of 40 deputies at any time. On the weekends, between 60 and 75 are available.

"If we are needed, we will work under the supervision of the Atlanta Police Department. My men have been instructed to report to the commanding officer in charge. You can't have two law enforcement agencies under two supervisors in a riot," Stynchcombe said.

The sheriff's office Monday placed rush orders for 100 armbands, 75 crash helmets and 75 night sticks. The deputies are generally used for court work and are not permitted with uniforms.

Also Monday, Stynchcombe received a telegram from the United Sports Club of Philadelphia, Pa., in which the release of Stokley Carmichael from jail was demanded. The telegram was signed by Dempsey Walker, president of the club.

"You are presently holding Mr. Stokley Carmichael under charges that have no basis in fact. We might add that Mr. Carmichael has black brothers and sisters here in Philadelphia and all over the United States who consider your actions as being both unlawful and unjust.

"We demand the immediate release of Mr. Carmichael. Furthermore if you persist in this action we will have no choice but to organize a more effective and direct campaign of national black people to guarantee the rights of Mr. Carmichael," the telegram said.

Stynchcombe said the telegram constituted a threat, but would be ignored. "We'll release Carmichael when he posts $10,000 bond," he said.

New Boulevard Melee Flares as Snick Grabs Control of Peace Talk

ATLANTA

Firebombs Are Hurled At Autos and Buildings

By BILL SHIPP

Firebombs, bricks and bottles rained down on vehicles along riot-torn Boulevard again Monday night after a Snick worker turned a church "peace" meeting into a screeching "black power" rally.

It was the third straight night of violence on Boulevard in the area between Forrest Avenue and North Avenue. At least four flaming Molotov cocktails were hurled at passing cars. A gallon can of fiery kerosene was rolled into the street. A line of fire stretched nearly across the street for a few seconds.

FIRE BOMB

A fire bomb was thrown on the roof of a business firm a few blocks way, but that fire was quickly put out. Police moved in fast, cleared the sidewalks and even the porches. A cold drizzly rain helped them. By midnight Boulevard was peaceful again.

Related stories are on Pages 3, 6 and 8.

Meanwhile, police questioned a suspect late Monday in connection with the fatal shooting of Herbert Varner, 16, Negro, and the wounding of another youth Saturday night near Georgia Baptist Hospital. The shootings triggered the three nights of violence.

Lt. W. K. Perry said investigators were talking with several persons, including a man well known to police. He added he did not know whether any of the persons questioned would be charged.

MASS MEETING

Monday night's violence erupted after Willie Ricks, field secretary of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee took over a mass meeting at the Tabernacle Baptist Church, 475 Boulevard NE. The meeting had been called to calm down the tense Negro community.

Ricks grabbed a microphone and shouted hysterically: "Black power! Black power!" Many young people joined the chant. He told the group they should return to the streets. Many did. That's when the trouble began.

New Boulevard Melee Flares After Rally

lence followed a series of City Hall sessions with Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. after which a top associate of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. said his forces were ruling out any massive demonstrations here.

Dr. King visited the riot-torn area late Monday afternoon and talked with some of the residents about their grievances.

Later, the Rev. J. D. Grier, pastor of the Fort Street Memorial Methodist Church on Boulevard and a state representative, called a meeting of neighborhood youths at his church to organize a youth movement.

RICKS SHOWS UP

Ricks and his Snick associates showed up at that meeting and demanded that it be closed to the press.

A few minutes after that meeting broke up a crowd began gathering at Baptist Tabernacle about three blocks away. Newsmen's cars were pelted with rocks and firecrackers.

Finally the crowd went inside the church, ostensibly to hear Hosea Williams, an aide of Dr. King, talk to them about their complaints.

Instead, Ricks took charge and shouted:

"We're going to have every cracker in Atlanta on his knees . . . We're willing to pay any price."

Then Ricks began the chant for Black Power. Snick workers waved signs which read:

"Move on over or we'll move over you."

150 LED OUT

Ricks led about 150 young people from the church and out onto the sidewalk before Williams could control the meeting. The Snick workers handed out pamphlets which read:

"Fight white power."

The sheets termed Mayor Allen "the top gun in Atlanta."

Williams told the rest of his audience — about 400 — "You'd better think for yourself."

It was Williams who Sunday called for massive demonstrations in Atlanta led by Dr. King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Monday, however, a top associate of King's the Rev. Dr. Sam Williams, called Hosea Williams "a hired hand" who "does not set SCLC policy."

The fire was quickly put out.

In earlier violence during the weekend targets of the missile throwers had been mostly whites. But Monday night they turned on Negro newsmen as well as whites.

Hosea Williams and Clarke circulated in the area to try to bring calm.

Officers on foot and in cars patrolled and warned bystanders, "Let's go home. Come on, break it up. Let's go."

About three blocks north of Georgia Baptist Hospital policemen charged into two apartment houses after their cars were bombarded with bottles, bricks and chunks of concrete.

At least five were arrested during this melee. The five shouted out of the paddy wagon to a large gathering of news reporters that they had not done anything.

Dozens of newsmen from all over the country milled around the area. Police asked them to stay out of the streets, and most did.

PROBLEMS CITED

Hosea Williams, in an impromptu press conference, told reporters he didn't believe that the Negro problems on Boulevard were "so acute" that Dr. King himself would try to mount a demonstration. But he said the Boulevard Negroes "do have problems."

He said Dr. King will leave Atlanta again Tuesday for Grenada, Miss. Williams, arrested in Saturday night's initial uprising in the Boulevard area, said he was leaving Atlanta Thursday for Grenada to participate in a desegregation drive there.

He said most of the top staff of SCLC would be in Grenada by next Tuesday.

"We deserve something in this city that the white men and so-called Negro leaders have robbed us of," Hosea Williams told the cheering church audience Monday night. Some of those who had left the church began to drift back in.

WHERE YOU WANT THEM

"We've got them where we wanted them for a long time," Williams continued. "You've dramatized the issues before the nation. You've got them where you want them. You can demand what you want."

But he warned, "If you stay in the streets they will bring in the National Guard and they'll bring in the Army and crush us to death. We must not overplay our hand."

Minutes after Williams finished speaking, bottles, rocks and cherry bombs began to fly. One group of Negroes attempted to overturn a station wagon with a CBS television crew inside.

Ben Clarke, a member of King's SCLC, talked the mob away from the car.

As the violence got worse police closed off Boulevard again from Forrest Avenue for about eight blocks north.

POLICE SPEED HELP

The officers had used only minimum force in the area up to this point. Then they sent in helmeted, shotgun - and club-carrying patrolmen to clear the sidewalks.

Bottles, some filled with flaming liquid, were hurled from dark alleys and upper stories of apartment houses. Windows of a detective car and a paddy wagon were shattered.

There were numbers of arrests.

A firebomb was tossed on the roof of a neon sign company at 400 Forrest Avenue NE, just a half block behind Georgia Baptist Hospital.

A fire truck roared into the area, and another crowd started gathering. But police moved in in force and quickly broke it up.

Negro Homeowners Protest Site of New Vine City School

By DUANE RINER

A delegation of elderly Negro homeowners on the western fringe of Vine City angrily protested the selection of their area as the site of a new Vine City junior high school during an appearance Monday night before the Atlanta Board of Education.

Dr. Rufus Clement

The board, acting on a motion by Dr. Rufus E. Clement, established a three-member committee to inspect the area "and try to come up with a mutually agreeable solution to the problem." He indicated that sites within Vine City itself would be considered.

John H. Moore, a spokesman for the delegation, said residents of the area west of Sunset Street, which he said is considered the western boundary of Vine City, have maintained their homes in excellent condition and some owners are "old, retired and not able to make a loan to buy another house."

The area, he noted, recently was rezoned from apartment to residential classification "because it is well-kept."

The school board, Moore declared, "is making an error" because land for the junior high school, first within the Vine City area, is available in the vicinity of Mitchell Street, Maple and Tattnall. "Urban renewal took people out of their homes and land is just lying there wasting," he insisted.

The board could do Vine City "a great credit" and uplift the slum by choosing a site within the area from Rhodes Street to Magnolia and Vine to Sunset, Moore declared. He assured that enough land would be available to build the school.

ASSESSMENTS COMPARED

Moore presented the board a tax assessment tabulation comparing the $80,760 assessment on property within Vine City with $86,520 on the currently studied building site in the area of Dunkirk, Spencer, Griffin and Thurmond streets where the protesters reside.

"Why not give us a chance?" Moore asked. "We are appealing to you to find some other section."

Moore said he lived within Vine City for 40 years before moving to his present home on Griffin Street. The City of Atlanta, he charged, "has been shunning Vine City for all these years."

HOUSES FALLING

"I'm wondering if the City of Atlanta is afraid of Vine City landlords who have been collecting rent for 50 years while houses are falling down nearly on the sidewalk," Moore commented.

"Don't sit in City Hall and look at your map. Go and look at our section; see how our houses are well built," he implored. "You're going to let land lay waste and come over there to rob us," Moore charged.

Professing himself "very much in sympathy with Moore," Dr. Clement said he would like for the committee to join with the board's building and grounds staff and residents of Vine City in looking over the alternate sites suggested by Moore.

COMMITTEE NAMED

School board president Ed S. Cook appointed Clement and board members Fred M. Shell and Bill C. Wainwright to make the investigation.

A squabble developed within the board when Dr. Horace E. Tate, Negro educator whose seat has been challenged in Fulton Superior Court, insisted no special committee was necessary since the board already had a Buildings and Grounds Committee of which he is a member.

He attempted to withdraw his second to the motion creating the special committee and was advised that minutes showed the motion had been seconded by Wainwright.

DEFENDS RULING

"You are appointing a committee to supersede a committee already established," protested Tate. He was overruled by presiding officer Cook who commented, "My ruling is that the motion is proper and correct. You may appeal it if you wish."

Couple Held Here In Negro's Killing

AC 9/5/66

By KEELER McCARTNEY and BILL SHIPP

A 42-year-old Atlantan and his wife were held Tuesday in the fatal shooting of Negro boy that set off three nights of rioting in the vicinity of Georgia Baptist Hospital.

William Haywood James of 581 Hill St. SE was held on a murder charge in the death cf Hulet Varner Jr., 16. His wife, Mrs. Edna Ruth James, 34, was placed under $2,000 bond as a material witness.

Mrs. James, wearing white shorts, clutched her purse nervously during the proceedings.

15 Negroes, including Snick leader Stokely Carmichael, on charges of riot in connection with racial violence on Sept. 6 on Capitol Avenue SE-SW. Sol-Gen. Lewis Slaton said indictments against at least 25 other persons would be sought in connection with the Capitol Avenue uproar and the three nights of violence on Boulevard NE.

And Gov. Carl Sanders revealed he had alerted the National Guard for possible use in putting down further rioting, but a chilling rain Tuesday seemed to put a damper on tempers in the slum sections.

The James couple was arraigned late Tuesday before Municipal Judge T. C. Little. James entered a plea of not guilty and said he had not had an opportunity to consult with an attorney.

James later agreed to have the case transferred to Superior Court after Little explained that Municipal Court did not have final jurisdiction in the case.

Lt. W. K. Perry said a witness to the Saturday night killing of Varner and the wounding of his 16-year-old companion, Roy Wright, also a Negro, had positively identified James in a police lineup.

A 1959 model automobile owned by the Jameses also has been identified as the car from which the shots were fired, Perry told the court. Perry said the Jameses at first denied owning the car.

James said he had never denied owning the automobile. Mrs. James said she told Sgt. J. E. Helms that they did not own the car because she thought police were investigating an auto accident they had been involved in.

"I've never killed anyone. I wasn't even in the vicinity where the killing took place," James told the court. "I've never faced anything like this before."

James said when he was first contacted by police Monday night he was given to understand that they wanted to talk with him for a short time. He said he was not given an opportunity to call an attorney.

EXPLAINS

Perry told the court that James had been in the homicide squad room where telephones were available to him.

James, a stocky 193-pound man with an amputated little finger and a cross and flowers tattooed on his right arm, listed his occupation as carpenter and tree-trimmer.

He has a seven-page police record showing at least 20 convictions dating to 1942. When arrested he was on bond on a robbery charge filed Sept. 1. Previous arrests include such offenses as robbery, burglary, auto theft and assault and battery.

Witnesses had said the car of Varner's slayer also contained a baby but police have not yet accounted for the child. Lt. Perry said James contended he was hit on the head by a rock Thursday in the area of the shooting but wasn't in the area Saturday night when Varner was killed.

Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. has posted a $10,000 bond for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons responsible for killing the Negro youth.

Witnesses told police the two boys were on the sidewalk in front of 420 Boulevard NE, the apartment house where Varner resided, when a car occupied by a white man and woman drove past.

The man drove past, stopped, backed up and asked the boys if they said anything. They replied "no." Witnesses said the man pushed the woman down in the car, fired a pistol over her several times and then drove rapidly away.

The 15 Negroes, including Carmichael, were indicted by the Fulton Grand Jury on misdemeanor riot charges in connection with violence against policemen at Capitol Avenue and Ormond Street.

The jury later this week will consider indictments against 18 persons in connection with the three nights of rioting on Boulevard, Sol. Gen. Slaton said. Seven other indictments will be proposed in connection with Sept. 7 incidents at Capitol Avenue and Ormond.

Boulevard, still heavily guarded by policemen working 12-hour shifts, was quiet all day Tuesday after a night of firebombs and brick-throwing. A steady rain helped cool tensions. The street, sealed off Monday night, was reopened to traffic Tuesday.

But police waited at the ready, stationed in cars at parking lots and other strategic locations in the area, and with Chief Herbert Jenkins among them.

Several cars patrolled the area, some with helmeted officers. A paddy wagon was stationed nearby. The boarded windows of shops bore mute testimony of the rocks and homemade fire bombs that had flown through the area.

Carmichael, 25, chairman of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, remained in Fulton County jail Tuesday afternoon although his bond was reduced from $11,000 to $1,000.

Tighten Riot Laws

9/23/66 AC

Allen Urges State

By MARION GAINES

A review and tightening of Georgia's anti-riot laws by the 1967 General Assembly was called for Thursday by Mayor Ivan Allen Jr.

The mayor said he would instruct the city attorney's office to confer with Fulton County legislators about revising and updating the state's riot statutes.

"Atlanta has just gone through a crisis, and when that happens you need to go back and take a look at everything involved in it," said Allen.

He was referring to four nights of Negro rioting in less than a week here earlier this month.

"We need to see if we have adequate state laws to prevent occurrences of this type," Allen said. "I am speaking from first-hand experience."

During the outbreaks on Capitol Avenue and Boulevard, Mayor Allen personally led Atlanta police efforts to quell the disturbances.

Stokely Carmichael, head of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, and several of his SNCC colleagues were indicted by the Fulton County Grand Jury on misdemeanor charges growing out of the riots.

Asked if he thought Atlanta's image as a racially progressive city had been damaged, Mayor Allen replied:

"If we had to go through it, we came out with as good a reputation as could be expected."

He noted that the national press in general was laudatory of the Atlanta Police Department "and condemned the actions of SNCC."

Heard Carmichael Urge Mob On, Negro Sergeant Testifies

ATLANTA 10/11/66

By BILL SHIPP

A Negro police sergeant testified in federal court Friday that he heard Stokely Carmichael say "baby, burn" over a loudspeaker and urge a mob to remain in the streets during the Sept. 6 riot here.

And Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. said he believed, but was not positive, that he saw Carmichael leaving the riot scene while he (the mayor) was on his way there.

The testimony was heard as attorneys for Carmichael and the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee continued their efforts to prove Georgia's anti-riot laws are unconstitutional and that officials use them to harass SNCC workers.

Police Sgt. Claude Dixon, a member of the police force for 18 years, testified he saw a sound truck on Capitol Avenue after a crowd gathered in the streets.

He said he heard Carmichael say over the truck's loudspeaker: "They think we're going to leave the street. . . . Stay in the street."

"Baby, burn," Carmichael continued, according to Dixon.

Dixon said he knew it was Carmichael because he had talked with him on four previous occasions and had heard him twice using the truck loudspeaker.

Carmichael, seated at the plaintiff's table, shook his head and whistled under his breath when he heard Dixon's testimony. He turned to a group of reporters seated nearby and said: "You people have to set me free now."

Dixon said he obtained a warrant for Carmichael from Municipal Court Judge Bob Jones on the basis of what he had heard.

Carmichael is under $1,000 bond on a charge of riot growing out of the Sept. 6 violence at Capitol Avenue and Ormond Street SE.

Earlier, Mayor Allen told the three-judge panel hearing the case that as he was driving to the riot scene to try to calm things down he turned to his aide, George Royal, and said, "There goes Stokley Carmichael out."

He said he saw a car in which he believed Carmichael was riding, but he said "at this time I could not swear to it."

The mayor testified he saw James Forman, manager of SNCC's Atlanta office at the scene.

Allen said before the riot erupted Carmichael and several other people came to his office to protest the arrests some days earlier of SNCC workers in connection with an incident at the Atlanta Army induction center.

Capt. Morris Redding said on Sept. 8 he saw Carmichael standing in the street at Ormond and Fraser shouting:

". . . The white cops are murdering our black brothers.

Come with me. We will take what we want."

Redding testified he saw several persons participating in the violence and rowdiness.

Fay Bellamy, a SNCC officer, used "vulgar language" and urged the crowd to pay no attention to requests to disperse, Redding testified.

Miss Bellamy, wearing an African-type toga, earlier took the stand and said she did not remember whether or not she used curse words at the riot scene.

"Sometimes I curse for no reason at all," she said.

She said she was arrested after she wanted to know why Mayor Allen had come into the riot-torn Summerhill area, and "why was he faking a smile."

Miss Bellamy said the mayor "pointed his finger at me and said: 'I'm going to get you.' "

On cross examination, she explained she knew that Allen was "faking" because "whenever someone is gritting his teeth and a smile passes across his face I know he is faking."

OTHER LEADERS

Several other SNCC leaders testified to the effect they had nothing to do with promoting the violence that flared after a white policeman shot and wounded a Negro car theft suspecet who was trying to flee.

Miss Mary Myers, 19, mother of three small children, testified that she is being held in Fulton County jail because she has been unable to raise money to make the $2,000 bond.

She said she was arrested because she "kicked and bit an officer" after he grabbed her and started "shoving my head."

Miss Myers, who said she was not a member of SNCC, said a lot of things got her excited at the riot including the memory that "on Aug. 12 a policeman shot and killed my baby's father."

Judge Elbert Tuttle of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals suggested that Sol. Gen. Lewis Slaton look into the matter of bond for Miss Myers. Slaton said he would and noted that all SNCC officials arrested in the riot have made bond. He said the county wanted to see that everyone was treated equally.

CHAFIN TESTIFIES

Supt. Clinton Chafin testified that he had received no instructions to arrest any specific person such as Carmichael.

Slaton testified he had discussed with some other officials what legal measures could be taken in the wake of a civil disturbance.

In addition to Judge Tuttle, the case is being heard by District Judges Frank Hooper and Sidney Smith.

The hearing for the preliminary injunction to restrain the enforcement of riot and disorderly conduct laws will be resumed at 9 a.m. Saturday.

Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, Oct. 3—Charles Longstreet Weltner, the young Atlanta Congressman who is a foremost representative of a new style in Southern politics, has shown daring and lonely resolution since he started his political career. He showed it again when he startled even his closest aides and political allies by announcing that he would give up the Democratic nomination he won on Sept. 14 and that he would not seek re-election in November.

Man in the News

Mr. Weltner indicated he was withdrawing because he could not support Lester Maddox, an ultrasegregationist nominated for Governor in the Georgia Democratic primary runoff Wednesday. The Representative pointed out that he, like other candidates, had taken an oath to support the Democratic nominee. He said he would not run on the same ticket with Mr. Maddox because he could not "compromise with hate."

Earlier he had supported former Gov. Ellis Arnall, the moderate who was defeated by Mr. Maddox. It is not usual for Georgia Congressmen to take sides in the Democratic gubernatorial primary, but Mr. Weltner had announced his support of Mr. Arnall from the start.

A New Southern Stance

Mr. Weltner has been an arresting spokesman for a new Southern political stance since he went to Washington four years ago.

He received nationwide attention when he broke with other Southern representatives and voted for the Civil Rights Act of 1964. He supported the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and such Johnson Administration measures as Medicare and the poverty bill. His voting record is considered to have been more liberal than that of any other Georgia representative.

A trim, fast-paced lawyer who is notably free of the old-style Southern political rhetoric, he went to Congress when he was 34 years old. He had defeated Representative James C. Davis, one of the mainstays of Southern conservatism and the segregationist outlook.

One of the issues Mr. Weltner used effectively was Mr. Davis's membership, many years earlier, in the Ku Klux Klan.

Political Phenomenon

That victory alone established him as something of a political phenomenon. He had entered the race as a little-known and poorly financed candidate.

He had to win three hard battles: a four-man primary, in which he gained a runoff; the runoff, in which he overwhelmed Davis by 14,000 votes, and a general election campaign in which he defeated a strong Republican.

Some observers thought they saw him change in the process from a somewhat awkward and even shy amateur to a hardened political professional.

Another fact also was quickly apparent: he had entered with little money, risking the loss of his limited personal assets by borrowing on his home.

He reported in 1963 that he and his wife, Betty Jean, had total assets worth $15,865.

"My own financial position hardly commends the U. S. Congress as a sure road to wealth," he said.

In 1966, he said he was still paying off his 1962 campaign debts. He refused to be a beneficiary of a Democratic National Committee booklet in which major corporations had bought advertisements for $15,000 a page. He sharply criticized the booklet as an improper means of raising campaign finances.

Stop Atlanta Vote Stressed in Cobb

AJ+C 10/9/66

The Cobb County Chamber of Commerce has asked citizens to vote yes on seven constitutional amendments — including a "Stop Atlanta" measure — and veto a billboard amedment in November's election.

The directors of the chamber recommended that the "Billboard and Junkyard" amendment be defeated because, among other things, it would give the General Assembly power to zone property within 1,000 feet on either side of a state or federal road.

That provision would allow the legislature to zone one-third of Marietta, the chamber said.

The chamber asked that citizens all over the state vote to defeat the amendment, which it called "complex and involved . . . and somewhat misleading."

Seven amendments were recommended for voters to approve — six unanimously on the part of the chamber, and one with reservations.

THE CHAMBER felt that a local amendment setting up a zoning and planning commission for Cobb County should be passed, but that further action which the General Assembly would have to take to implement the amendment be cleared with the Cobb County Commissioners.

The Chamber declared that the amendment "was permissive in nature," and was recommended because of a report by the Chamber's zoning study commission.

RECOMMENDED with no reservations were amendments to:

—Allow consolidation of school districts across city and county lines.

—Enact the "Stop Atlanta" bill, a measure authorizing all Cobb County voters to participate in any referendum on Atlanta's future expansion into the county. The measure is currently tied up in the courts.

—Authorize the Georgia Department of Industry and Trade to participate with counties, cities and non-profit groups in tourist promotions.

—Give the General Assembly power to appropriate money to obtain federal educational funds.

—Correct a technical error in another amendment, on the same ballot, dealing with home rule.

—Allow the state to finance up to 10 per cent of local public transportation (rapid transit).

2 Vine City School Sites Okayed but Group Protests

By MARGARET HURST

The Atlanta Board of Education Monday night approved sites for two schools in the Vine City neighborhood, but some 50 Vine City residents agreed at an impromptu meeting afterward to take the matter to court.

John Moore, spokesman for the residents who met after the board meeting at the Beulah Baptist Church, said everyone at the meeting was "in accord" about taking the issue to court.

The two schools in contention are the proposed Vine City Junior High on Sunset and the English Avenue Primary on Griffin Street.

A majority of the protesters were against the location of the junior high. However, Jesse Hill, co-chairman of the Atlanta Summit Leadership Conference, said both locations will be contested.

ABOVE AVERAGE

He said both schools are being built in areas where the housing is above average. Hill said the residents from the area had hoped the Board of Education would build the schools in a rundown area of Vine City where the schools would serve a "double duty"—to replace slums as well as offer additional educational facilities.

Hill told the board: "You are passing over dilapidated fire traps and destroying homes where people have invested large sums of money."

The Negro leader said he would suggest two courses of action to residents of the area where the new schools would be built.

First, he said, he would tell them to seek a court injunction against the proposed building locations and, second, he would suggest they take their argument to the Atlanta Board of Aldermen, who have to give their approval before the projects can be started.

MORE COSTLY

Hill said the city is "asking for a protest they don't need" by trying to build the schools on the proposed sites.

Several members of the board said other proposed sites were more expensive and also would involve transplanting larger numbers of families.

The board was scheduled to consider the proposed school sites at its last meeting, but delayed action until this month so a special committee could study the situation.

SPECIAL PANEL

The committee recommended that the sites be approved.

A spokesman for the Council on Human Relations of Greater Atlanta, Thomas McPherson, asked the board to consider creating a special committee to deal with questions of human

12 Black Power Allies Sue Over Jail Handling

By ACHSAH NESMITH

Twelve Atlanta Negroes who contend they are "intimately identified" with both the concept of "black power" and ending the war in Viet Nam filed suit in federal court here Monday "to end cruel and unusual punishment in the city prison and jail."

U.S. District Judge Frank A. Hooper set a hearing for 2 p.m. Oct. 27 on their request for a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction. The matter will be heard only on affidavits, according to the order requiring Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. and Ralph Hulsey, administrator of the city prison stockade to show cause why they should not be so restrained.

The suit was filed for the group, 11 of whom are currently in jail, by Howard Moore, attorney and brother-in-law of Julian Bond. Bond was twice refused his seat in the Georgia House of Representatives because of statements he made about draft card burning and the war in Viet Nam.

Three of the Negroes charge they have been denied needed medical attention and one of the women contends she was placed in a windowless 7x7x4-foot "box" for refusing to serve white guards and "thereby be subjected to insults and indignities." The suit said floor of the box is covered with human offal and is lighted day and night by a single lightbulb which is never turned off.

Only Negro females are required to serve as waitresses and "all work assignments at the jail and prison are determined by the racial prejudices of the defendants Ivan Allen and Hulsey," the suit charges. "The dirtiest and most dangerous jobs and assignments are reserved solely for inmates who are Negroes and black.

"White men with exaggerated hatred for black people . . . are assigned guard jobs in the prisons," the suit charges. The guards are "aided and encouraged" to express their racial hatred and "have unfettered power to beat prisoners," revoke good time or place prisoners in the "box."

"For merely greeting each other with the phrase 'black power' Negro prisoners have been put in the box and starved," the complaint contends. The Negro plaintiffs named maintain they are segregated from all other Negro inmates and "denied normal contacts and work assignments available to other inmates."

Hulsey said he would have no comment until he had seen a copy of the suit.

Allen declined comment.

The suit was filed as a class action for "all inhabitants of Atlanta and environs presently confined in Atlanta prisons and suffering from cruel and unusual punishment that is so much a part of these institutions or who may at some future point be confined in one of the Atlanta prisons and be subjected to the established customs and practics of persecution of prisoners."

All but one of the plaintiffs is now in the city stockade. Miss Gwendolyn Robinson, the other plaintiff, is "engaged in daily picketing activities in Atlanta which opposes the drafting of Negroes for a war in Viet Nam."

The jailed plaintiffs were arrested last August after grappling with police when they attempted to storm an Army induction center while shouting "black power." They are Miss Regina Pleasant, Miss Flora Goodloe, Johnny Wilson, Donald Howard, Donald Stone, Simuel Shutz, Dwight Williams, Robert Moore, Robert Smith, Michael Simmons and Larry Fox.

ATLANTA JAYCEES APPLAUD DR. KING

NYT 10/21/66

Recently Integrated Group Is Host to Rights Leader

By ROY REED
Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, Oct. 20—The Atlanta Junior Chamber of Commerce, an all-white organization until a week ago, had as its guest speaker today the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Although he is a native of Atlanta, the winner of the Nobel Peace Prize had never addressed the group before and many in the audience had never heard him speak. One of his aides said it was his first appearance before such a group in the South. All-male and business-oriented, the Jaycees include many who are considered the future leaders of Atlanta.

He spoke of his civil rights work and urged them to recognize the necessity o fhelping "the other America," the Negro minority that lives in poverty and misery.

It is not true, he said, that time will solve the Negroes' problems. Men of goodwill must use time for constructive action,

He also attacked the idea that legislation cannot change people's hearts. He said with a grin, "The law may not make a man love me, but it can restrain him from lynching me, and I think that's pretty important, also." The Jaycees laughed.

A Hostile Reaction

He said that the nation needed a guaranteed annual income for all persons to lift poor people out of their cycle of poverty. That drew the only hostile reaction during a question-answer period, especially after he added that the guaranteed annual income should be at least $4,000 a family. Several members said afterward they thought that was unrealistic.

Speaking extemporaneously, he ended with a dazzling string of literary allusions and quotations and declared, "If the inexpressible cruelties of slavery could not stop us, the opposition that we now face will surely fail."

Then he said that he was confident the day would someday come when all could say, "in the words of the old Negro hymn, 'free at last, free at last —thank God, we are free at last.'"

The 375 men, many obviously moved, burst into loud applause that lasted more than half a minute.

Then, a young man rose to ask the first question. "When will the civil rights groups start to work among their own people," he asked, instead of seeking help from outside agencies such as the Federal Government?"

Dr. King replied, a little wearily and with some coolness, that the civil rights organizations were promoting self-help among Negroes and that he agreed that a man should lift himself by his own bootstraps.

"But it is a cruel jest to say to a bootless man, 'lift yourself by your own bootstraps,'" he said.

The Atlanta Jaycees were desegregated last Thursday, the same day that their weekly speaker was Lester G. Maddox, the segregationist Democratic nominee for Governor.

Mayor Allen Given Bill of Rights Award

AC 12/15/66

Civil Liberties Union Hears NAACP Lawyer Greenberg

By DICK HEBERT

A top civil rights lawyer said here Wednesday night he doesn't think the U.S. Supreme Court decision in the muddled Georgia governor's race portends any hard times for civil rights cases in the courtroom.

"I'm going to be arguing some cases before them this year and I expect to win them," said Greenberg, director-counsel for the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund.

Mayor Allen

The New York-based attorney said he doesn't think "there's been any shift" in the court's thinking in spite of speculation that its 5-4 decision to let the Georgia legislature pick the next governor has alligned Justice Hugo Black with the bench's four most conservative members.

PUSH HARDER

In fact, Greenberg said, dawyers and communities should be pushing even harder for civil rights before the bench to counter the so-called "black powed—white backlash" talk.

He was here to address Georgia chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union at a banquet marking the 175th birthday of the Bill of Rights.

At the dinner Mayor Ivan Allen was given a "Bill of Rights Day" award, which said that, "because he respects the rights of each of us, he has made Atlanta a better place for all of us."

Allen, accepting the award, said that he and the ACLU have not always seen "eye to eye" on "techniques and methods," and "we will continue to get in each other's hair on other occasions."

NEW ELECTION

The ACLU represented plaintiffs in the Georgia governor's suit who wanted a new election open to any candidate.

In spite of Atlanta's civil rights progress, enough hasn't been done, Greenberg said. "If you want to keep a boat on the right course going downstream, you have to move faster than the current," he said.

"If the city of Atlanta, which is in the vanguard, doesn't forge ahead, how can you expect other cities to?" Greenberg asked.

He said the city still has segregated teaching, segregated medical and dental societies and other forms of racial discrimination and segregation. He said the "citizens in the slums have seen better" and will demand better.

He said the new drive by civil rights attorneys should probe deeper than "overt" segregation into the reasons why Negro slum residents cannot better themselves. Many times the laws won't let them, he said.

CITES LAWS

He cited laws which require an employable woman on welfare to leave her children and get a job, those which throw a poor man out of his home without "due notice or a hearing" and loan sharks who extract high interest payments from slum residents and repossess goods on a moment's notice if the payments aren't met.

Greenberg also said that "if I see any silver lining in the cloud of Mr. (Lester) Maddox becoming governor of this state" it is that he will crystalize the state's segregation policies the way Alabama did under Gov. George Wallace and make it easier for lawyers to seek remedies in court.

Carmichael Trial Waits Riot Appeal

ATLANTA

AC 12/15/66

He'll Face Charges If Ruling Upholding State Act Stands

Stokely Carmichael—"black power" advocate and chairman of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee—will be tried on riot charges in Fulton Superior Court if the U.S. Supreme Court affirms Tuesday's lower court ruling that held Georgia's riot statute to be constitutional.

Carmichael and 28 others are under indictment in Fulton County on charges of riot. The charges grew out of the September riots which involved numberous arrests; thousands of dollars in property damages; a number of injuries, and one violent death.

Fulton Sol. Gen. Lewis R. Slanton said Wednesday that the state is ready to try Carmichael, but will wait until any appeal is made before setting a trial date for the SNCC official.

CITY ORDINANCE OUT

The federal court Tuesday declined to hold the riot section of the Georgia law unconstitutional although it declared unconstitutional a City of Atlanta ordinance covering disorderly conduct.

"I anticipate that they will appeal the decision, but we are ready for trial," Slaton commented.

Howard Moore, lawyer for Carmichael and the other indicted on the riot charges, said Tuesday's court decision was a "95 per cent" victory."

However, Slaton seemed only concerned about the remaining 5 per cent which he says gives him the authority to go ahead and try Carmichael for riot.

There was also talk Wednesday that Moore is likely to request a change of venue if those charged with riot do go to trial.

It was learned that Slanton is agreeable to trying them anywhere in Georgia.

Moore said:

"I am confident any fair-minded jury would acquit him (Carmichael). We actually would perfer a trial, but where could we get a fair-minded jury?"

TRIAL SCHEDULED

Fulton County also next month has scheduled for trial an unemployed tree trimmer charged with the murder of a young Negro whose death triggered the Boulevard riots in September.

Assistant Sol. Gen. George K. McPherson said that William H. James will go on trial on charges of killing Herbert Vorner this winter, possibly as early as January.

The 16-year-old Negro was shot to death Sept. 10, as he walked with a companion along Boulevard. The death triggered three days of Negro rioting.

The defendant is now serving a six-year sentence for assault to murder. This conviction was not related to the Vorner case or the fall riots.

Raymond Milton James, brother of William, is serving a five-year prison term for shooting a witness who was to testify against his brother in the Vorner case.

Race Relations Commission Organizes; Gets Challenge

AC 12/16/61

Massell

Alexander

. Atlanta's new Community Relations Commission, created to help solve problems of racial strife, was officially organized Wednesday and urged to "get out there to the danger spots as quickly as possible."

The challenge came from T. M. Alexander, a member of the commission, set up recently by the Atlanta aldermanic board.

Alexander's comments came after the 20-member commission had been sworn in and was having its first business session.

Alexander and several other members expressed the hope that the commission could move swiftly to head off potential trouble in areas similar to Boulevard and Summerhill where racial incidents erupted in September.

Division of the commission into small groups which could move into these potentially explosive areas "and hear the people" was suggested by Alexander.

Vice Mayor Sam Massell Jr. declared that with formation of the commission "no longer will official concern about community relations come about only as result of crisis and emergency."

Organization of the commission, said Massell, assures that racial problems will "now rightfully take their place in City Hall as a day-to-day responsibility."

The commission, headed by attorney Irving Kaler as chairman, will operate initially on a $30,000 a year budget. This includes some $12,000 to $15,000 for an executive director.

Much of the commission's first meeting was taken up with discussion of the type of person needed for the executive director's job.

The Rev. Sam Williams, head of the commission's screening committee, said some 17 applications for the job have already been received.

Massell urged the commission to hold "mass meetings" in Atlanta neighborhoods in order to "catalog grievances" of the citizens.

He also suggested that the commission pursue an application for an Office of Economic Opportunity grant in the amount of $130,000 to establish a "fair housing center" as an adjunct Mayor Ivan Allen's campaign for more housing opportunities for the lower economic bracket.

John G. Feild, director of the Community Relations Service of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, told the commission members that they would have to decide themselves what role they wish to play in the city's racial relations.

Feild said they must decide "whether you're going to do it yourselves or see that it gets done."

The Rev. Mr. Williams was named first vice chairman of the commission; Helen Bullard, second vice chairman, and Mrs. Fred Patterson, secretary.

ATLANTA

Atlanta Area Passes 3 Cities on Way to 2 Million

AC 12/22/66

By DUANE RINER

First Milwaukee, and then the world.

That's about the way Atlanta's population growth is running, according to the Atlanta Region Metropolitan Planning Commission's 1966 population and housing report.

For instance, the Atlanta metropolitan area was home to an estimated 1,211,000 persons as of last April 1. The growth rate was calculated at more than 32,000 persons per year.

Since the 1960 census, Atlanta has out-ranked Kansas City, San Diego and Seattle for a total population growth in the six-year period of some 194,000 persons. Milwaukee could be next. Atlanta now occupies the No. 21 spot among the nation's 231 metropolitan centers.

2 MILLION BY '83

The planning commission estimates that the two million population mark will be achieved in 1983.

Aside from growth statistics, there are trends.

Both white and Negro segments of the population are showing numerical gains with a present ratio in the five-county area of 77.8 per cent white and 22.2 per cent nonwhite. However, the nonwhite share of the total in the six years since the last census has declined six-tenths of 1 per cent.

SHARES TREND

Atlanta shares in the common trend in metropolitan areas across the country for nonwhites to concentrate in the central cities. Some 221,587 of the Atlanta area's nonwhite total of 268,993 residents live within the city. In fact, the nonwhite share of the total population inside the city limits has risen ffrom 38.3 per cent in 1960 to 44.4 per cent in 1966.

Illustrating Atlanta's population mobility was the influx of more than 142,000 newcomers from every state in the United States and another 6,000 from abroad in the period from 1955 to 1960, while 113,000 checked out for other parts of the country. The net migration gain during the five-year period was 29,000 from the United States, or 35,000 including those from abroad. Eighty per cent of the net gain of 29,000 from other sections of the country came from rural areas. The smaller areas of Georgia alone contributed a net growth of 14,000.

That Atlanta is a city attractive to youth was reflected in a statistic showing that 85 per cent of the net population increase was in the under-35 age range.

One-third of Atlanta's newcomers arrived from major metropolitan areas while 40 per cent of those leaving headed for big cities.

Atlanta gained population from 2 centers dispersed among 16 states in the South, Northeast, North Central states and the midwest. However, the losses seemed to be concentrated in the rapid growth states of California, Texas and Florida.

Where do the newcomers live? In the suburbs by a percentage of 61 to 39. The 61 per cent outside the Atlanta city limits were divided thusly: DeKalb County, 28 per cent; Cobb, 13 per cent; Fulton outside Atlanta, 11 per cent; Clayton, 6 per cent, Gwinnett, 3 per cent. Clayton continued to lead the metropolitan counties in growth with an annual increase of 8.1 per cent. DeKalb maintains its lead in the amount of growth with an average of 12,570 additional residents each year since 1960.

nnN arepla

The five-county area has 46 municipalities ranging from Atlanta with 499,000 persons to Chattahoochee Plantation with a population of 96.

The number of housing units has grown from 308,613 in 1960 to an estimated 397,148 this year.

And for the guys who bothered to wade through a morass of statistics, here's the kicker: 17,000 more females came to Atlanta in the six-year period than moved out. And more than one-third of them are corn-fed gals from the country between the ages of 20 and 24.

Sorry, measurements and phone numbers were not included.

Mayor Allen Leads Efforts Early Sunday to Quell Violence Just North of Georgia Baptist Hospital

Victims' Mothers Consoled by Allens

By BILL SHIPP

"We have boys of our own," said Mrs. Ivan Allen Jr. "I know how you must feel."

Mrs. Nora Vorner did not answer. She only wept.

The mayor and his wife had come on this Sunday afternoon to extend their sympathy and the sympathy of the city to the family of 16-year-old Herbert (Dukie) Vorner, who was shot to death by an unidentified assailant Saturday night.

His death and the wounding of another boy in front of the apartment house in which the Vorner family lives on Boulevard touched off Atlanta's second major racial melee in five days.

The mayor went to the scene Saturday night and early Sunday to help clear the streets and stop the violence.

Sunday afternoon he and his wife came back on their mission of sympathy.

A crowd of youngsters clustered around the apartment house entrance. No one spoke as the mayor and his group entered. They just looked. A little boy started crying hallway to the last apartment on the right.

Allen introduced his wife and himself to a man who opened the door.

The mayor asked for Mr. Vorner. He was not at home. Several children stood around inside.

The dead boy's 14-year-old brother, Howard, looked at Allen but did not speak. Mrs. Vorner sat next to a window, her face buried in her hands.

The mayor patted her on the back, told her he was sorry and promised that the city would try to see that justice was done. Then Mrs. Allen spoke quietly with the distraught mother.

Mrs. Vorner's weeping could be heard through the door, as the mayor and his wife left the old, worn apartment house at 420 Boulevard SE.

Next, Mr. and Mrs. Allen went to see Mrs. Nora Wright at 142 Bell St. SE. Mrs. Wright managed to smile a little.

Her son, Roy, 16, had been wounded by a shot at the same time young Vorner was killed. Mrs. Wright said she was first told her son also had been shot to death.

The mayor told her to "have faith." Mrs. Wright said she would. She said she was getting ready to go to Grady Hospital to visit her son again. She had been with him through most of the night.

Mrs. Wright, recounting the Saturday night of terror, said a woman phoned her shortly after 11 p.m.

HURRIED TO SCENE

"She was screaming in the telephone, 'Your boy has been killed!' " Mrs. Wright said. "I got over there as fast as I could. But they'd already taken him to Grady. I didn't know what to do."

When she finally got to the hospital, Mrs. Wright found her son alive, but he "had tubes all in him and he was hurting and crying."

Mrs. Wright said her son later in the night told her he was standing with one foot over his bicycle talking with Vorner when a car with a white man and white woman passed them.

Then the car came back and the man opened fire, the youth said. Vorner was struck first. Roy told his mother that he ducked and just as he did, he got hit.

Mrs. Wright said Roy had gone with another youngster to run an errand and told her he would be back in time to see the end of the football game on television.

Mrs. Wright said she did not know the Vorner youth.

"I just thank the Lord that Roy wasn't killed," she said.

Bond Case 3-Judge Hearing To Run Gamut of Legalities

By KIM CHAPIN

The three-judge panel appointed by federal Judge Elbert P. Tuttle to hear the case of Julian Bond vs. the Georgia House of Representatives apparently will involve a whole fistful of legal entanglements, ranging all the way from freedom of speech, to lack of proper representation, to ex post facto legislation.

This is made clear by the petition filed on behalf of the plaintiffs, who include Mr. Bond, the representative-elect from House District 136 who was denied his seat by an overwhelming majority of the full House; Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., the Nobel Peace Prize-winning civil rights leader who heads the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and Mrs. Arel Keyes. Dr. King and Mrs. Keyes are plaintiffs by virtue of their residence in the 136th District. The 136th District is a primarily Negro district, and all the plaintiffs are Negroes.

The defendants include six members of the House, and indirectly the full House, plus various House officials ranging from Speaker George T. Smith to David Peeples, the House doorkeeper.

Judge Tuttle is the chief judge of the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals. He named Griffin B. Bell of his court and Lewis R. Morgan of the North Georgia District Court to sit with him and hear the case.

THE FACTS are fairly clear.

Mr. Bond won the Democratic party nomination on May 5, 1965, and six weeks later was elected by an overwhelming margin over Republican Malcolm J. Dean, by 2,320 votes to 487.

On Jan. 6, four days before the House was to convene, Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) Executive Secretary John Lewis read a prepared statement highly critical of United States' Viet Nam policy.

The statement accused the United States of deception in its claims of concern for the Vietnamese people; equated the deaths of civil rights workers with the deaths of Vietnamese peasants; accused the United States of aggression and vio- [illegible] law, and amendments, and that it "injured the class of plaintiffs here represented by depriving them of their right to representations." The equal protection clause of the 14th amendment, and the 15th and 19th amendments, were also cited.

—The oath of office is vague and void; however, Mr. Bond was ready to take the oath and yet was denied his seat.

—The refusal to seat Mr. Bond denies the plaintiffs a "Republican form of government."

—House Resolution 19 is a bill of attainer (imposing punishment by a legislative act); it is also an ex post facto law (punishment after the crime).

—The proceedings amounted to a "trial for infamous crimes without presentment or indictment by a grand jury, as guaranteed by the 5th amendment" of the U.S. Constitution.

—The proceedings denied Mr. Bond "trial by an impartial jury as guaranteed by the 6th amendment," because there was no jury and because Mr. Bond's "accusers were also his judges."

—Mr. Bond was denied his seat "because of his connection with and support of a policy of a militant civil rights organization" and hence was denied the right of free assembly, guaranteed by the 1st amendment.

The enactment of House Rule 19 denies to the plaintiffs "the protection of the due process clause of the 14th Amendment."

The same enactment denies to Mrs. Keyes "her right to vote as guaranteed to her by the 19th Amendment.

THAT IS THE bulk of the original petition, but just to add to the complexities, Mr. Bond has asked for the court to either (1) order Mr. Bond seated pending the outcome of the case, or (2) enjoin the House from continuing pending determination of the matter.

Putting aside the minor issues, there appear to be three overriding areas of dispute.

The first is the matter of free speach — namely, whether Mr. Bond has been unduly punished for speaking his mind; and to a lesser degree, whether his speech was protected and hence not subject to judicial — or legislative — censure.

The second is the matter of the people of the 136th District going without representation during the current session.

The third, and most important, is whether the judicial panel will step into the touchy area of separation of powers and further, whether it will examine the right of the judiciary to enter in legislative affairs.

THE TWO classic cases of legislative expulsion in the United States both took place shortly after the end of World War I. One involved five members of the Socialist party who were elected to the New York State House of Representatives in 1920. They were expelled from the House on the grounds that the Socialist party was opposed to World War I. The five members ran for re-election, won again and were again expelled. There the matter ended.

The other case involved Victor Berger, who was elected in 1919 to the U.S. House of Representative from Milwaukee, Between the time of his election and the time the House convened, he was convicted under the Espionage Act for speaking against the war. He was barred.

He also won re-election, and like the New York Socialists, was again barred. Later, his conviction was reversed, but Berger refused to go to court to get his House seat.

UNTIL 1962, there were no cases in which the judiciary involved itself with the legislature, and the U.S. Supreme Court in particular generally refused even to hear such cases on the grounds they were "political questions" and hence beyond court jurisdiction.

But in 1962 the Supreme Court ventured into the legislative thicket in Baker vs. Carr, the landmark case which forced state legislatures to reapportion and set up districts according to the "one man, one vote," formula.

(Just to further complicate matters, Mr. Bond's district was one created by this decision.)

Even if the panel decides to use Baker vs. Carr as a wedge to further enter what has previously been the legislative sanctuary, if it chooses to seat Mr. Bond, it will be a judicial first.

So, although nobody can anticipate the panel's decision, it appears that several options present themselves.

First, the panel could refuse to hear arguments and throw the case out of court.

Second, the panel could hear the case. Then it could decide either to seat or not seat Mr. Bond, and presumably could use any one of the 13 causes as its basis for a pre-seating decision.

Third, the court could still at any time enjoin the legislature to either temporarily seat Mr. Bond, or stop the House from meeting. In event of a latter ruling, a whole new series of legal questions would arise.

All in all, next week promises to be an interesting one.

The statement accused the United States of deception in its claims of concern for the Vietnamese people; equated the deaths of civil rights workers with the deaths of Vietnamese peasants; accused the United States of aggression and violating international law, and came out in support of draft card burners.

"We are in sympathy with, and support, the men in this country who are unwilling to respond to a military draft which would compel them to contribute their lives to United States aggression in Viet Nam in the name of the 'freedom' we find so false in this country."

Being a public relations official for SNCC, and already in the news as the first Negro rep.-elect in Georgia since 1907, Mr. Bond was asked his views of the statement. He said that while he would not burn his draft card, he admired the courage of those who did, and in general gave his support to the statement.

That was enough for several members of the House. Seventy-five signed several petitions challenging Mr. Bond's right to take the oath, and on Jan. 10 he was asked to step aside while the oath was administered to the rest of the representatives-elect.

A COMMITTEE was announced the same day by Speaker Smith to hear the challenge. That Monday night it recommended that Mr. Bond be denied his seat. The full House agreed overwhelmingly, 184-12.

Last week the three plaintiffs filed their petition, and listed 13 causes of action against the listed defendants. In summary, the causes and charges are as follows:

The oath of office for House member reads: "I will support the Constitution of this state and of the United States, and on all questions and measures which may come before me, I will so conduct myself, as will, in my judgment, be most conducive to the interest and prosperity of this state. "This paragraph, claims the petition, is "void for vagueness" under the First and 14th amendments to the U.S. Constitution.

The above paragraph was "unconstitutionally administered against" Rep.-elect Bond.

—Rule 61 of the House reads: "Each House shall be the judge of the election, returns and qualifications of its members and shall have power to punish them for disorderly behavior or misconduct, by censure, fine, imprisonment or expulsion; but no member shall be expelled, except by a vote of two-thirds of the House to which he belongs." This, it is claimed, is likewise vague and therefore invalid.

—House Rule 61 was also unconstitutionally administered.

—House Resolution 19 is the one by which Mr. Bond was ousted. Plaintiffs claim this deprived Mr. Bond of rights guaranteed by the First and 14th

The enactment of House Rule 19 denies to the plaintiffs "the protection of the due process clause of the 14th Amendment."

The same enactment denies to Mrs. Keyes "her right to vote as guaranteed to her by the 19th Amendment.

ATLANTA

Save Sandy Springs

Most of the debate about Sandy Springs so far has centered on comparing taxes and services inside and outside Atlanta. Some of the arguments have been factual, some more emotional, but cost analysis has received most of the attention.

That has been reasonable enough, for no one wants to take a major step blindly.

Too little has been said, however, about the intangible but vitally important issue of responsible government.

It is fortunate that a man of the stature of Lockheed-Georgia's W. A. (Dick) Pulver—a Sandy Springs resident—has stepped forward to focus attention on that question. As president of the largest private employer in Georgia, Mr. Pulver knows well that the economic health of the entire metropolitan area is bound together in a single cause.

A "yes" vote May 11, he declared after long consideration, "really is no choice, only an obvious necessity."

Some people, he noted, seem to think that by staying outside corporate Atlanta, they are "proclaiming one of their few remaining individualistic rights.

"To these individuals, I simply recall—as I have recalled to myself—that man must live in a social community where individuals help each other, each to his own abilities, to provide the progress, the comforts, the safeties, the services, the opportunities that benefit all collectively.

"By officially voting to take our individual stands within Atlanta and by working with the central community to which all our futures are welded regardless (as long as we choose to be residents of the Metropolitan Atlanta area), we will make the greatest progress.

"And we can, of course, build a better heritage for our children if we accept a responsibility to help shape our city's destiny . . .

"To save the Sandy Springs area and its long-range benefits for the majority of people who reside there and who want to see it develop over the years with desirable, permanent home neighborhoods, and for the good of all of us who individually and whose businesses are wedded to the future of this great Southeastern hub city, I sincerely believe we must vote 'yes' and wholeheartedly embrace Atlanta."

Rights Workers Widen Chicago Housing Protest

By DONALD JANSON
Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, Aug. 16—Civil rights workers widened their push for equal housing opportunities today with multiple demonstrations.

Pickets marched in front of th City Hall, the Chicago Real Estate Board headquarters and a donwtown savings and loan association.

The Rev. James Bevel, program director for the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said the City Hall demonstration had beeen aimed at Mayor Richard J. Daley for not demanding rigid enforcement of the city's three-year-old open housing ordinance.

He said the real estate board had been picketed because realtors had offered major opposition to open housing.

Lending Ban Offered

Spokesmen said the First Federal Savings and Loan Association in the downtown Loop had been included because such companies refuse to lend money to Negroes who seek to buy homes outside the Negro ghetto.

Civil rights strategists had decided to maintain "creative tension" in their drive despite a "peace" conference with realtors scheduled for tomorrow.

Mr. Bevel said that the meeting, arranged by the Chicago Conference on Religion and Race, would be just a "bull session."

Pickets March at City Hall, Real Estate Board and a Savings Association

Dr. King's organization and affiliated Chicago groups have marched in all-white neighborhoods repeatedly since mid-July. They have been met with violent resistance by whites, in some cases incited by members of the American Nazi party.

At a news conference this morning, Police Superintendent Orlando W. Wilson said that patrolmen had been resigning in increasing numbers since the demonstrations began because of the "distasteful"' work of protecting marchers.

He said city attorneys from the office of the Corporation Counsel were now accompanying policemen assigned to riot-control duty. A police spokesman said their function was to advise the policemen on the rights of citizens in order to avoid suits against the city.

Nazi Party Assailed

Superintendent Wilson said his intelligence division was investigating the American Nazi party branch here to determine whether its role in inciting counter - demonstrations was subversive.

"They are sporting for a fight," Mr. Wilson said of the Nazis.

Capt. William J. Duffy, director of the intelligence division, said in an interview later that party membership was small here.

"We have no information that they are gaining strength as a result of the racial demonstrations," he said.

Christopher Vidnjevich, 22-year-old "lieutenant" in charge of the Chicago unit of the party, said at the group's headquarters that growth had been swift since the demonstrations began.

Last Sunday, during an open-housing demonsration in the Gage Park neighborhood, members distributed 1,500 signs bearing their swastika symbol and calling for "white power."

At a rally in nearby Marquette Park immediately afterward, they urged listeners to join a "white guard" to be formed to protect their communities against "the Comminist-inspired, rampaging black scum."

Mr. Vidnjevich said 300 persons had been recruited for the "white guard" since Sunday. But he said only one, Donald Borsch, 31, was available for an interview.

Mr. Borsch, a part-time construction worker, said he joined the "white guard" today because "it's time we did some fighting back against these niggers."

"I hate 'em," he said, "because they force themselves on people who don't want 'em."

VSCRC EXPANDS IN SOUTHSIDE

The Virginia Students' Civil Rights Committee is continuing to enlarge its staff and expand into more counties in Southside Virginia. There are now 20 full-time staff members who are being assisted by a number of local people working on a part-time or full-time basis with the staff. Most of the staff are from six Virginia universities and colleges; there are also two former public school teachers from Virginia and three high school students on staff. Two of the high school students are from Georgia and one is from Virginia. This week a California college student joined the staff.

VSCRC first began community organizing in Amelia and Nottoway counties early in June and expanded within a few weeks into Lunenburg, Dinwiddie, and Powhatan counties. Early in July two workers went into Brunswick county. From July 11-13, five VSCRC staff worked with Carey E. Stronach in his campaign for the Sixth Senatorial District seat against Garland Gray in the Democratic primary, July 13. Cary is a graduate instructor at the University of Virginia. Gray, a State Senator for the past twenty years, was a major leader of massive resistance and is a defender of the status quo of the 1800's. Though Stronach was defeated four-to-one, this was the first challenge to the Gray regime in more than a decade.

In Amelia, two VSCRC staff are working with SCOPE workers and a group of eight out-of-state college students and a minister from the United Presbyterian Church. VSCRC staff and SCOPE are also coordinating efforts in Lunenburg. Several law students associated with the law firm of Marsh and Tucker, legal counselors for the NAACP, have been attending the weekly staff meetings .

Ten local Southside youth attended a SNCC National Youth Conference in Washington, D.C. on June 25,26, and 27. where they participated with high school students from across the nation and from the Deep South in workshops on the role of the high school student in the Movement.

HARASSMENT, TITLE II VIOLATIONS NUMEROUS

While it is still too early to determine if any pattern of harassment and violence will develop, it does seem definite that many restaurants and other places of public accommodation are violating Title II of the 1964 Civil Rights Law in Southside. Most of the Negro population here is too poor and/or too afraid to attempt to use public accommodations. This fact, rather than a change in the attitude of the segregationists who control Southside, seems to be the cause for the small number of Title II violations prior to this summer. VSCRC believes the Byrd organization is keeping a tight check on uncontrolled violence in order to evade bad publicity. There is, however, a growing tension in the area, as evidenced by the following reports, and the possibility of isolated acts of violence could easily increase.

Listed below are some of the major incidents that have taken place recently:

June 30--James Garnett, Negro worker, entered Gebhardt's Restaurant in Powhatan County and asked for a soda, but was told that he could only have it "to go." He was joined by Bob Foley, white VSCRC staff. They were refused

REPORT OF COUNTY ACTIVITIES

Amelia--A three-room office at the Triple X Inn on Rt. #360 near Amelia Courthouse has been obtained free of charge. The office is being used by both VSCRC and SCOPE. The VSCRC workers, Bruce Smith of Lynchburg College, and Richard Muller of the University of Virginia, hope to keep the office open and work on a part-time basis after the summer. A freedom school is planned and books are now being obtained for a library. The Presbyterian group, eight college students and a minister, tutor in Amelia and Nottoway Counties in the mornings and work with the other groups the rest of the day. The county has been divided into precincts with two workers handling each precinct. On July 17, 53 Negroes registered. To limit voter registration, the county now has only one place to register and only one registration day per month.

On July 19, over one hundred farmers from Amelia, Lunenburg, and Nottoway Counties attended a meeting near Amelia Courthouse which was set up by VSCRC. Through the efforts of two of the workers who went to the Washington office of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS), service and the manager grabbed the white worker by his hair and threw him out of the restaurant and the Negro was pushed out. The F.B.I. was notified and investigated the incident. A few days later the staff members returned with some local people and were served. However, they were followed by some whites but lost them. Later the whites went to a house where they thought the workers were staying and drove up and down the road in front of the house shouting obscenities. Around 3:00 AM the whites began driving up and down the driveway. When they got in front of the house, the Negro fired a shotgun into the air and the whites fled.

July 6--A bottle with a firecracker inside was thrown from a speeding car in front of a house and exploded. A local Negro girl who had been helping VSCRC and SCOPE canvass lived in the house with her grandfather, aunt, and uncle. Her relatives who already were not happy about her working in the Movement were so freightened that they refused to contact the sheriff or the F.B.I.

July 8--Six people, a VSCRC and SCOPE worker along with four local Negroes, entered Nelson's Drug Store in Victoria, Lunenburg County. They had to wait thirty minutes before they were waited on. The proprieter took the orders of the Negroes, but refused to serve the whites. The F.B.I. was contacted and investigated the incident. A few days later another integrated (?) group entered the restaurant and were served on paper plates while the other customers ate from the regularly used plates.

July 9--Four VSCRC staff members, Tyrone Williams, David Nolan, Benjamin Montgomery and Duke Edwards were refused service when they tried to purchase gas at Texaco station in Amelia Court House. They were then followed by two cars, one with a Mississippi State decal.

July 10--An integrated group of VSCRC and SCOPE workers, including Bruce Smith, staff member, entered Dick's Place on Rt. 360 in Amelia County. They were overcharged an average of 19¢ for each item of food and were told that these were the new prices but they had not been put on the menu. On July 14, they returned with 36 people, including a large number of Negroes, and were not overcharged.

July 12--A VSCRC staff member, David Lub s, while passing out campaign literature was picked up by the local police. He was taken to the police station but was released.

July 13--An integrated group of five VSCRC workers entered the Plainview Service Station-Restaurant in Powhatan County. As the workers including Bob Foley, James Garnett, Duke Edwards, Tyrone Williams, and Dottie Brockman, entered the place marked "White Only" a man said to the owner, "Do you wnat me to get rid of these people?" The owner, a member of the County Board of Supervisors, tad him "no". Someone brought in a bucket and the owner told everyone to go over to the colored side as they were going to clean the floor. The staff workers along with the other customers went over and were served. No mop or water was ever brought for the bucket.

July 13--Richmond social worker, Gayle Ray, and VSCRC staff member, David Lub s, were passing out campaign literature in Hopewell. A man in a pick-up truck drove up and in several angry gestures destroyed a campaign poster. At another precinct where Howard and Anne Romaine were working, a similar incident occurred with the same man. The local police were contacted immediatel but never came to investigate the scene. At many precincts the registrars failed to have a list of registered voters posted as required by Section 24-78 of the Virginia Election Laws.

July 14--A female SCOPE worker is beingfollowed in Amelia County. The sheriff has been notified. While he appears cooperative, he has been unsuccessful in identifying the driver.

the Virginia Director and Assistant Director of the ASCS were the main speakers at the meeting. The ASC local committees determine crop allotments and measure land. All farmers, including tenants, and share croppers, can vote in these elections for their county committee of ASCS. However, no Negroes are now serving on these omiittittees, even though Negroes make up a majority of the farmers in most of these counties. It is hoped that Negro farmers can be organized around the coming ASCS elections, this fall.

Brunswick--Three staff people have just recently moved into this county. They are staying with a white professor who teaches at St. Paul's in Lawrenceville. In addition to obtaining the temporary use of a car from a used-car dealer they hope to be able to open up an office in an abandoned parish house in Lawrenceville. Two St. Paul's students are working with them and they are hopeful of starting a vigorous movement among the Negroes on and off the campus. David Nolan, John "Coolie" Washington, and Dan Reyes are the VSCRC workers in this county.

Dinwiddie--As in most counties, people can register only two days a month. In this conty it is the second and fourth Wednesday at Dinwiddie Court House. This means that some people have to drive over 15 miles to register.

In McKenney approximately 40 people showed for the third meeting of the newly formed McKenney Improvement Association. A lawyer has drawn up a petition to get some dirt roads paved which was one of the first needs around which the people organized. At the third meeting committees were fromed: education, farm, voter registration, and jobs. Many people in this area are afraid to come to meetings.

A VSCRC worker, Bob Fisher, has helped to reactivate a civic league in West Petersburg, a Negro suburb of Petersburg in Dinwiddie County. The League has decided to draw up a petition asking the school board for a title to a two-room school that will be closed at the end of the 1966-67 school year for use a community center. In West Petersburg very few homes have running water or sewage as there are no public water facilities. Also there is no garbage dump and the people are not allowed to use thePetersburg garbage dump. A group of around fifteen teenagers are canvassing in Poney Beach which is near West Petersburg. One man asked a worker not to come back to his home because too many white people were talking about his daughter being seen with the workers. The other two workers in Dinwiddie are David Lubs and Bill Leary.

Lunenburg County--An office has been opened for several weeks in the Negro community. A library is being operated in the office. The VSCRC workers in the county, Betty Cummings and Nan Grogan, and the SCOPE workers were preparing for a "Freedom Day" on Thursday, July 15, having been told by the registrar on two occassions that registration books would be open that day. However, the day before "Freedom Day" the registrar told the workers that registration would not be until the following week.

Small neighborhood meetings are being held in rural areas of the county where the people discuss their needs. People seem more willing to talk about their problems in small meetings where they are among neighbors than in large mass meetings. Some of the workers have also been attending youth 4-H club meetings throughout the county. A Freedom School has been established in Victoria. Each morning around fifteen to twenty children participate in recreation and discussions with Betty Cummings. Some local Victoria Negro families have beaten their young children who have been coming to the VSCRC-SCOPE office where the Freedom School is established.

Nottoway--Workingout of Jennings Ordinary Howard and Anne Romaine are canvassing the small communities of Burkeville and Crewe and the large rural areas surrounding them. Efforts are being made to organize people around the need for jobs, surplus food, conditions in the Veneer Plant in Burkeville, as well as the local ASCS elections. The first Monday in August is the date set by a group of farmers in the county for a county-wide farmers meeting to set up an organization. Also a small group of teenagers have attended weekly discussion meetings. A desire for a Freedom School has been expressed by several local adults in Burkeville. They are in the process of securing an abandoned church for this purpose as well as a community center. However there is a need for a staff person who could work in a Freedom School full time.

In Blackstone, Ben Montgomery and Duke Edwards are attempting to organize the kids around the issue of an inadaquate ball park. Also they have worked with "Operation Catchup" of Prince Edward County in establishing a tutorial program for those children who will be attending formerly all white schools. Plans are now being made to develop a political education class for adults in the community.

The Southside Electric Cooperative, a large REA project which serves 16 counties has been visited to determine if they are complying with Title VI of the Civil Rights Act. It is hoped that some Negroes will run for the Board of Directors of the rural cooperative. Several local Negroes have shown an interest.

At a civic meeting in Crewe which was attended by around 50 people, the possibility of running a condidate for the House of Delegates from the seventh district is being discussed.

In the office, Bill Towe, Director, is doing research on the six counties where we now have workers. Office Manager, Dottie Brockman, in addition to her usual typing and filing duties is going out in the county once or twice a week to teach an illiterate.

Betsy Towe is still the only white staff member of the Burkeville Headstart Program. The Federal Government has notified the principal, Mr. Hill, that unless the staff and/or pupil assignment is further integrated they will close down operations. The VSCRC staff in Nottoway county has volunteered their services twice a week.

Powhatan--Direct action is the keynote in this Southside county. A large amount of time of the staff, Bob Foley, James Garnett, and Tyrone Williams, has been taken up with Title II violations. They are working with the local NAACP, which has a very inactive leader, in trying to determine what course of action to take.

The workers have canvassed a large part of the county; and a mass meeting has been held as well as several small neighborhood meetings. Also plans are being made to build shelves and catalogue books for a library since there is no public library in the county. A large number of text books have been contributed the the Virginia Students' Civil Rights Committee through the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committe office in Washington, D.C. The National Student Association is also sending books for Freedom Libraries in Powhatan and other counties.

communities are feeling more threatened by our presence as shown by the local police bearing down on petty traffic violations. The car expenses are mounting for gas and repairs and general maintenance (A local Nottoway County man contributed a 1956 Studebaker to VSCRC for which we paid approximately eighty dollars to get on the road). If you want to contribute to a NEW VIRGINIA please send a donation to: VSCRC, Box 292, Blackstone, Virginia.

Also anyone who would like to visit the project, plese contact us and we'd be happy to put you up for a day or so!

FINANCIAL REPORT

As of July 12 our finances had dwindled to the extent that it did not look as though we would have enough money to sustain our project through the last few weeks of summer. However our supporters in Lynchburg and Charlottesville quickly mobilized and raised one half of the amount we needed and Joan Baez sent us a check for the other half--all in one week! We still do not have the necessary funds on hand to meet emergencies and also to maintain our staff down here through next year. As our staff increases and we expand into other counties, the white

KKK RALLY IN VICTORIA

There was a Ku Klux Klan rally held near Victoria, Virginia, Saturday, September 4, 1965. Although news reports stated that from four to five thousand persons attended the meeting, there were actually only about a thousand. The success of the rally is undetermined at this point. It is reported that there are going to be a number of such gatherings scheduled for different localities.

The Grand Dragon of North Carolina and the Grand Dragon of Virginia spoke and tried to stir up emotions. One speaker said NAACP stood for "Niggers, Apes, Alligators, Coons and Possoms;" another said it stood for "National Association for the Advancement of the Communist Party." They blasted Negroes President Johnson, Vice President Humphrey and civil rights workers. At the conclusion of the rally men dressed in the Klan regalia lighted the sixty-five foot cross and paraded around it singing such songs as "The Old Rugged Cross" and "Kneel At the Cross."

Four white civil rights workers, two from Amelia, one from Brunswick and another affiliated with VSCRC, entered the rally. Somehow they were identified by the Klan and forced out of the meeting. They were kicked and beaten and told that only white people were allowed. One State Trooper observed one girl being shoved from the rally but did nothing about it. When it was reported to another trooper, he asked what the civil rights workers were doing there and said if they would take his advice they would go home right them.

Two carloads of Negroes and civil rights workers remained parked across the road from the entrance of the rally during the meeting. They were yelled at from time to time and constantly referred to during the speeches.

No incidences took place after the rally.

We Are Here To Stay!

FIVE staff members of the Virginia Students' Civil Rights Committee have decided to stay in Southside Virginia for the rest of the year to continue the work which was started this summer.

The main office has been moved from Blackstone to Victoria. Full-time workers will be in Nottoway, Lunenburg, and Brunswick Counties. They will be trying to carry on limited activities in Amelia, Dinwiddie and Powhatan Counties where there were full-time workers this summer.

Different programs during the winter will be coordinated with students on various college campuses. Two conferences have been tentatively planned for educational and recruiting purposes. From time to time there will be projects, such as a get-out-the-vote project in November. College students will be recruited to work on this type of program.

We hope that by exposing students to the Southside Project some will decide to work in the area full-time next summer. Effort will be made to work with existing civil rights groups on the campuses and to stimulate the establishment of groups on campuses where there are none.

Civil rights and academic freedom are closely related. Hopefully this will become clear to students.

Freedom Rally in Amelia

On Saturday, August 14, in Amelia County, over three hundred local Negroes gathered in the usually deserted Court House Square to celebrate the passage of the Voting Rights Bill of 1965. For the first time in the history of this very poor and completely rural community, people demonstrated en masse that they are not satisfied with living in a segregated society where whites occupy every county office, own nearly every major local business concern, and receive twice as much total income per year as Negroes. They demonstrated that they will no longer endure economic and social oppression.

Mr. Herbert Coulton, Director of the Virginia SCOPE civil rights projects, led the rally and generated a vigorous freedom spirit among the participants. He and some of the workers took the lead in the singing of freedom songs, with lyrics specially written by members of the Junior NAACP. The youth group had also made signs for which they wrote slogans such as "Fair School Bus Transportation--No More Two Hour Rides," "Let Negroes Use the County Ball Park Too," and "Amelia Needs Doctors and Dentists--And the Board of Supervisors Can Get Them." Mr. Coulton spoke dramatically on these topics, as well as on voting. His plea was for organized community action against Negro apathy and white oppression. The rally climaxed impressively in the forming of a giant circle around the square and the enthusiastic singing of "We Shall Overcome."

Amelia's Freedom Rally was a peaceful one, although it was reported that a hand of young whites, was cruising around the square with a shotgun in the back seat of their car. Also, a white was identified as he shoved a paper bag full of yellow jackets into a hedge next to the crowd. The sheriff was not sent for, since the man was the only one stung. A public address system boomed the proceedings to the many whites who stood outside the stores surrounding the Court House Square. A Nazi leaflet distributed through the town early that morning was read by Mr. Coulton and drew quite a response from the crowd; the leaflet urged whites to turn out and vote for George Lincoln Rockwell for governor of the state, thereby counteracting "the illiterate nigger vote."

Not only did the people voice their discontent with the oppressive racial situation in Amelia, they also proved that they are willing to do something to change things.

133 people registered to vote the day of the Freedom Rally. Thanks to the new Voting Rights Act (and a surprisingly cooperative treasurer) and the amount of poll tax required to register for the first time was only $1.50, instead of the $4.77 it had been only a week before. Also, applicants were not required to be able to fill out the complicated and confusing registration forms by themselves. Thus, Amelia was the first county in the South to take significant advantage of the Voting Rights Act enacted by our government, a government which is just beginning to really represent the people for whom it serves.

VSCRC, SCOPE and a Presbyterian group worked there this summer.

VSCRC and SCOPE workers spent much time on voter registration and political education. Political education took place through area meetings. Local elected officials and their duties, the Circuit Court Judge's power, and responsibilities, the state officials, such as, General Assembly and the Byrd Machine have been the major topics of discussions in these meetings. Other area meetings of community organization have evolved around farm problems, school desegregation and poverty.

Lunenburg Reddishes

Around 175 persons registered to vote in Lunenburg County, Saturday, August 21. This is the largest turn out this summer. Much of the impetus for registration came from a march held earlier in the month for support of the Voting Rights Bill. Due to pressure from the Negro community, the Electoral Board added the first and third Saturdays as registration days. Thursdays, the second and fourth, had been the only registration days.

O. E. O. VISITS

The fourth Congressional District, Virginia's Black Belt, ranks 405th out of the nations 435 congressional districts in annual median income. The district is 47.9% Negro, and nearly a third of the Negro families earn less than $1000 a year. There are a number of federal programs that can help the poor people in Southside, but those in power have not tried to put them into effect.

The Virginia Students' Civil Rights Committee contacted Gary Lefkowitz of the Office of Economic Opportunity and asked him come to Southside. He spoke in Nottoway, Lunenburg and Brunswick counties and told of the various programs available from the war on poverty, such as adult education, community centers and day care centers for working mothers.

In Lunenburg, the NAACP sponsored a meeting to choose a board of directors for a community action project. One of the problems found almost everywhere is the unrepresentative nature of the local boards. In Brunswick County, where 60% of the people are Negro, a majority of the board is white. Nearly 60% of the people, both white and Negro earn less than $3000 a year, yet the poverty board is filled with Mayors, councilmen, supervisors, teachers and ministers--not a poor person among them.

People in Southside counties are now trying to form boards that will include people directly affected by poverty, and give them a voice in this program that hopes to better their future.

POWHATAN PICKETS COURT HOUSE

A group of 70 Powhatan County citizens marched on the monthly meeting of the County Board of Supervisors. The purpose of marching was to protest their inaction on meeting certain requests that had been presented for the past 23 months by a spokesman of the local branch of NAACP.

The four main grievances of the people were as follows: (1) Removal of the "White" and "Colored" signs on the restrooms at the Court House, (2) Establishment of a bi-racial committee in the county to work out racial problems and broblems of the Negro community, (3) Opening of county government jobs to Negroes, (4) Demand information on the county's financing of the segregated War Memorial Building.

ASCS Elections

In order to keep farm prices stable, the federal government places limitations on the amount of certain crops, like cotton and tobacco, that can be grown. The Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS) of the Department of Agriculture is the agency responsible for determining the crop allotments of each farmer. This is done at the local level through ASCS committees elected directly by the farmers.

In the South for many years only white farmers voted and served on these committees, and white farmers got the best allotments at the expense of the small Negro farmers. Civil rights workers in Southside have been encouraging Negro farmers to take part in ASCS elections. Lunenburg, Amelia and Nottoway have had strong efforts made.

The Department of Agriculture in order to fight discrimination in farm programs has established an advisory committee of Negroes to work for (a) equal employment opportunities in ASCS offices, (b) equal opportunity in ASCS farm programs and (c) full participation in ASCS elections both as voters and candidates.

ASCS elections will be held in Virginia in the mohth of Octobet. All farm owners, operators, tenants and sharecroppers will be eligible to participate.

The Board indicated that they would give no definite answer to the protests and made it clear to the persons attending the meeting that they would not act under any pressure from the group. They claim that they have no power to act on the protestations and continue to ignore demands from the Negro Community. When one of the white civil rights workers tried to address the Board, the Board refused to listen to him although this worker is a registered voter in Virginia.

The March and picketing took place on August 9, 1965. Following the meeting of the Board, some members of the demonstration decided to stage a sit-in in the Court House. From seven to eleven persons spent the (con'd) night in the Court House. They were not bothered in any way. The newspaper coverage of the sit-in was fairly good, and it did succeed in bringing the situation to light. The participants vacated the Court House at 8:00am August 10.

Official protests have since been lodged with the Justice Department. It can be proven that Titles III and X of the Civil Rights Act are being violated.

WHY I TRANSFERRED TO A WHITE SCHOOL

The reason why I decided to go to a white school based on the condition in which the school are built and many more reason as I will write later in my report. First we will start talking about the two school (white-Victoria High and Negro-Lunenburg High). Lunenburg is in a very bad condition, the restrooms are up hill at school are very unsatisfactory because they are old fashion bathroom dug in the ground. The class rooms are divided by a piece of plywood just high enough to keep you from seeing over it. While one teacher is teaching Government on one side of the plywood other teaching math, the teacher teaching Government sound like he is you in math. Class rooms are over crowded in subject we have in school. Now at Victoria High the condition are much better. The classes are not over crowded and rooms are much cleaner. Well every thing is much more better than in a Negro school altogether. That why I chose to go to a white school.

NOTTOWAY SCHOOLS DESEGREGATED

On Thursday, Sept. 2, southside Nottoway County opened schools. The opening was as peaceful and quiet as any normal school opening day of past years. But the normalcy had a history-making quality. Into the previously all-white schools entered 151 Negro children for the first time. Not only was this a first, it also was the largest number of Negro children to desegregate schools in the southside area.

This unusual situation came about through a combination of events during the first two weeks of April. On April 6, Rev. David Gordon, a Negro candidate for a Blackstone town council seat, was disqualified on a questionable technicality. And on April 13, the Nottoway School Board released the original freedom-of-choice plan as its answer to Title VI of the Civil Rights Act. Title VI becoming effective this year forbids racial discrimination in all programs receiving Federal funds and authorizes the withdrawal of federal money where discrimination continues. After the release of the plan the school board made no further action to inform Negro parents of the plan's full meaning.

The county Negroes were indignant at Rev. Gordon's disqualification and scoffingly skeptical of the school board's plan. The Negro community felt it was the school board's duty to desegregate the schools without equivocation and not place Negro parents' necks on a chopping block of economic and physical intimidation, in having to personally make such a choice.

Out of the frustration came a determination and a county-wide meeting on Sunday, May 2, at Springhill Baptist Church in Blackstone. From a capacity crowd under the guidance of Farmville's mighty champion and State NAACP president, Rev. Francis Griffin, also Reverends David Gordon, Robert Craghead, Green-

STUDENT THANKSGIVING PROJECT PLANNED

VSCRC will sponsor a Thanksgiving project for college students to do volunteer work on the southside project.

The project will last from Nov. 24 - Nov. 28. Lodging, and possibly some meals, will be provided in the local community. Students provide their own transportation to southside. Students may work the entire four days or less time, if necessary.

Detailed information on the Thanksgiving project will be provided at the November conference in Lynchburg. Some tentative plans have already been made.

In Nottoway County workers are needed to canvass in Blackstone to get signatures for a petition requesting public sewage for the Negro residential areas. Help is also needed to decorate a float to be entered in the Blackstone Christmas parade by the Nottoway Civic Development Council, a Negro organization. Negroes have never before participated in the parade.

In Lunenburg County, students are needed to leaflet the county to further strengthen the selective buying campaign in Victoria against merchants who refuse to denounce the Klan and who, in some cases, actively support the Klan. Another much- needed job to be done is working with the youth in a recreation program in Victoria. The Negro citizens own a community center but it is little-used due to a lack of people to supervise recreation.

Students with specific skills are also needed. VSCRC staff member, John Washington, wants student assistance in doing some photography work. Students are also needed to assist in secretarial and accounting work.

VSCRC has seven staff members working in Amelia, Brunswick, Lunenburg and Nottoway counties. The central office is located in Victoria. Field offices are located at Blackstone, Lawrenceville, and Amelia Courthouse.

Negroes Respond To Klan With Selective Buying

Since Sept. 8, Negroes in Lunenburg County have conducted a selective buying campaign in Victoria. The demand of the Negroes is quite simple: merchants of Victoria, the site of the first Klan rally in Southside Virginia, should publically denounce the Klan and refuse to support it. The peopla refuse to spend their money at a store whose owner may contribute directly to the support of the Klan. The battle is being led by the Lunenburg Citizenship Organization, a county-wide Negro civic group that was organized in June.

At a mass meeting of Negroes, a committee of five men was elected to represent the Negro community in negotiations. This committee met with members of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce. The Chamber of Commerce committee, headed by Robert Williams, Victoria town council member, agreed the Chamber would issue a statement denouncing the Klan. The Negro community waited for the promise to be fulfilled, waited for the white man to keep his word. They are still waiting. Instead of denouncing the Klan, the Chamber of Commerce announced that it "opposed extremism in any form," and "did not appreciate being made the middleman between groups."

At a second mass meeting, the Negroes rejected the Chamber of Commerce statement as unsatisfactory and voted to continue the selective buying campaign. Almost the entire Negro community seems to be supporting the campaign. A Negro is rarely seen on the downtown streets of Victoria. One merchant claims that his business has been reduced $400-$500 every week-end. Negro sentiment seems summed up in one of the slogans used on leaflets being distributed: "Negroes unite; don't spend a nickel to support cross-burners and race-haters!"

Klan activity in the area is very evident. One of the five "Klan klaverns" in Virginia is located in Victoria. Three crosses have been burned since the Klan began organizing. When investigating one of the burnings, local law enforcement officials cautioned the Negro land owner: "These civil rights workers could have burned this cross because you don't attend enough of their meetings." The police have offered no further explanation in solving the case.

Nottoway Schools Desegregated (con't)

hill and Miss Nancy Adams, a civil rights worker in Prince Edward County, the Nottoway County Desegregation Committee was formed. Plans were laid for a county-wide information drive on the issue. A committee leader responsible for each magisterial district was appointed. The mimeographing of a thousand fact sheets on the freedom-of-choice plan and the new Federal law were ordered.

Committee members and volunteers, armed with the fact sheets made a day and night canvass of every Negro parent from May 3 to May 21. Each parent was given a thorough explanation of the issues involved and encouraged to enroll their child in white schools. Weekly county-wide meetings were held at various churches throughout the area. On May 14, parents were sent the freedom-of-choice forms by the school board, to be signed and returned by May 21...just one week to make such a momentous decision!

The Nottoway County Desegregation Committee was satisfied of one thing, the Negro community had been well-informed of the issue. It was now the parents' decision.

Around June 1, amid rising tensions and misgivings on all sides, and the arrival of a new group of civil rights workers, the Virginia Students' Civil Rights Committee, the school board announced 150 Negro pupils had enrolled for previously all-white schools. The announcement was received with a calmness that has been maintained to the present time. The Committee was pleased with the results of a hard job well done. But it found its work had only really begun and moved on for a summer program, which shall be covered in another article.

written by members of the Nottoway School Desegregation Com.

(The Nottoway School Desegregation Committee has changed its name to the Nottoway Civic Development Council and is not only working in school desegregation but in many other areas. If you would like a member of this group to talk and work with you, in your county, please notify VSCRC.)

Lunenburg Negroes Denied Legal Rights in Poverty Program

by Nathaniel Hawthorne

I am writing concerning the community action program that we are trying very hard to get and that we need very badly. We are being blocked by the Board of Supervisors with the way they have been running the county government for years, with a small group of rich Uncle Toms. This is the real story.

At a public meeting held on Aug. 17 which was publicized by radio announcements, distribution of leaflets throughout the county, and canvassing door-to-door of both Negroes and whites, a steering committee was elected to represent the Negro people of the county in planning and administrating a community action program. Three people were elected from each of the seven districts in the county, giving a total of 21 representatives to make up the steering committee.

After writing a series of letters, the committee was able, after being denied the use of county and state meeting facilities, to obtain a Negro school in which to hold a public meeting. Influential white citizens and county officials were written by members of the committee and invited to attend the public meeting.

At the public meeting on Sept. 15, the two speakers from the OEO gave full information on community action programs and stated specifically that poor people had the right to elect their own representatives to plan the program. Of the seven white officials who attended the meeting, most of them stated publically that they were in favor of the program.

At the Sept. meeting of the Lunenburg County Board of Supervisors, the board appointed a committee to investigate the Economic Opportunities Act and to recommend whether the board should sponsor such a program. The steering committee wrote this investigating committee asking that public hearings be held and that the investigating committee meet with the steering committee. No reply to this letter was received.

At the Oct. Board of Supervisors meeting, which three members of the steering committee attended, the Board decided to sponsor a community action program for one year. The Board did not ask for comments or suggestions from the steering committee. The Board immediately appointed two men from each district, one Negro and one white, to serve on a board to head the community action program.

Only after the meeting was adjourned was I allowed to speak. I said I believed the action of the Board was illegal because Negroes had not been allowed the right to select their own representatives. The Board ignored the fact that their committee was non-representative and I said the Negroes would have to take their complaints to state and federal officials.

We of the legitimately elected steering committee feel that the Negroes appointed by the Board are not, by any means, representing the poor Negroes in Lunenburg County. Most of these people have not attended a single meeting on the community action program, a fact that indicates a total lack of interest and concern with the program.

Also, few, if any, of these individuals are in the income bracket of earnings less than $3,000 per year. Three are school teachers which means their minimum yearly income is at least $4,500 and that they are controlled by the school board. One man is a pastor, a school teacher, and assistant principal. Others are independent farmers.

According to 1960 Bureau of the Census statistics, 80.7% of the nonwhite families in the county had a yearly income of less than $3,000. It is obvious that the Negroes selected by the Board do not represent the majority of the Negroes in the county. The rich are being chosen by the power structure to make decisions for poor people about what kinds of programs are needed to alter the lives of the poor. The rich simply are not qualified to know the needs of the poor. Only poor people can fully understand problems of poverty and poor people should be allowed to administer their own program. Poverty in this county is so bad that the School Board requires the Negro children whose parents are on welfare to work for their lunch, yet the Board of Supervisors could only find rich Negroes to appoint.

We of the steering committee know we represent the poor Negroes because we have been elected by the people and we ourselves are poor people. We will do all in our power to see that the voice of the poor is heard and to see that any community action program in this county is democratically administrated by the people it is designed to help. Such administration is evident no where in the county at this time.

PAGINATION INCORRECT

WHAT TO THINK AND HOW TO LOOK vs. HOW TO THINK AND INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS

Nearly two hundred students from RPI, other Virginia colleges, and staff and local people working in the Southside project attended a rally at Richmond on Oct. 19. The rally was sponsored by the Students for Individual Rights (SIR), which was organized, in part, to finance the court costs of obtaining a permanent injunction by three RPI students against RPI for refusing them admission because of their long hair and beards. The three students, Salvatore Federico, Robert D. Shoffner, and Norman T. Marshall, all seniors, have been very active on the campus and all have better than a "B" average.

The students marched from the campus to the First Unitarian Church, site of the rally. Reid Cornwell, Chairman of SIR, presided and stated that SIR was organized to protect the rights of all students as well as to help the three RPI students in their court battle. Significant questions were raised by the speakers and Norman Marshall stated it was the first time he had seen RPI students really think about anything. It was pointed out that training institutions, such as the U. S. Army, exist to teach people what to think. Educational institutions should exist to teach people how to think. If an institution becomes more concerned with how students look and how their looks will affect the school "image," rather than the real question of whether students are thinking, then the school may soon start telling students what to think. This is beginning to happen at RPI. One speaker pointed out that RPI professors had been instructed not to discuss sex, politics, or religion in class with freshmen.

Dr. William Gold, pastor of the First Unitarian Church, gave a sermon, "Could Jesus Get Into RPI?" Gold said the real question might be "would Jesus want to get into RPI?"

It was announced at the rally that the American Civil Liberties Union had issued a letter of support for the students. If necessary, the students plan to take their case to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The case was heard in the Richmond Circuit Court on Oct.20. 37 students picketed on the RPI campus and marched to the courtroom to hear the case. Judge John W. Knowles stated that he would announce his decision after studying similar cases. The students earlier sought a temporary injunction in the Circuit Court and the state supreme court but lost.

Hopefully, these three RPI students and other members of SIR will be at the November conference in Lynchburg.

NEGRO YOUTH SHOT IN VICTORIA

by Robert Beverly

On Nov. 18, 1965, at 9:15 p.m. a car with two white men in it drove by the Victoria Freedom House several times. The last time it passed, Alfonza Stokes, Kyster Stokes, and I were standing in front of the Freedom House. We saw a shotgun sticking out of the front window on the left side of the car but none of us moved. The car went about 200 feet past the building, stopped, and fired at us.

Alfonza said, "I think he hit me." Just then I looked and the gun was still aimed. We ducked and a second shot was fired, just barely missing us.

The license number of the car had been taken before the shooting because it had been circling the office and it had an out-of state license and white passengers. This information and a description of the passengers were given to the police and the FBI when they came to investigate.

Alfonza was taken to a doctor and treated for a scalp wound. The pellet entered his scalp at the hairline and came out at the top of his head. It was a narrow escape.

The shooting brought a great deal of tension among the Negroes. The Negroes and the whites haven't reached any agreements as of now and that too causes a lot of tension. Some Negroes feel that whites can physically harm them and that nothing will be done about it. Several Negroes have been threatened before and since the shooting many Negroes are arming themselves. Negroes are arming only to defend themselves because no one wants to be shot or even shot at.

The local police say they have two suspects but no arrests have been made. And it's been almost a month since the shooting. Most Negroes feel as though the local police are dragging their feet on this case.

Two nights after Alfonza was shot, another Negro, Edward Glasgow, was shot at when he stopped in a white neighborhood after dark to check his tires. He was not hit. When the whites living around there said they had not heard anything, the police said they couldn't do anything else. The night-riders are still loose and we wonder who will be next.

MEANINGFUL DIALOGUE AT A NOTTOWAY MEETING

by Howard Romaine

It was a Friday night when we arrived at the small Methodist A.M.E. church in Blackstone, Virginia. In our car were Mrs. Mary Fowlkes and Mrs. Ora Clay from the Nottoway Civic Development Council, and Bill and Betsy Towe, VSCRC organizers. A small group of 10-15 people were seated at the front of the church. After we were all seated and had waited a few minutes, one of the deacons opened the meeting with a song, followed by a prayer offered by another member. He said that he was glad to have us and turned the meeting over to our group.

Mrs. Fowlkes began with a short talk on voting. "Some of you are already familiar with the voter registration drive, but we are still working on the problem, trying to reach all of our people to register and vote.

"We should vote to get things done such as better schools, jobs or whatever is most needed where we live."

She then described the new provisions of the voting rights bill, "Prepare to vote in all elections, not Federal only, but all elections. Pay your poll tax of $1.50 and be ready when voting time comes around. You can vote in local elections for mayor and town councilmen, in state elections for governor, senator and delegate, and in national elections for president, vice-president, senator and congressman. Get into politics. It is the business of running your government. It concerns your human dignity.

personal freedom and general welfare. Anyone who doesn't read or write well--the registrar is supposed to help you. Anyone who needs transportation, call these numbers..."

Mrs. Fowlkes gave the numbers and concluded, "Remember, if you don't vote,the choice is theirs."

Bill Towe then stepped up and sat down in a chair at the front of the church. "My name is Bill Towe. My wife is Betsy Jean. I'm a civil rights worker. I live on the corner of Falls Street and Amelia Avenue. We're in the county to work with you and to do what you want us to do. Stop in and talk to us anytime.

"Now, we all know that voting is important--but it won't solve all the problems. One problem is that there's a lack of public facilities here in Blackstone. On many, in fact, on most of the streets where Negroes live, there is no sewage. We had a meeting just last week and we made up a petition. We have a hundred names on it now. Would you like to sign it? We're going to have another meeting soon.

"But I wonder what else can be done besides giving a petition to the city manager. Is there anything else we can do?"

Someone suggested that maybe everyone ought to go down to the city council meeting.

"When is it held?"

"Every month. Down at city hall. Every first Thursday."

"Is it open, can people go to the meeting?"

"Yeah, it's supposed to be."

Another man raised his hand. "You know, I think this is a good idea, because we've had petitions before and it didn't do any good. We've got to show them we mean business. One person going down there with a petition in his hand don't mean anything. We've got to have a lot of people there to put pressure on them."

Bill asked again, "Well, if that doesn't work, what else can we do?"

"One thing, we could go out and get everybody registered and vote them out if they didn't do what we wanted. Now, with so few registered, they know we don't have any power. This would give people a reason to register."

"Is there anything else we can do?"

"We know where those councilmen work, what stored they own. We could stop buying there if they didn't work with us."

"They get money from Washington for some of those sewer projects--maybe they would cut off the money if the council doesn't give us an equal share."

"If none of those work we could demonstrate."

The same man who had suggested sitting in on council meetings raised his hand.

"I work for the town. Can Washington do anything about the way we're treated. We work longer hours and get only half the pay."

Bill said,"We'll have to check into it. Is there anything else? Then Mrs. Clay has a few words."

"I just want to say not to let the registrar worry you when you go down to vote. And don't let her fool you. For instance, when you come in, she will say, 'Oh, you want to register for federal elections only.' Then when you tell her no,that you want to register for all elections, she'll say, 'Why did you wait until now to register? Who is it you want to vote for. Why are you people so interested in voting now?' One time we had a group to go in at noon and she demanded, 'What are you people doing down here? Aren't you supposed to be working?'

"The other thing is that the Nottoway Civic Development Council is sponsoring a float for the Christmas parade. It's the first float we've ever had, and we're working on it over at Down's station if anyone wants to come over and help work on it."

The meeting closed with a prayer. We talked for a while afterward, signed petitions and left. On the way home, Mrs. Clay told Bill where they were going on Sunday. Another church, another meeting.

CORRECTION

VSCRC would like to retract a misstatement of fact which appeared in an article entitled, "Negroes Respond to Klan With Selective Buying," in Vol. I, No. 3 of The New Virginia. It was stated that "the Chamber of Commerce committee, headed by Robert Williams, Victoria town council member, agreed the Chamber would issue a statement denouncing the Klan."

Mr. Robert Williams is not a member of the Board of Directors of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce. He did not head nor chair nor at any time be a member of the Chamber of Commerce committee. He is not a member of the Town Council and has made no public statements concerning the Klan or the selective buying campaign. VSCRC regrets making such an error.

MASS MEETING IN VICTORIA

NOTES + IMPRESSIONS

by Steve Wise

The meeting was held in the community center Friday night. Mr. McCoy Gee led the meeting when it appeared that the president and vice president of Lunenburg Citizenship Organization were absent. Mr. Gee's chairmanship of this meeting, which was called to decided whether to continue the selective buying campaign in Victoria, was significant for two reasons: 1) he spoke in favor of continuing the selective buying campaign, and 2) he allowed everybody to speak. Many people spoke out; there was no suppression of opinion; and the people made their own decisions.

Dr. Winston, chairman of the negotiating committee, reported on a meeting the committee held with the mayor and other town officials. Apparently, the committee had agreed with the power structure to call off the campaign on those stores not displaying Klan posters--This would have meant that only three stores in Victoria would have remained on the list and that the original demand that the merchants publically denounce the Klan would have gone unmet. Reaction to this report was immediate and negative and none spoke to defend the committee. All spoke in favor of the continuance of the selective buying campaign on all stores. The point stressed most by various speakers was that the Negroes of Lunenburg must stand united if they ever expected to overcome the oppression of the white racists. One speaker maintained that, if Negroes were to give in, they would deserve to lose all chance of freedom. A high school student pointed out the fact that there had been shootings and threats by the Klan and that civil rights workers would be demoralised if the people backed down. Then the discussion turned towards methods of self-defense from maurauding Klansmen and other assorted rednecks. As the meeting went on, an electric feeling of solidarity could be sensed throughout the room. At lengh, it culminated in a unanimous standing vote to continue the selective buying campaign through New Years.

Someone mentioned that lack of transportation forced some Negroes to buy in Victoria. People then volunteered to provide free transportation. Another person said that many people were without credit in Kenbridge, the nearest town. James Gay, a law student at UVA, proposed the establishment of co-ops in the community; this suggestion was greeted with applause. A collection was taken up to sustain the civil rights workers in the county. The meeting ended with freedom songs.

BLACKSTONE NEGROES SPEAK!

by Alfred Booker

During the first week of December, Bill Towe, civil rights worker in Nottoway Coujty, and I canvassed the West End section of Blackstone to tell people about the mass meeting to discuss sewage and other things. I pointed out to the people that the city doesn't segregate the tax dollar but segregates the tax service. Some people pointedout that if the sewage came through, many couldn't afford to hook on to the line. Bill pointed out that if Mr, Charlie paid decent wages more people would be able to hook on. We talked to over 40 people who complained about no Negro policemen on the force, no free textbooks, inadequate dental service for Negroes. They further complained about children having to walk over a mile to the Negro school which is no good frame wooden building with outdoor toilets. Many people expressed great concern and interest.

At the mass meeting the people decided to send a group to town council with a petition and to pressure the council to act on putting sewage service in the Negro community. Mr. Mallory Coleman was chosen as spokesman of the group. The people plan to work with the Nottoway Civic Development Council to lodge these complaints with the governing body so as to tear down the old crumbling wall of Jim Crow.

VSCRC IN SOUTHSIDE

by Sarah Foster and Dorothy Walker

Many people feel that VSCRC is the wasted effort on the part of a few white people to communicate with Negroes. Others feel it is an organization that invites and associates with higher class Negroes, consequently it is out of their league.

We believe that this organization is beneficial to our community for many reasons.

Before VSCRC came to our community many Negroes did not realize the importance of registering to vote. Now they realize that each citizen's vote counts. In canvassing the different communities we've been allowed to assist VSCRC field workers. This has given us the opportunity to become further acquainted with people in the community.

We've been able to talk and associate with the workers without a feeling of inferiority. We feel now that love and friendship can exist between whites and Negroes, and the color of the skin is of no importance.

All opinions are respected, because the members of this organization work with the people, and not for the people. Our opinions have been asked about the structure of the organization which gives us a feeling of belonging. We've been priviledged to attend staff meetings which has proven to be both interesting and educational. Negroes make their own decisions and this organization merely assists in carrying them out.

Members of this organization have explained to the children in the community the importance of a good education, and they have made it possible for them to have access to educational literature.

VSCRC has assisted in starting a selective buying campaign in Lunenburg County, in which Negroes are actively participating.

In working with VSCRC we've had the opportunity to become acquainted with many members of other civil rights organizations.

Wefeel that this organization has made Negroes more conscious of the position they are in and they're now willing to work harder for the cause of equality.

AMELIA POVERTY PROGRAM

by Rives Foster

The anti-poverty group of Amelia County which was formed under the guidance of the white power structure has held up progress. Last spring a group of white people interested in bringing Head Start to the county contacted selected Negroes. This group then formed the board of directors of the anti-poverty program. With great promise this group asked Washington to establish Head Start in the county. But the whites wanted one Head Start to be in the white school and one in the Negro school. Federal officials however did not see it that way and the segregated system collapsed.

However, the Head Start program proceeded with only Negroes taking part in it. Whites did not care to let their children participate and the program was almost stopped by Washington.

This fall a report was given to the school board that in the white school only a quarter of the first graders were prepared for the first grade. It took two months for the report on the Head Start program to be completed and to be presented to the board. Two months is the deadline for government programs to be finished up. Since then the director of the board has quit due to pressure from her own white community. For all practical purposes, the anti-poverty group has ceased to function. One of the Negroes on the board who is not a Tom said that when the state representative of the poverty program came to Amelia, he communicated very little with the darker portion of the board.

It is unknown whether the anti-poverty board will ever initiate programs. It is hoped that the petition that is presently being circulated will either stir the board to action or get the people to form their own board.

A CHRISTMAS FLOAT

by Mrs. Gwen Anderson

Early this fall, Mrs. Constance Wynn began to talk to the various members of the Nottoway Civic Development Council about the possibility of having a unit in the Christmas parades. The idea was offered at the next NCDC meeting and found a lot of support.

Mrs. Wynn was asked to head a float committee; Bill Towe, civil rights worker, was asked to contact the Blackstone parade director; Mrs. Ora B. Clay was appointed chairman of a fund-raising committee to pay the float expenses; and Mr. John Simmons said he would try anf find a flatbed and tractor.

One week later, at the next meeting, Mrs. Wynn had a model of the proposed float to offer. This plan was approved by the council. Mrs. Clay's committee was busy selling tickets to a dance that featured three door prizes; Bill Towe reported our entry had been accepted and Mr. Simmons had located a tractor.

The county responded to the projedt by generously buying tickets to the dance. Of course, without the help and consideration of people like Mr. and Mrs. Merrill Bagley, Mr. Rudolph Harmon and Rev. R, L. Craghead, NCDC president--to mention a few--the success of it would not have been possible. With only ten days promotion, the committee was able to pay the dance expenses and assure themselves of a generous budget for the float.

As we straightened up the hall after the dance, we made plans to go to Richmond and Petersburg the next day to buy the decorations. Two trips later, we felt we had enough materials to start work.

Mr. Lawrence Harris borrowed Mr. Jack Boose flatbed and stored it at Mr. A. C. Downs, Jr.'s new service station. Mr. Mallory Coleman donated lumber and nails. Mr. Willian Stith framed and covered the flat to make it look like the model. Then he cut and installed the backdrop--a six-foot piece of plyboard.

Now, Mrs. Wynn and the civil rights workers started the actual decorations. All through the Thanksgiving holidays, the work went on. Many people who had only intended to stop and look found that they had an idea to offer or could actually help with the decorations or could ruh an errand. All the names would make a very long list--this was truly a countywide project. An example is Mr Lee Parker who originally loaned his tractor, but expanded that offer to a truck and tractor and drivers.

This float--born of hard work, love and the need of civic expression,-- won second prize in Blackstone in the religious category.

C H R I S T M A S

There will be 10-20 volunteer workers in southside during the Christmas holidays working on VSCRC projects. The project, known as Freedom Christmas, is sponsored by the National Student Association (NSA). Between 300 and 600 college students are expected to participate in the south-wide project which will cover seven states (Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia.) Volunteers will urge Negroes to register by door-to-door canvassing, will assist in organizing and publicising local meetings on voter registration, and will help administer voter education projects. They will live with local families and will be required to provide their own expenses and transportation.

PAMPHLETS AVAILABLE

The following material is available upon request from VSCRC:

*"Care and Feeding of Power Structures" by Jack Minnis, SNCC
*"An End To History" by Mario Savio, Berkly Free Speech Mvmt.
*"Jobs, Machines, and People" from Center for Study of Democratic Institutions
*List of films, pamphlets, etc. to use for discussion, fund raising, etc.

TRANSPORTATION PROBLEMS

A car is a necessity for workers in largely rural southside counties. We are working one county now without a car. Can you help? Does your campus group need a project? Raise funds to buy a second-hand car for VSCRC work in Southside.

LUNENBURG CRY FOR EQUALITY!

by Nathaniel Hawthorne

Here are a few of the main reasons that I want to see that the low-income Negroes have the right to select their own representation for the Economic Opportunities Act Program in Lunenburg County. I worked with SCOPE and VSCRC on a voter registration drive in Lunenburg County this summer. I have been in almost every Negro home--rich, poor, professional, and nonprofessional. I have talked with Negroes that do not go to church and some of them do not send their children to school. The preachers and school teachers often do not know about these people. There are a lot of Negroes who do not know how to get on the welfare and the white man places the ones that they went on welfare, not the ones that need help.

Poverty is so bad in Lunenburg County that the Negro children have to travel a long route to school on the buses and they have to leave home so early that some of the children do not eat breakfast. The reason for the long bus route is that the Negro buses have to go to schools in both Kenbridge and Victoria and some buseshave to take two loads. The children do not have money to buy a hot lunch. They have peanut butter and jelly sandwiches and they are cold. The children have to ride a long route; they are tired and full of cold and they d not feel like studying.

I am President of the Lunenbur County branch of the NAACP. I wor ed with SCOPE this summer and am a member of VSCRC Staff. The law calls it civil rights, but I call it human rights. Under the civil rights law and the Economic Oppor tunity Act, all citizens have the right to select their own representation. Some of the people do not understand that the NAACP speaks for all the Negroes that do not know how to speak or are afraid to speak. I have the authority to speak for them but you should know what this is costing me. I have had my car shot up and have received all kinds of threats. The Ku Klux Klans have come over to the office in broad daylight and wrote my automobile license number down. They will be waiting for me on some lonely road one night.

A CONFERENCE ON MEANINGFUL DEMOCRACY

In the course of their discussions together, Students for a University members began to raise broader questions of issues that affect them as students, but which are not just related to the university.

1. What sort of democracy do we have in the university and in the country when the administrations make all the important decisions?
2. Why are we drafted, but not allowed to vote?
3. Should students on our campus be involved in politics like students in Latin America and at Berkeley?
4. How is our role as students like that of intellectuals, workers, artists, and poor people?

Early in the fall the group began to consider their relationship to other groups of students and to individuals in their region who believe these questions to be valid.

To promote discussion on the above and other questions, it was decided that a meeting of persons interested in the role of the student in our society would be helpful. You are invited to attend at Thanksgiving a

THE POOPed SHEET

THE POOPed SHEET Vol. 1, No. 2
November, 1965

An exclusive newsletter for the members of the 8th Southern Student Human relations Seminar and friends of the USSA Southern Project

UNIVERSITY OF ARKANSAS--CONFERENCE ON MEANINGFUL DEMOCRACY:

Ann Valliant, one of the 8th SSHRS participants, is among those who are initiating a Conference on Meaningful Democracy at the University of Arkansas, Nov. 25-27. The conference idea originated with communications between Arkansas and Louisiana students about university reform. It was enlarged to include more topics and students from other states.

The conference is being planned by the Unitarian Channing Club and Students for a University at the University of Arkansas. Representatives of the sponsoring organizations say that the purpose of the conference is to "stimulate a free exchange of ideas between people of different backgrounds and experience."

Although specific topics will be chosen by the groups after they arrive, it is expected that among the topics which will be discussed will be education, civil rights, community relations, university reform, and Vietnam. Ann is very anxious for as many of you as possible to attend the conference. See the enclosed brochure for additional information and details. We hope to see you there!

COLUMBIA COLLEGE SOUTHERN AFFAIRS SEMINAR:

Cathy Tyler, a senior at Columbia College (Columbia, S.C.) and a participant in the 8th SSHRS, has organized the Columbia College Southern Affairs Seminar which will be held at the college on Nov. 20. In many respects the Seminar is a microcosm of the 8th SSHRS since the format is similar, and the subjects of Southern history, politics, economy, and religion will be discussed.

The Seminar, which is being sponsored by the college and is strongly supported by Columbia College president Dr. R. Wright Spears, will involve ten students from Columbia College, four from Allen College, four from the University of South Carolina, four from Benedict College and four from Mather Academy. All of the participating schools are located in the Columbia area, with the exception of Mather Academy. Allen, Benedict, and Mather are predominantly Negro.

The Seminar is the first time such a program has been held on the Columbia College campus, and Cathy and Dr. Spears hope that it will be possible to sponsor an expanded version next spring or fall. See the enclosure for details of the program.

KLOEPFER SPEAKS AT U.S.L.:

Ruth Kloepfer, an 8th SSHRS participant from Sophie Newcomb College of Tulane University, will speak to the University of Southwestern Louisiana Newman Club on December 9. Ruth's SSHRS paper, "The Psychological Effects of Poverty" has been published by the Southern Project and widely distributed, and she will speak on poverty at U.S.L. Fred Wright, also a SSHRS participant and a student at U.S.L., was instrumental in arranging for Ruth to speak.

MONEY AVAILABLE FOR STUDENT PROJECTS:

The Southern Regional Council (5 Forsyth Street, Atlanta, Georgia) has recently received a grant which enables them to financially aid projects initiated by Southern students. Actually, the grants are made by SRC to the individual state councils on human relations which in turn aid the student project. Your project prospectus should be submitted simultaneously to your state human relations council and to Mr. Al Ulmer at SRC. The prospectus should include information pertaining to why the project is needed, who will participate, the exact purpose and program of the project, a budget estimate, how it will be administered, etc. Such a project might involve the publication of a state student newsletter, a community organization project, a tutorial program, or any one of a number of programs which are needed in your state and which students can successfully begin. Why not submit your proposal to your state human relations council? Get to work now! By the way, the maximum for most grants is about $500 or less, but we hear that if you have a really great program you might be able to get $1000. Obviously, the money will go fast!

FLORIDA STUDENT HUMAN RELATIONS CONFERENCE:
On the weekend of November 12-13, the Southern Project sponsored the Florida Student Human Relations Conference at the Methodist Youth Camp at Leesburg, Florida. Chiefly initiated and organized by Rick Stevens, assistant director of the Southern Project, the conference was attended by approximately seventy-five students. The conference was blessed by the presence of a number of excellent resource persons who were able to consult individually and collectively with the students. There was general agreement that the conference was extremely worthwhile and valuable. See the enclosed schedule and newspaper reprint for the conference program.

As a result of the conference, the students decided to: (1)Form a continuations committee which will travel to the Florida college campuses, and will offer program suggestions to the students. (2)Publish a state newsletter concerned with significant developments of civil liberties, academic freedom, civil rights, peace, etc, on Florida college campuses. (3)Work on the possibility of holding a spring conference. (4)Develop a community organization project for next summer.

SUMMER PROJECTS:
Now is the time for you to encourage the administration of your college to consider initiating a summer project which will utilize "work-study" students in tutorial projects in the community. Such students are able to work up to 40 hours a week in the summer under the Economic Opportunity Act work-study program which is administered by the U.S. Office of Education.

We will soon send you the souvenir edition of "The TISEP Reporter," the official weekly paper of the Tuskegee Institute Summer Education Program. This will give you some idea of the massive scale on which a program as described above can be conducted in your state. The tutors were funded through the work-study program while the materials, administrative salaries, and rental of buildings was financed by a community action demonstration program grant from the Office of Economic Opportunity, 1200 Nineteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20506. If you want to know more about such a project, contact Mr. David Walls at the OEO office. Mr. Walls will be happy to discuss this program with you, and if you are seriously interested you should call him collect at (202) 382-6462.

The advantage of this program is that work-study proposals cannot be vetoed by your governor. If you feel that your college would not be interested in such a program, why not contact a neighboring college you feel will be more interested? You can start a program which will benefit your state and community. Why not try it!? You can do it!

SSHRS CORRESPONDENCE:

CELLESTINE HILL writes that she is planning to push for the formation of a human relations committee of the YWCA at the Women's College of Georgia. She hopes that she can also open the doors for more discussion on the campus in regard to human relations.

RAY McCLAIN hasn't written to tell us how he likes it up North, but you can write to him in care of Swarthmore College, Swarthmore, Pennsylvania.

CATHY TYLER has written a long article on the SSHRS for the Columbia College Post Script and has also written an extensive article comparing NSA and the Southern Universities Student Government Association. She is having a visitor from Purdue during the Thanksgiving holidays. Cathy is giving some thought to going to the University of North Carolina next year to do graduate work in history.

ANN VALLIANT has been involved in studying the family structure of the Negro community in Fayetteville, Arkansas, along with another student. A paper has been prepared based on their findings and will be presented at the American Anthropological Association annual conference in Denver. Ann is being sent as a delegate to the conference, all expenses paid.

BETTIE HILL has written to NSA for some materials which she hopes will stimulate some thought and action on the Mississippi Valley State College campus.

STAN FRICK attended a recent steering committee meeting of the South Carolina Student Council on Human Relations and we saw him there. Though we didn't get much of an opportunity to talk with him, it seems that all is well with him at Newberry College.

LULA MORTON led a discussion group at the Fourth Annual Kentucky College Conference on Intergroup Relations, and later wrote a report on the conference for the Transylvania College newspaper. Luda has been using her SSHRS materials as the basis for an informal discussion group in her dormitory.

SHERRY ALLEN has started her pre-teaching/intership training by acting as an assistant teacher. She is enjoying her tutorial experience also, and is still looking for some way to get to Europe for several months next summer. Sherry attended the Florida Student Human Relations Conference. By the way, she recently turned 21 and is happy that now she can go to the "a-go-go" clubs--but she still hasn't been.

DALE CALDWELL wrote lamenting over the lack of meaningful content in the Memphis State University newspaper, Tiger Rag. Dale has also begun a one-man protest against the Vietnam war by pinning an "END VIETNAM WAR NOW" sticker across the back of his tweed jacket and then going about his business on campus. Obviously, this has stimulated considerable dialogue at Memphis State.

CAROLYN BREWSTER has been quite busy at Miles College where she was in charge of planning the homecoming activities and is involved in numerous other campus affairs. She was helpful in enabling us to talk with the Dean and the student body president who are now interested in Miles becoming affiliated with NSA--thanks to Carolyn's encouragement and harassment. She hopes to start participating in an intercollegiate discussion group (involving Birmingham Southern College, Miles College, and Howard College) just as soon as football season is over and she is not so busy with band practice.

FRED WRIGHT hopes that he will be able to get Joe Hendricks to speak on the University of Southwestern Louisiana campus this spring. In the meantime, Fred is planning a program on Vietnam for the Newman Club. Fred reports that U.S.L. played an integrated football team for the first time recently, and that the campus human relations council is beginning to become more active.

HUMOR

At the recent annual dinner of the Southern Regional Council, Dr. James McBride Dabbs, former president of SRC and one of speakers at the 8th SSHRS, introduced the main speaker for the evening, Dr. C. Vann Woodward. Following his introduction Dr. Dabbs sat down, ready to light his pipe and listen to Dr. Woodward's remarks. Dr. Woodward, meanwhile, made a few introductory remarks, saying how pleasant it was to be back in Atlanta. Then he hesitated, fidgeted, and said, "Now if Dr. Dabbs will hand me my manuscript we will get on with the proceedings." Dr. Dabbs, who is well-known for his easy Southern manner, returned the manuscript to Woodward--and proceeded to turn a brilliant shade of red.

Students Call for Hand in Running of Colleges

By JOHN FRASCA
Tribune Staff Writer

LEESBURG — There were not many of them at the weekend student meeting at the Methodist Youth Camp, but those who came were deadly serious and they drove in from all parts of the South. One girl got a ticket for speeding near Atlanta.

"From one of those damn Georgia cops," is the way she put it.

It was the Florida Student Human Relations Conference to discuss social, political and economic change. About 70 students attended the three-day meeting sponsored by the Southern Student Human Relations Project, the Florida Council on Human Relations and Southern Student Organizing Committee.

Some of the participants were veterans of the civil rights wars. They had marched in Selma and Birmingham. In introducing one speaker, the moderator ticked off the number of times he had been in jail.

"If they give you a 30-day sentence," said the speaker, "you really only serve about five days. You'd be surprised about how much you learn in jail."

Generally, the students did not like the way the colleges in the South were being run. They scorned what some of them termed the "student government types" and blasted professors who spend much of their time off campus delivering lectures.

The only joke told during the first two days had to do with a college instructor who was going off on one of his trips and left word that he would teach by tape-recorder during his absence.

"He was going to have his lectures run off on a big tape recorder," said Gwen Patton, president of student government at Tuskegee Institute. "But he didn't have to leave on the day he was scheduled to begin his trip. So he went to class that day, as usual.

"When he got there, he found a big tape-recorder talking to 31 little tape-recorders."

The essence of Miss Patton's remarks was that students are not being properly taught, that the professors with big reputations spend most of their time lecturing elsewhere and preparing research papers.

She said that student government could do more than worry about football and homecoming queens — and that a strong student government could have something to say about the operation of the school.

This view was echoed by Jean Hoefer, of the University of South Carolina Law School. A former student government president at Agnes Scott College, Miss Hoefer pointed to the strength of students in Latin-American countries.

"They run the government," she said.

She suggested a nation-wide union of college students that would have a voice in the running of the municipal, state and national governments.

Dan Harmeling, a graduate student at the University of Florida, said that today's Joe and Jane College know nothing of the community outside the university walls.

"This is the opportunity they have to do something," he said. "When they get out of college they join the status quo. They can't do the things they want and should do. They get a job and then can't do anything significant because they must be careful lest they offend their employer or their colleagues. The time to do something about social and political problems is while you are in school, before you belong to the status quo."

Harmeling also advised against joining sororities or fraternities. He said these were also forms of status quo.

Most of the students took huge bites out of student government and student government types in Florida. They said that, in most instances, student governments were only extensions of the administration and were told what to do.

"The student government is the wedge," said Miss Hoefer. "You can do something with it. You can make it count for something. You don't have to let the administration run you."

She said that student government types were the people who were running the government and pointed out that the time to influence these types" was while they are students.

"If you can talk to them and reason with them while they are in school," she said, "you'll be able to reason with them later when they're running things."

Rick Stevens, of Atlanta, asaistant director of the Southern Student Human Relations Project, said he was so impressed with the response from Florida students that plans are under way to hold meetings on many campuses in the state. The discussions will be on social, political and economic change.

While most students in the state were attending or listening to football games yesterday, this dead-serious 70 were conducting workshops on such subjects as "Extremist Elements," "Educational Reform," and "Academic Freedom and Civil Liberties."

However, there were three pretty little things from a Catholic school who wondered how the Gators would do against Tulane. They spoke in whispers, though, lest they disturb the world-changers.

"Well, what do you want us to do?" asked one of the moderators. "When students were swallowing goldfish a few years ago, everybody said that college kids ought to do something worthwhile.

"Now they're trying to do something worthwhile and people are sniggering at us.

"Honestly, I think they'd rather we go back to eating goldfish."

Mr. J. E. Stanfield
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Stanfield:

During our conversation at the Annual Dinner of the North Carolina Council on Human Relations at Raleigh last month, I briefly outlined the work being done here on a guide of financial aid for Negro students. This booklet, in its first edition, is now complete. I am enclosing two copies for your inspection.

This particular edition is more specifically destined to North Carolina Negro students. Although we had considerable material on scholarships in other states, the lack of time, labor, and funds prevented its inclusion at this time.

At present, we are planning a second edition to be available for distribution to next year's crop of high school graduates. Hopefully, this edition will be far more complete. Southwide distribution would be our goal.

For the present edition, we have published 1,000 copies. At this writing, over half of them have already been distributed in one week. Ideally, we would like a publication of some 10,000 booklets for the next edition.

As you specified, I am sending along a budget request for this second booklet. I have attached a schedule of costs incurred in the publication of the first edition. Two budget estimates for the second booklet are enclosed, one is a low estimate figured using volunteers to assemble the booklet, the other is figured on contracting out the assembly of the booklet. I hope that the Southern Regional Council may be able to act favorably on all or a portion of this request.

Sincerely yours,

Tony Mason

- College Students -
GRADUATING THIS YEAR?

Many deadlines are imminent; get your grad school applications in immediately.

The following departments at the UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA graduate school are excellant, and rather hard to get into (at least B average, and good GRE score required): Physics (Prof. Eugen Merzbacher, Chm.), Chemistry (Prof. R. G. Hiskey), Statistics (Prof. George Nicholson), Mathematics (Prof. W. E. Jenner, Chm.)., Dept. of Botany, Psychometrics Institute (Prof. William Wynn), and others. The music Dept. has some very good people, e.g. in voice, and offers a lot. Vice Pres. Branch has some applications for U.N.C. A good major in any subject who is strong in mathematics should apply to Prof. John W. Tukey, Chm., Dept. of Statistics, Princeton University, Princeton, N. J. if interested in grad work (for PhD) in statistics pure or applied to any subject. Recommended for a strong Chem or Biology major: Dept. of Biol. (write Prof. Donald Kennedy, Chm.), STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Stanford, Cal. For excellent statistics dept. at Stanford: Prof. Lincoln Moses, Chm. DUKE UNIVERSITY is a good grad school too.

GRADUATE PROGRAMS IN MEDICAL SCIENCES, PUBLIC HEALTH AND MEDICAL STATISTICS have these advantages:

(1) Usually a bit easier to get into than major grad schools
(2) Lots of fellowships ($2,400 plus tuition) available.

The National Institutes of Health of the U. S. Public Health Service provide these, because the need for people trained in medical and public health research is so great. The courses, mostly given at a School of Public Health or a medical school, are not MD courses, but PhD, DSc, or MPH (Master of Public Health) etc.

E.G., at University of N. C. School of Public Health, Chapel Hill, N. C., apply to Dr. D. A. Okun, Chm. Dept. of Environmental Engineering for admission and a fellowship for PhD studies in any of the following: Biology, Ecology, Chemistry, Microbiology, Radiological Hygiene, Air Polution, (etc.). You can also write to Dr. Robert Mah in the same dept. (he's a microbiologist) who will be glad to answer any questions you have about the various programs. Then there's the MSPH. Master of Sci. in Public Health in Biostatistics: Apply for admission and fellowship to Dr. Herbert A. David, Dept. of Biostat.

The Medical School at UNC also has PhD programs. So do all the major medical schools and schools of public health. Courses include those listed above and some of these: BIOCHEMISTRY, PATHOLOGY, ANATOMY, PSYCHOLOGY, MEDICAL SOCIOLOGY, PUBLIC HEALTH NURSING, SOCIAL WORK. Lots of government money available. For a list of programs get Public Health Service Grants and Awards, Part II, Training Grants, Traineeships and Fellowships - get it from N.I.H., U. S. Public Health Service, Bethesda, Md. 20014. Apply to Chairman, Dept. of whatever it is at the medical school. You find most of the above programs given at these: UCLA medical school, Chicago Univ. medical school. Some at the med schools at Jackson and Birmingham. Also apply at the following if interested:

Columbia University School of Public Health, Dept. of Biostatistics, John W. Fertig, Chm., 168th St. and Broadway, N. Y. C.: The MPH program there is very good and is relatively easy to get into. Only prerequisites are a year of calculus, probability and statistics, some biology and a fairly good average; strength in something else can substitute for biology or probability and statistics. A good program in PHARMACOLOGY: Dr. Avram Goldstein, Chrman, Dept. of Pharmacology, Stanford Univ. Medical Center, Stanford, California.

PSYCHOLOGY AND SOCIOLOGY MAJORS are needed in research and in public health. Lots of training programs psychology, soc. work, med. sociology, etc. are financed by the Natl. Inst. of Mental Health. The Psychology Dept. at UNC has lots of NIMH fellowships.

SOME GRADUATE FELLOWSHIPS IN MEDICAL SCIENCES AT THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA

Graduates wishing to take advanced studies in subjects related to Chemistry, Biological or Medical sciences at the University of N. C. may apply for admission to graduate departments located either (1) in the University proper or (2) in the School of Public Health or (3) in the School of Medicine. Some information about a few of the programs in the first two is summarized on some other sheets. There the fellowships from the U.S. Public Health Service to pay for tuition at the School of Public Health plus a couple of thousand dollars a year stipend are mentioned.

The following is concerned with a few PhD programs available in some of the departments of the Medical School: Bacteriology and Immunology (that's one department), Biochemistry, Genetics and Molecular Biology (that's one), and Physiology. (Programs in the Pathology department require two years of medical school before youstart). In general these programs, which are apt to take four years in many cases, give you an excellant training in modern medical sciences and prepare you for very fine research positions; people with this training are in high demand. Entrance requirements are fairly high, and the graduate record examination is always taken into account; but there is no clear minimum required score: your whole undergraduate record makes a big difference.

Admission to most of these programs requires that you have had a year of organic chemistry, a year of biology, a year of calculus, a year of physics and in some departments you must have had a course in genetics too, and physical chemistry. If you lack one of these courses but the rest of your record in these sciences is pretty strong, then you may be admitted and make up the extra course when you get there.

There are fellowships available to pay for tuition plus a stipend (income) of $2400.

All of these departments and their programs, though housed in the medical school are listed in the catalogue, Record of the Univ. of N. C. at Chapel Hill, for the Graduate School, and not in the catalogue for the School of Medicine. So you can get a lot of the details out of the Graduate School catalogue. In addition there are two booklets from the Genetics department (one on the courses and one on the fellowships available) and one from the Biochemistry department. These tell you to send your application to the Department Chairmen, Dr. John B. Graham and Dr. J. Logan Irvin. For other departments you can send your application either to the Chairman or to the Graduate School, University of North Carolina.

In any case, your application form is the same kind used for all departments of the Graduate School. Actually these come in two versions, "Application for Admission" and "Application for a Graduate Appointment" and it is advisable to use the letter kind. In addition you write a letter saying you'd like to apply for a Fellowship. You will also have to get three reference forms and transcripts and GRE sent to the Graduate School or to the Department head, whichever it is you are communicating with.

Don't forget to check into PhD (or DSC) programs in medical sciences at the medical schools at Jackson and Birmingham too. And Tulane, Duke, Vanderbilt, Washington University, etc...

APPLICATIONS AT UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA AND MANY OF THE OTHER SCHOOLS MUST BE SUBMITTED VERY SOON TO HAVE ANY CHANCE OF BEING CONSIDERED.

If you would like to receive these special bulletins as they are published, please send us your name and address for our regular mailing list.

COLLEGE SOPHOMORES, JUNIORS, even FRESHMEN

If you're interested in some kind of graduate or professional program after graduation, a good time to get your foot in the door is THIS YEAR. You can do this mainly by making the fullest use of your summer:

(1) If you attend summer school at a University, successful completion of a few courses there (don't take a heavy load), will greatly improve your chances of getting into the University's graduate school later, as well as give you an idea whether you want to. You and the University get a chance to look each other over, to some extent, (in spite of the fact that summer sessions are rather different from the academic year). It gives you useful contacts and an idea of the variety of different brandes and subjects you can go into later. (For instance, departments and fields of study at UNC include the following: Biophysics, Communication Center, Dental Research, Folklore, Information Science, Institute of Fisheries Research, Institute of Latin American Studies, Medical Sociology, Microbiology, Psychometrics, Urban and Regional Studies. Some college students never even hear about these. Yet there's no reason why you shouldn't get into one of these fields.

Even at a tough university, it's mostly quite easy to get into the summer school. Some suggestions (for instance): Tulane University, University of N. C. at Chapel Hill, Duke University in Durham, Vanderbilt, University of Alabama, University of Mississippi, Washington University, Mo., Chicago University. Inquire about a possible scholarship or loan for the summer at that University.

(2) There's a variety of summer jobs, and for most of these you should write and apply soon. Many summer job experiences, ranging from research jobs and training fellowships that tax your book knowledge to the fullest, to routine clerical jobs in a research or professional environment, besides providing income for the summer can

Give you an idea what a profession is about,
Hence give you ideas as to what you want to take up
and what elective courses to take next year in preparation,
Teach you things you can never learn in class,
Give you useful contacts,
Open doors to graduate and career opportunities to you in the future,
And be an interesting change.

Oftentimes a department of a medical school, or a city Department of Health (or of anything else), or a firm, etc., likes to take you on for two or three successive summers with the idea that you may later study and work there full time, if they like your work and you like what they have to offer. Without that first summer they'll never know and you'll never know.

To the Principal or Guidance Counselor:

With the expanding technology of this modern age, a college education more than anything else has become the key to a successful life. Now with over fifty per cent of all American high school graduates going to college in pursuit of this "key," our institutions of higher learning are bursting with more than four million students. This number is growing every year. While students flock to the American campus, there are few if any new schools being built to absorb everyone who would like to go to college. As a result colleges have become more and more selective, and above all have had to become more and more expensive in order to continue quality education. Unfortunately, the expense of college turns many qualified students away from furthering their education.

Negro students and particularly Southern Negro students because of long years of discrimination, segregation, and deprivation have found the step between high school and college extremely difficult or impossible. With new opportunities beginning to open up for your students, it is more urgent than ever for them to go to college now; yet, the expense still may be formidable. Expense, however, should not keep any qualified student out of college. There are millions of dollars worth of scholarships and loans available nowadays, and much of it is available to Negro students. How many students for example know that the Polytechnic Institute of Brooklyn has several four-year scholarships for Southern Negro students who are interested in engineering. A small liberal arts college in Minnesota has three scholarships especially earmarked for Negro students. Closer to home, a central North Carolina seminary has scholarships for Negro students who wish to enter the ministry. Yet how many students know of these grants?

The University of North Carolina YM-YWCA's Human Relations Committee felt that there was a wide "information gap" between Negro students and scholarship sources. This booklet, we hope, will be able to bridge part of that gap. We would like to present this guide to you with our compliments in hopes that your students may benefit from it.

Originally we were planning to put out a much larger, far more complete guide. We still hope to, but this abbreviated edition seemed necessary now for those students who plan to enter college next year. We have included more material for North Carolina students in this edition than we have material for students of other states. In our later publication we intend to include more scholarship and loan sources from other Southern states so that this booklet may be distributed South-wide.

If you desire additional copies of this booklet, they may be ordered by using the order form at the end of this guide. This undertaking has been expensive; you may wish to contribute toward the second edition projected for May of this year. Contributions made out to the University North Carolina YMCA are Income Tax deductible. In any event, may we have your comments on improving future editions.

SCHOLARSHIP INFORMATION COMMITTEE of the HUMAN RELATIONS COMMITTEE

This booklet is designed as a "guide" to scholarship and loan aid presently available to southern Negro students. It contains the names and addresses of 145 sources which, our committee feels, will accept on a equitable basis the applications of Negro college and graduating high school students. Our committee has also put forth an effort to evaluate the criteria for each of the awards listed, being guided by that data we have solicited from the various sources. Too many students, of all races are not aware of the vast amount of scholarships, loans, and other financial aid available to them. We hope that these efforts will be helpful in bridging the information gap which exists in this area.

Next to an applicant's personal qualifications, the most important item in applying for scholarship aid is the student's application. Except for those grants where interviews are necessary, the application is the only personal contact a foundation has with the student. For this reason, most scholarship sources regard the student's application as a direct reflection of his general character and ability. If an application is disorganized, dirty, or grammatically incorrect, a reviewing board will assume that these are the general characteristics of the student. Misspelled words, ambiguous answers, and incomplete information are most often those faults which disqualify an applicant in the eyes of a reviewing board.

Most scholarship aid is awarded on the basis of academic scholarship and financial need. It is imperative, therefore, that a student relate truthfully information of this nature. Most reviewing boards have had enough experience in this area to quickly spot excessive estimates of need. On the other hand, a student should not under-estimate the amount of his need, with the hope that he has a better chance of receiving aid when asking for a smaller amount. If financial need were the final factor in granting an award, a student who has greatest need would be the one most likely to receive the award. As far as the academic record is concerned, all sources who grant aid on a scholastic basis, send to the student's school for his academic record. It would be very embarrassing to find that a student's record is different from that which he has stated.

Questions on most applications usually ask about the following: parents living, their occupations, their annual income, their assets (property,stock, savings, etc.), their outstanding debts, number of children in family, those in school, those working, applicant's financial resources (savings, earnings, personal assets, relatives, etc.), applicant's work experience, his total financial expenses, balance from need and resources (amount of award needed), his career interest, his grades, his participation in extra-curricular activities, his participation in community activities, his academic status in class, academic competence (SAT and other national test scoures), educational experience outside of regular sessions (summer school). Many applications will require the applicant to secure character references. Other applications may even require a written statement telling why the applicant is applying for help. In all, an application may appear long and burdensome, but the questions asked are crucial in the eyes of the reviewing board - so complete all answers accurately and concisely.

It is our hope that the information included in this booklet will be of help to those students who are in need of financial assistance. It is also our hope that the evaluations accompanying each listing will help to save time and effort when looking for suitable aid. Although we have no scholarship funds available for needy students, we are happy to serve as the middle-man by informing students of other organizations which do have them. We wish you success with your future education. If any of our material is outdated or erroneous, we would appreciate hearing from you on the matter.

A scholarship is an outright grant of money or other consideration given to an [illegible] on the basis of superior academic [illegible]

Below on this page begins our listing of scholarships which are available to you upon graduation from high school or are available to you later during your college career. Each scholarship has been carefully studied, condensed and keyed according to a form which is standard throughout this guide. The key is as follows:

0. THE NAME OF THE SCHOLARSHIP
Eligibility: This heading will tell you if high school students or college students or college students are considered for the scholarship. Where Valid: Some scholarships are to be used at specific colleges and universities. If the scholarship is limited to a particular college or university, note the number just before the Name of the Scholarship (in this case 0.), then consult the Index to Colleges and Scholarships at the back of this guide. This scholarship will be valid at every college or university with the number 0 beside it. Restrictions: Some scholarships limit themselves to students of a particular sex, a particular interest, or the like. Some scholarships are specifically limited to Negroes. Other than in this case, all scholarships are awarded regardless of the applicant's race. Those scholarships which are available only to residents of a particular state are listed in a separate section. The word "None" indicates that there are no known restrictions. Value: Where possible, we try to give the exact number and the value of the scholarship offered. How to Apply: If the scholarship interests you, and you desire application blanks, you should write to the address listed under this heading. Basis of Award: Under this heading, we have tried to list the various criteria used in the selection of applicants. Scholarship and need are the two most common ones, although extracurricular activities, character, and service are often considered, too. Deadline: Many scholarships require that applications reach the central office before a certain date. Where possible, we have listed this date. Almost all dates are based upon an intended entry into college in the fall semester. When the word "Unspecified" appears here, it would be wise to have your applications in by March 1, at the latest.

We hope that with this key and the scholarships listed in this guide, you will be able to find the aid that will insure your college education. Good luck!

A history of USNSA

United States National Student Association
3457 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. 19104

HISTORY OF USNSA

The recognition of common aims and common problems has led students in most countries to form national student organizations. This sense of community has been active not only in the nations of Europe and Latin America, but in the United States as well. In 1925 representatives from more than 200 colleges and universities in this country met at Princeton University to form the National Student Federation of America. The Federation continued for more than fifteen years, sponsoring publications, travel and some student government programming. The Federation collapsed at the outset of World War II as a result of that war and of internal and external factionalism.

The sense of community remained: internationally and domestically. In Europe students became convinced of the need for international student understanding and cooperation. A meeting was called for 1946 in Prague to be called the "World Student Congress." It was intended that this congress would act as the constitutional convention for an international union of students.

The Prague Conference

During the winter and spring of 1946, a considerable amount of interest was generated on American university and college campuses in the Prague Congress. Also, many international student leaders were anxious that the United States, with more universities and university students than any other country, should be represented.

Since the United States did not have a national student organization representative and vigorous enough to speak for the American student community, the initiative for gathering together an American delegation fell to the existing student and youth organizations of religious, professional or political character. The delegation finally chosen was composed of delegates from six organizations and ten colleges.

Partisan Force Deployed

On August 18, 1946, 300 students from thirty-eight countries gathered in Prague for the meeting. The danger signs were clearly present: a partisan force was developed throughout the parts of the Congress pretending to be concerned with issues of rights and procedures and 'fascism,' while their actual purpose was to capture the machinery of the nascent organization.

It soon became clear that a Communist majority was in control of the meeting. The Swiss, Dutch, Chinese, Scandinavians, the Dominions, Belgium, Denmark, the United States and minorities of the British, French and Italians—and at times the Finns and Poles—voted in the minority.

The final action of the Congress was the election of an Executive Committee which was clearly controlled by a pre-selected majority. An American student from the National Intercollegiate Christian Council became a vice-president and served until 1948.

A Student Forum

The American delegation, returning to this country, "could see the profound need for a forum of American student leadership, a body through which international representation and information distribution could be maintained,center for American student cooperation and communication, and an on-going body that could begin to raise the level of the understanding of international and national problems on the college campus. Although they were severely disillusioned by the Prague meeting, they still had hope—as did their elders who were busy setting the form of the United Nations—that differences among various national unions of students could be settled at the conference table and that practical international student cooperation and communication could be established.

Chicago Student Conference

Backed by the nine organizations which had originally organized the American delegation to Prague, the returning delegates constituted themselves as the Committee for the Chicago Student Conference. Invitations went out to every university and college in the country to meet at the University of Chicago in December of 1946. Student leaders from about 200 colleges and universities and a score of youth and student organizations gathered and spent three days in committees, caucuses and plenary sessions to decide the form and purpose of the "national student organization." They elected a Continuations Committee, headed by the student body president from the University of Texas, Jim Smith. The Committee was to call a constitutional convention, prepare a draft constitution, and distribute information on the proposed organization.

Constitutional Convention

The Constitutional Convention met in Madison, Wisconsin, at the University of Wisconsin in the summer of 1947. The Continuations Committee had observed the 1947 meeting of the International Union of Students, and its recommendations for qualified affiliation created a hot contest among the three hundred delegates at the meeting.

The decision was made to continue to investigate affiliation; affiliation could be accepted, however, only if national autonomy could be guaranteed, if the dues scale could be adjusted, and if a two-thirds vote be secured at the next meeting of the NSA—the First National Student Congress.

Membership in NSA

The other major contest centered around the question of membership in the National Student Association. Some of the organizations wanted to be able to become members; some students wanted individual membership; some wanted membership restricted to student governments which would create a representative structure of a quasi-governmental nature. "The Texas Plan," the proposal by outgoing President Jim Smith, that would restrict membership to democratic student governments, was finally accepted and is still the basis of membership for the Association.

The Convention elected Bill Welsh from Berea College in Kentucky as President, Robert Smith of Yale College as International Affairs Vice-President, and sent Jim Smith to observe the meetings of the IUS Executive Committee, and a team to investigate conditions of possible membership.

Disillusionment With the IUS

A series of events in the next two years disillusioned many national unions of students in Europe with the IUS, and caused USNSA to finally give up attempts to revise the organization as to make affiliation possible. Foremost among the events which clearly showed the partisan character of the IUS was the coup d'etat in Czechoslovakia in 1948. Communists took control of the Czech government and universities, vigorously suppressing dissenting students. The International Union of Students refused to respond to an obvious suppression of students taking place on its doorstep. The United States representative in Europe, Jim Smith, immediately protested. The Swiss, Austrians, and Belgians, who had been observing the operations of the IUS as much as the NSA had been, indicated that they would not now join the organization; the Swedes and Danes withdrew. The Belgians and the Dutch student unions began to raise to question of a Western European student organization.

The International Student Conference

Despite their disappointment with the IUS, many national unions of students still hoped that it would be possible to establish some means by which students could so operate. The three Scandanavian national unions of students convened a meeting in Stockholm in 1950, to discuss new means of international cooperation. Delegates to the conference, including NSA, agreed that no new organization should be formed. Instead they created a much looser form of cooperation. In an attempt to avoid the highly centralized structure which had characterized the IUS—which many felt had violated the autonomy of individual national organizations—they created a less formal conference, which was to meet and reconstitute itself every year. Projects carried out between conferences were to be delegated to individual national unions of students. The meeting, which came to be known as the International Student Conference, was not intended to be a Western international student organization to counter the IUS. Instead, it was to eschew partisan politics, and be a genuine open forum in which national student organizations could cooperate on common problems. The next conference, in Edinburgh, did establish a permanent secretariat, the Coordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students (COSEC) but its duties were to be largely administrative, and its ability to take stands on issues between conferences was severely prescribed.

Substantial Domestic Programming

Because a great deal of the impetus for the formation of NSA had come from a desire that American students be represented abroad, and because of the controversial question of IUS membership, much of the time at early national student congresses was spent discussing international issues. At the same time, however, NSA began to develop a substantial domestic program, aimed at assisting member student governments by providing for exchange of information, and at developing a responsible voice for American students on educational problems within the United States. A newspaper was established; NSA began to serve as a clearing house for exchange of information on programs developed by member campuses; a student travel program was organized, which allowed American students inexpensive European tours during the summer vacation. The Association was invited to become a member of the United States Commission for UNESCO, and accepted. Increasingly educational leaders began to call on USNSA for assistance and advice when matters of student concern were discussed. Membership increased consistently.

Programs for Member Campuses

Delegates to National Student Congresses during the early fifties responded to these problems by establishment of several programs designed to meet particular needs of member campuses. A special vice-presidency had been created, to deal specifically with problems of student government. Beginning in 1950, the Association established a special conference for Student Body Presidents, which met just before the National Student Congress, and gave newly elected student body presidents a chance to exchange information.

Student Life In the U.S.

As the Association continued to grow, it began to develop new programs dealing with student life in the United States, embracing a large number of interests and needs of American students. In 1954, the Ford Foundation granted the Association $28,000 to conduct a study of student activities in the United States, and to publish the results of this study. The following year, the Foundation provided a total of $128,000 to establish the Foreign Student Leadership Project, which brings selected leaders of student organizations in Africa, Asia, and Latin America to the United States for one year to study American student groups, and to work closely with their American counterparts.

Programs begun earlier also continued. In 1955, the Association was able to hire a full time director of its Student Government Information Service to meet the need for exchange of information between student governments on campus problems. The Student Government Vice President, who had been a student working as a vice-president only as an extracurricular activity, became a full-time officer, and was able to visit nearly 100 campuses a year, helping directly in the development of student government programming. Later an additional elected officer, the Educational Affairs Vice-President, was added to the list of full-time personnel.

ISC Growth

The Associations international program also expanded. The International Student Conference had grown from the initial 21 national unions of students who attended the Stockholm meeting in 1950 until there were nearly 60 national student organizations in attendance at the 6th ISC, held in Ceylon in September of 1956. The increase in membership of the ISC brought USNSA into contact with students whose problems and concerns were quite different from those of their American counterparts. No longer was the Conference composed primarily of European student unions. Delegates from Asia and Africa, many of whom had taken part in independence movements in their countries, or who, like the Algerian students, were still engaged in the struggle for independence, urged the conference to consider their problems. Latin American students saw the struggle against dictatorial governments as a central question in their efforts to improve education in their countries. The closing of many universities and political suppression of students by Batista in Cuba, Perez-Jiminez in Venezuela Stroessner in Paraguay, Peron in Argentina and others made their appeals more dramatic.

International Student Programs

Delegates to USNSA Congresses indicated their concern with the problems of students in Africa, Asia, and Latin America in many ways. Resolutions were passed giving support for students who were working for educational freedom in other countries. Programs were developed to give assistance to students from these areas. Working with other organizations, such as World University Service, the Association developed material relief and scholarship programs for students in many parts of the world. The newly established Foreign Student Leadership Project gave American students a chance to meet student leaders from the emerging areas at first hand.

Campus International Awareness

In addition to programs dealing directly with students from other countries, the Association realized that it could be of assistance to American student groups interested in developing programs of international awareness on American campuses. The post of Campus International Administrator was established. This staff member was to travel to member campuses, giving information and assistance to many developing programs on international affairs. Two publications, dealing with international programming on campuses and programs for foreign students, were published and received wide circulation.

Student Responsibility Project

The last four years of the 1950's saw several new developments in USNSA designed to meet the expanding needs of NSA's member campuses, and the Association's increasingly important role in American higher education. A grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education made possible the establishment of the Student Responsibility Project. The Project was designed to encourage students to contribute to the solution of some of the problems that increasing enrollments were beginning to cause American universities. Information, publications, and a national conference led many member campuses to develop programs dealing with the problem areas the Project emphasized: recruitment of teachers, independent study programs and curriculum evaluation; and counselling services. A series of publications followed the termination of the project, providing the results of the participating campuses experiences for others interested in these problems.

Southern Project

The Association's continuing concern in the field of civil rights and the problem of desegregation in Southern universities led to the establishment of a Summer Southern Student Human Relations Seminar, and in 1959-60 to the establishment of a Southern Project, both set up under grants from the Field Foundation.

Educational Travel

NSA's travel department, Educational Travel, Inc., also began to expand its programs. While continuing to provide low cost tours to Europe for American students, it also began to develop new educational travel programs. Study tours, including a one-month seminar with eminent European educators, were developed. Plans were laid for programs in areas where American students have not usually had much opportunity to travel. Latin American, Japan and African tours were developed.

Increasing Demands

USNSA membership continued its upward climb during this period. Recognition among American educators, and in other sectors of American society, placed increasing demands on the Association. NSA officers were called upon to participate in meetings of groups like the American Council on Education and the Association for Higher Education. Following the mandates of resolutions passed by the National Student Congress, USNSA officers prepared testimony for several Congressional committees dealing with educational legislation, such as the National Defense Education Act.

A Turning Point

Many observers saw 1960 as a turning point for American students. Increased activity on political and social issues, coupled with the dramatization of the role of students elsewhere, as shown in student demonstrations in Korea, Turkey and Japan, made Americans conscious of students as they had not been before. On the national scene, the sit-in movement, beginning in February of 1960, caused widespread interest and action both within and without the student community, and was the most significant evidence of a new tempo to student activity in the United States. Other issues, as well, caused students to act to promote those principles they felt important. Capital punishment, compulsory ROTC, nuclear disarmament, the House Committee on Un-American Activities and other questions excited student interest and student action on many campuses.

These aspects of the American student scene were reflected within the Association. Acting on the basis of the Congress resolution on desegregation, the Association supported the sit-ins, provided information for its member campuses, and encouraged support in both Southern and Northern campuses. A program of scholarship assistance for student leaders expelled from their universities for participation in the sit-ins was begun. Many NSA member colleges responded to the Association's calls for support with demonstrations of sympathy, picketing, and financial support.

The Sit-Ins

NSA's support of the sit-ins elicited much controversy at the 13th National Student Congress at the University of Minnesota in August of 1960, where actions of the officers in interpreting NSA policy were reviewed. Some delegates felt the Association had supported the sit-ins without adequate consultation with its member campuses; others raised questions about the legitimacy of the sit-in activity itself on legal or moral grounds. Still others felt the Association's actions had been correct, or criticized it for not having given adequate support for sit-ins. A series of panel discussions and many formal and informal debates on the issue ensued. Finally, the Congress passed a resolution by an overwhelming vote, endorsing the actions of the officers in applying association policy to the sit-ins, and urging member campuses to continue their efforts in the field of civil rights.

While the sit-ins provided the major focus for discussion at the Congress, other issues which had stirred debate on many campuses also received attention. Resolutions on the House Committee on Un-American Activities, federal aid to education, and other issues stirred controversy. Debate over these issues underlined the broader questions raised by the previous year's events: what kind of role should the student play in his society, does he have an obligation beyond his campus, to the community of which he is a part, and how does that obligation relate to his essential job as a student? Some preliminary answers to these questions were suggested in a basic policy declaration adopted by the Congress:

The Student in Society

"USNSA recognizes the great value of student involvement in programs of political and social action and the integral connection of these programs with the educational process. While recognizing that a student must devote primary attention to his academic program, the USNSA urges student participation in legitimate social and political activities. The student should be an active, informed, responsible participant in the democratic life of the campus, local, state, national and international communities. The student should seek with interest those problems which will lead to responsible involvement in social and political action. And in this connection the student should be concerned not simply with the problems of direct relevance to the academic community, but as well with those great problems and issues of our national and international life.

Expanding Concerns

The Association continued to expand its programs—particularly in the area of higher education. With assistance from a special grant, a project was established on academic freedom. The project director conducted six regional seminars and established sub-commissions on fifteen campuses; more than six new publications were prepared. Special conferences were conducted on the aims of education and legislative affairs: Internationally the Association sponsored the International Student Seminar—the largest international student meeting ever held in the United States. The seminar immediately preceded the 10th International Student Conference and allowed students from over fifty nations to discuss in a relaxed and non-politicized atmosphere the international student concerns which they would debate later as delegates to the Conference.

The time since the 13th National Student Congress has been one of increased interest in political and social issues on the part of American students. Student groups of many political philosophies, some concerned with one issue, and some concerned with a broad range of questions, have sprung up on American campuses. Older groupings of students have intensified their activities. This increase in the pace and level of student action forced many adult leaders and groups to become cognizant of the potential of students as an active force in this country's social and political life.

In committing students to seek solutions to the pressing problems facing education and society, USNSA will continue to act as a forum and a catalyst, an instrument for mutual cooperation and action.

PREAMBLE TO THE USNSA CONSTITUTION

"We, the members of the national union of students of the United States of America, desiring to maintain academic freedom, academic responsibility and student rights; to stimulate and improve democratic student government;

to develop better educational standards, facilities and teaching methods;

to improve student cultural, social, and physical welfare;

to promote international understanding and fellowship;

to guarantee to all people, because of their inherent dignity as individuals, equal rights and possibilities for primary, secondary, and higher education regardless of sex, race, religion, political belief or economic circumstance;

to foster the recognition of the rights and responsibilities of students to the school, the community, humanity and God;

and to preserve the interests and integrity of the government and Constitution of the United States of America; do hereby establish this Constitution of the United States National Student Association.

THE UNITED STATES NATIONAL STUDENT ASSOCIATION is a confederation of college student bodies in every part of the country which are associated together to give consideration to questions of mutual concern. Each student body is represented in the Association by its own democratically elected student government and its foremost student leaders. The United States National Student Association is a non-partisan, non-sectarian, non-profit, student-run, educational association.

DOMESTICALLY, the United States National Student Association carries on continuing research, collection of data, and dissemination of information on campus student problems and on national and international issues of concern to American student leaders. It holds national and regional meetings of student leaders to provide for the exchange of ideas on common problems, answers hundreds of requests for information from students all over the country, and publishes the only series of publications on student and student government problems. It maintains the only library devoted solely to works by and for students and student governments. The United States National Student Association is dedicated to inspiring increased participation and responsibility on the part of students in the national, international and educational communities. It represents the opinion of the majority of those student leaders at member campuses before the United States Congress and non-governmental organizations. It is the only student constituent organization of the American Council on Education, the only student organization affiliated with the National Education Association, and is the only student organization with a representative on the U.S. National Commission for UNESCO.

INTERNATIONALLY, the United States National Student Association carries on relations with the national student organizations of more than seventy-five countries of the free world. It played a leading role in the development of the International Student Conference and its Coordinating Secretariat in concert with the other national student organizations which have found it impossible to cooperate with the Communist-dominated International Union of Students. It operates a student travel program which offers the lowest cost tours to Europe which can be obtained by American students. The United States National Student Association carries out educational exchange programs and maintains a program which brings student leaders from emergent countries to the United States for a year of study and experience in American student organizations. Information on student conditions, university life and student organizations abroad is sent to all member campuses, and information on American colleges and student organizations is sent to national student organizations around the world.

PROPOSALS OF THE VIRGINIA COLLEGE COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

We, the college students of Virginia who are concerned with dynamic growth of human understanding, feel an urgent need for a statewide college organization to act as encouragement to individual students across the state who are similarly inclined, but who need some support in the founding of their own college chapters. It is, with the consideration of the above reason, that we represent this proposal.

I. The purpose of the organization:

To provide an opportunity for understanding among all people who believe in adherence to the Constitution of the United States, regardless of race, creed, or socio-economic level. To promote a greater spirit of brotherhood among Virginia college students through social, intellectual, economic, and cultural dynamics. To attain through fact-finding, negotiation, communication, education, and action projects, equal opportunity for all people in Virginia.

II. The Structure:

State Office
- State Coordinator
- Field Consultant

Executive Board:
- Composed of one representative from each college with one vote with reference to policy making.

District Board:
- Composed of college chapters within a certain geographical area, coordinated and established with and by the Executive Board and State Coordinator.

Local Chapter Board:
- Each college that requests affiliation with the State Organization may have its own chapter, with officers elected by that chapter's membership.

III. The Program of VCCHR:

A. Meetings:
A minimum of two state-wide meetings held each year, with meetings of district and local chapters held at the discretion of the chapters. A minimum of two meetings per month held by local chapters is urged.

B. Suggested action projects:
1. Establishment of VCCHR chapters on all 44 campuses in Va.
2. Tutorial programs, voter registration programs, etc.
3. Research of human relations conditions and documentation of research projects in the following areas:
   - (a) housing
   - (b) transportation
   - (c) health
   - (d) employment
   - (e) education
   - (f) attitude of commercial, agents, business, industry, and Gov't. officials.
   - (g) attitudes of other community organizations and other institutions.
4. Stimulation of the community based on the above research.
5. Cooperative programs with local senior chapters, establishment or guidance of local high school chapters, as well as establishment of rapport between college and community.
6. Publication of a state newsletter reporting action in the field of human relations.
7. All other actions fostering better human relations which do not include demonstrations, boycotts, and/or picketing.

New Wave of Anti-Vietnam Protests Involves Thousands Across Country

By EDWARD B. FISKE

The most striking aspect of the current wave of protest by clergymen against American policy in Vietnam is that it bears little or no relation to traditional pacifist movements —religious or otherwise. Traditional pacifism, characterized by opposition to war of any kind, has existed as a small but steady undercurrent among the American clergy throughout most of the 20th century and continues today through organizations such as the Fellowship of Reconciliation and the Catholic Worker movement.

News Analysis

Reaction to the war in Vietnam, however, has now involved thousands of clergymen throughout the country. The National Emergency Committee of Clergy Concerned About Vietnam, for instance, which was organized a month ago to remonstrate against the resumption of bombing in North Vietnam, now has approximately 145 local chapters. It announced yesterday that as a result of the decision to renew bombing it would become a permanent organization.

Radical Rethinking

Moreover, the new antiwar demonstrators lack the doctrinal purity of the total antiwar position held by the pacifists and make efforts to avoid being identified with them. Most, for instance, would be willing to bear arms against another Hitler.

The most important immediate cause of the current wave of protests has been the civil rights movement. In the period following the Freedom Rides of 1961 large numbers of churchmen got their first taste of leadership in a major social movement.

Their success, which surprised many prompted radical rethinking of their role as a clergymen and led to the present mood of "stand up and be counted." As one leader of the Clergy Concerned group said recently:

"We're tired of acting like a Greek chorus that stands at the side watching a tragedy take place and merely offers occasional comments."

Accompanying these higher expectations for religion is a new understanding of its relations to a government concerned with the Great Society.

"Church-state relations in the United States have never meant that churchmen should separate their Christian ethics from political action," said the Rev. John C. Bennett, president of Union Theological Seminary. "As independent bodies, the churches should bring pressure to bear on the state; indeed, that this is possible is a mark of their separation."

The new wave of protests by clergymen also has roots in a judgment of the changing conditions of war. As clergymen, the protesters feel an obligation to provide leadership on ethical and moral questions, including the morality of war and the use of American power.

Unlike traditional pacifists, almost all the new anti-war spokesmen would probably have fought against the Nazis in World War II and even against the Communists in Korea. They feel, however, that the American position in Vietnam is ambiguous, that its mandate is slim if not downright immoral and that in a nuclear age wars of this kind are out of date as solutions to national disputes.

The churchmen thus talk of "selective conscientious objection," a concept that would allow an individual to qualify as a conscientious objector if he feels that a particular war, but not necessarily all war, is wrong. They acknowledge the difficulty, however, not only of defining what kind of aggressor, short of another Hitler, would make war moral, but also of writing such a subjective standard into law, especially if it were to apply to men already in the armed forces.

A 'Moral Dilemma'

The statements of the new demonstrators reveal little of the self-assurance that derives from a flat objection to all wars. Rather, they speak of the President's "moral dilemma" and the "ambiguities" of any solution in Vietnam.

Finally, there is in the current clergy protests an element of good old-fashioned institutional conservatism. Not only do many church leaders feel that war is an outdated policy with which to be allied, but also that in tomorrow's complex technological society influence will come not merely from preaching on the Sabbath but through involvement across the board in the affairs of men.

It is significant, therefore, that much of the clergy's antiwar feeling today comes not from a radical left within the churches but from the religious "establishment" itself.

The most important single critique of the American Vietnam policy by churchmen, for instance, came in a December statement of the General Board of the National Council of Churches. Although the council does not reflect the views of all of its constituent churches, it nevertheless remains the country's most conspicuous and easily mobilized Protestant institution. The national Jewish religious organizations have also taken similar positions.

The main exception to the general trend, of course, is the American hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church, which has largely been silent or, in the case of several leaders such as Cardinal Spellman of New York, supported the war effort. Even here, however, the general position contrasts sharply with the peace efforts of Pope Paul.

In the context of these changes of the sixties, what can be seen in the current clergy protests is not so much the emergence of a "new left" within the churches as the stirrings of what may become the "new center" of the seventies.

Catholic Priest Organizing a Union for Priests

By PETER BART

Special to The New York Times

SANTA MONICA, Calif., Feb. 22—A 31-year-old Roman Catholic priest formally initiated today an organizing drive aimed at unionizing the nation's 58,000 priests.

The organizer, Rev. William H. Dubay, said his new union, the American Federation of Priests, would spearhead what he termed "the struggle for professional freedom" within the Catholic priesthood.

The present faculty strike at St. John's University in Brooklyn is just one of many portents, he said, that indicate the need for such a union. The union, he acknowledged, probably would be the first ever established to represent "employes" of a religious denomination.

Father DuBay, the son of a Long Beach sign painter, has been transferred twice in the last year for his attacks on the church hierarchy. At present he is chaplain for St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica.

Wrote to the Pope

Late last year, after the Watts riots, Father DuBay announced that he had written Pope Paul VI urging the ouster of James Francis Cardinal McIntyre as Archbishop of Los Angeles for his "failure to exercise leadership in the racial crisis." The Pope did not respond to the letter.

A slender, businesslike young man, Father DuBay met today with groups of colleagues from Los Angeles and from the Fresno-Monterrey parish in California and announced cheerfully: "We already have the embryo of two locals."

Within the next two weeks, he said, the union will set up a national chapter and start a monthly magazine to help raise funds. Eventually the union will apply for a charter in the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, he said.

Father DuBay said his union would bargain for the establishment of grievance machinery within the church, a tenure policy to guarantee a hearing before a priest can be suspended an end to "arbitrary and oppressive" transfers by chancery officials, a uniform leave policy, freedom of residence and the establishment of a "professional salary" for priests that would eliminate their "dependence on the wealthy."

Most priests who do not take vows of poverty receive limited salaries ranging from less than $100 a month to $125 to $150 a month. They also get food and lodging.

Father DuBay acknowledged that there was a good chance that the church hierarchy would suspend or even excommunicate him for his organizing effort. If such action takes place, Father DuBay said, he will seek protection under the Federal and state laws granting employes the right to organize themselves into a union.

Officials Unavailable

Because of the Washington's Birthday holiday, chancery officials were unavailable for comment.

Father DuBay is a scholarly, articulate young man who speaks with deep conviction but laces his conversation with colloquial humor. Telephoning one priest to invite him to an organizing meeting, he said:

"I'm having a bunch of guys over to my apartment to discuss the union. No, there won't be any finks here—neither rat finks nor mouse finks."

Associated Press

The Rev. William H. DuBay

Father DuBay insists that his union "does not want to unseat the church hierarchy just as the U. A. W. does not seek to dissolve the management of General Motors."

His aim, he says, is to fight for priests' freedom and "primacy of conscience." He notes:

"The business concerns of the church administrators have all but stifled the effectiveness of priests and have created widespread dissatisfaction among priests over their inability to realize their professional aspirations. Pious submission in the face of outdated paternalism makes the priest irresponsible to the needs of his occupation and places him as a child among men."

Father DuBay said the granting of a "professional" salary to priests would eliminate "the buying and selling of religious services." The union, he said, would also seek to free priests from such chores as "money-counting and fund-raising."

The young priest cheerfully concedes that "lots of priests are afraid of me, they think I'm a nut." Yet he believes that many priests will rush to his cause once they know of the union's objectives.

The key struggle, he said, is to attain "a balance of administrative authority and individual freedom within the church." "There must be discipline and obedience but there also must be freedom to question doctrine," he declared.

Father DuBay says that, despite his battles with the Catholic hierarchy, he feels he has become more spiritually devoted to the church, not less so.

"My ethic holds that human involvement not devotion to cult, is the basis of Christianity" he says.

Protest at Duquesne

Special to The New York Times

PITTSBURGH, Feb. 22 — Seven faculty members of the Duquesne University psychology department and about 50 graduate students demonstrated today to support their position in a dispute involving the philosophy department.

The marchers, who included Dr. Alice Wagstaff, chairman of the psychology department, erudite than are generally seen on picket lines. One of them, reading "Save Contemporary Philosophy," explained what the dispute is about.

At Duquesne, which is a Roman Catholic college, the philosophy and psychology departments are closely related. The carried signs considerably more demonstrators fear that Duquesne will downgrade courses in contemporary philosophies, which are called phenomenological existentialism.

Students are seeking the resignation of Dr. John J. Pauson as philosophy department chairman, a position to which he was recently elected by the philosophy faculty.

Richard Weiss, a graduate student in psychology, said that six professors teaching existentialism had threatened to quit unless Dr. Pauson resigned as chairman. Dr. Pauson has insisted that he does not plan to downgrade the courses, which attract graduate students from many countries.

End of Retreats Asked

MILWAUKEE, Feb. 22 (UPI)—A student committee said today it had asked Marquette Univesity to abolish compulsory retreats, contending the Roman Catholic religious exercises were "self-defeating and disfunctional to the attainment of moral excellence."

Marquette, the nation's largest Jesuit university, has had a long-established mandatory retreat policy, requiring full-time Catholic students to make an annual retreat by Easter Sunday. If the retreat is not made, undergraduates cannot re-register for a new semester and graduating seniors are not given diplomas.

The Student Committee for Moral Excellence said it had obtained more than 1,900 signatures on a petition that seeks the en dof mandatory retreats. The committee said it was seeking an appointment with the Rev. Richard Sherburne, dean of students, and the Rev. John Naus, director of student welfare, to present the petition and discuss the matter.

Georgia Presbyterian Synod And Orphanage Clash on Bias

By MARGARET HURST
Constitution Church Editor

There's a quiet controversy brewing between the Presbyterian Synod of Georgia and one of its children — the Thornwell Orphanage in Clinton, S.C.

It began almost a year ago when the Georgia Synod asked the Thornwell trustees to take "immediate steps" to amend their charter so Thornwell could provide care for needy children 'regardless of the circumstances of their birth."

The action resulted from the orphanage's age-old policy of excluding Negroes and illegitimate children.

Since April, the trustees have done nothing about the synod's request except, according to one member, "to continue our present policy in accordance with the charter."

SCHOOL REQUEST

The Synod also asked that the children at Thornwell be sent to public schools. There are 315 children at Thornwell, which has the capacity to serve 375 children.

(Thornwell is under the authority of the Synods of Georgia, South Carolina and Florida. Each Synod elects its own trustees to a board which runs the orphanage. The orphanage receives approximately 45 per cent of its revenue from the synods and receives more than 55 per cent from outside sources.)

The Florida Synod reportedly supports Georgia in its efforts to remove the racial and legitimacy admission barriers, but South Carolina has remained vitually silent on the issues.

Recently, a few Presbyterian ministers in Atlanta have been trying to figure out what the Georgia Synod could do at its next meeting in May to force the issue.

And while they've been hard at work . . . so has the Rev. Malcolm A. MacDonald, president of Thornwell for 21 years.

In the January issue of the Thornwell Life, the Rev. Mr. MacDonald wrote an editorial making it clear that he is very much opposed to the Georgia Synod's ideas about removing restrictive barriers at the orphanage.

After pointing out that the three synods furnish something less than 45 per cent of the orphanage's funds, the Rev. Mr. MacDonald adds:

"I have scores of letters from affluent supporters of Thornwell through the years, and without exception, they all have indicated the solemn truth that if Thornwell becomes integrated, they will take our institution out of their budgets and out of their wills and also will stop immediately any contribution to our program."

He calls on the synod of Georgia to make suggestions and implement a financial plan to provide for the funds that will "automatically stop" if the orphanage changes its policy.

"Another matter that is passing strange to me is that we have had a waiting list each year requesting admission to Thornwell and . . . lack of space and lack of funds has made it impossible to admit all the children in our jurisdiction or our responsible area requesting admission.

"Now, I pose the question—How would it be possible for us to manage to handle a great influx of additional children in the brackets suggested?" the editorial asks.

The Rev. Mr. MacDonald writes that another problem involved in "the mixing of races" would be love, courtship and marriage which have "no Biblical support."

Further, the Rev. Mr. MacDonald, says "Now there was not more than 69 people in the Synod of Georgia (of course, I realize they were representatives of the Synod in official session) that voted for Thornwell to receive Negro children and illegitimate children. . . ."

There are 332 ministers in the Synod of Georgia, 2,450 elders, 2,849 deacons and 72,000 church members, he added.

"My point is this," he says, "Is it morally right for 69 peopl to have the privilge of changing the policies of a 90-year-old home . . .". The Rev. Mr. MacDonald concluded by saying that "Most of the people in the Synod of Georgia are totally unfamiliar with the situation."

Needless to say, the editorial was like salt in an open wound to some of Georgia's Presbyterian ministers.

REAL PROBLEM

Now they are faced with a real problem. The Georgia trustees have made it apparant, according to one of their spokesmen, that they do not want to change the orphanage's present policies and consequently are doing nothing to encourage the entire Board of Trustees to augment the changes proposed by the Georgia Synod. This attitude leaves the Georgia Synod virtually paralyzed when it comes to bringing about the suggested changes.

What course can the Synod now take? Will it be necessary to wait until the terms of the present trustees expire before a remedy can be found, or is it possible for the Synod to override the trustees and get their policies put into effect?

One of the big questions at the next Synod meeting, to be held May 31 in Clinton, S.C., will be to discuss what power Synod really has over its institutions which are run by trustees.

The chairman of the Synod's Permanent Committee on Homes and Educational Institutions, Dr. Charles R. McCain of LaGrange, said he expects his committee to ask the Synod at the May meeting to clarify where the control really lies.

AN 'OBITUARY' FOR GOD

The following, written by Anthony Towne, is a satirical comment on the 'God Is Dead' movement. This shortened version of an "obituary," written in the style of The New York Times, was excerpted from a longer article that appeared in Motive, a Methodist student publication (Box 871), Nashville, Tenn.

Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 9—God, creator of the universe, principal deity of the world's Jews, ultimate reality of Christians, and most eminent of all divinities, died late yesterday during major surgery undertaken to correct a massive diminishing influence. His exact age is not known, but close friends estimate that it greatly exceeded that of all other extant beings.

The cause of death could not be immediately determined, but the deity's surgeon, Thomas J. J. Altizer, 38, of Emory University in Atlanta, indicated possible cardiac insufficiency. Assisting Dr. Altizer in the unsuccessful surgery were Dr. Paul van Buren of Temple University, Philadelphia; Dr. William Hamilton of Colgate-Rochester, Rochester, N. Y., and Dr. Gabriel Vahanian of Syracuse University, Syracuse, N. Y.

Word of the death, long rumored, was officially disclosed to reporters at five minutes before midnight after a full day of mounting anxiety and the comings and goings of ecclesiastical dignitaries.

In Johnson City, Tex., President Johnson was described by aides as "profoundly upset." He at once directed that all flags should be at half-staff until after the funeral. The First Lady and the two Presidential daughters, Luci and Lynda, were understood to have wept openly. Both houses of Congress met in Washington at noon today and promptly adjourned after passing a joint resolution expressing "grief and great respect for the departed spiritual leader." Senator Wayne Morse, Democrat of Oregon, objected on the grounds that the resolution violated the principle of separation of church and state, but he was overruled by Vice President Hubert Humphrey, who remarked that "this is not a time for partisan politics."

Plans for the deity's funeral are incomplete. Reliable sources suggested that extensive negotiations may be necessary in order to select a church for the services and an appropriate liturgy. Dr. Wilhelm Pauck, theologian of Union Seminary in New York City, proposed this morning that it would be "fitting and seemly" to inter the remains in the ultimatc ground of all being. Funerals for divinities, common in ancient times, have been exceedingly rare in recent centuries.

Reaction from the world's great and from the man in the street was uniformly incredulous. "At least he's out of his misery," commented one housewife in an Elmira, N. Y. supermarket. "I can't believe it," said the Right Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of New York. In Paris, President de Gaulle in a 30-second appearance on national television, proclaimed "God is dead! Long live the republic! Long live France!" News of the death was included in a one-sentence statement, without comment, on the 3d page of Izvestia, official organ of the Soviet Government. The passing of God has not been disclosed to the 800 million Chinese who live behind the bamboo curtain.

Public reaction in this country was perhaps summed up by an elderly retired streetcar conductor in Passaic, N. J., who said: "I never met him, of course. Never even saw him. But from what I heard I guess he was a real nice fellow. Tops." From Independence, Mo., former President Harry S. Truman, who received the news in his Kansas City barbershop, said: "I'm always sorry to hear somebody is dead. It's a damn shame." In Gettysburg, Pa., former President Dwight D. Eisenhower released through a military aide the following statement: "Mrs. Eisenhower joins me in heartfelt sympathy to the family and many friends of the late God. He was, I always felt, a force for moral good in the universe. Those of us who were privileged to know him admired the probity of his character, the breadth of his compassion, the depth of his intellect. Generous almost to a fault, his many acts of kindness to America will never be forgotten. It is a very great loss indeed. He will be missed."

From Basel, Switzerland, came word that Dr. Karl Barth, venerable Protestant theologian, informed of the death of God, declared: "I don't know who died in Atlanta, but whoever he was he's an impostor."

Dr. Altizer, God's surgeon, in an exclusive interview with The Times, stated this morning that the death was "not unexpected." "He had been ailing for some time," Dr. Altizer said, "and lived much longer than most of us thought possible." He noted that the death of God, had, in fact, been prematurely announced in the last century by the famed German surgeon, Nietzsche. Nietzsche, who was insane the last 10 years of his life, may have confused "certain symptoms of morbidity in the aged patient with actual death, a mistake any busy surgeon will occasionally make." Dr. Altizer suggested, "God was an excellent patient, compliant, cheerful, alert. Every comfort modern science could provide was made available to him. He did not suffer —he just, as it were, slipped out of our grasp."

Protestants and 'Denominationalism'

By JOHN COGLEY

A Roman Catholic editor, Daniel Callahan of the Commonweal, recently suggested that the time might have come for a latter-day Martin Luther to nail the charter for a new Reformation on a church door—this time on a Protestant church door.

Something like that has now taken place. The Rev. Stephen C. Rose, a young Chicago clergyman, editor of Renewal Magazine, has published a document called "The Grass Roots Church—a Manifesto for a Renewal Movement."

Mr. Rose, striking a prophetic note, attacks what some have long regarded as the strongest point in Protestantism, and others like himself now look upon as a glaring weakness: denominationalism. Denominationalism, whatever virtue the division of the church into Presbyterians, Lutherans, Congregationalists, etc., might have served in the past, is now simply obsolete, Mr. Rose says.

Theological differences that may have meant a great deal to the followers of the various traditions in past generations are now regarded as irrelevant to the central mission of the church.

Moreover, classic divisions of the Church of the Reform force the individual to pay lip service to a set of theological presuppositions he may actually be indifferent to, while excessive denominational loyalty deprives him of the opportunity to benefit from the richness of Protestant theological and liturgical variety.

Expensive Luxury

According to Mr. Rose, denominationalism is a luxury Protestant Christianity cannot afford at a time when "the church is being killed by her own failure to take the shape the world needs."

Denominationalism, he holds, inevitably means topheavy bureaucracy and all the misdirected effort that goes into corporate self-preservation. Most of all, it is responsible for the remoteness of church leaders from the realities facing the church today.

For all their talk of ecumenism, national bodies of churches, even the World Council of Churches, Mr. Rose believes, are actually encouraging denominationalism rather than diminishing it. He therefore advocates "the formation of a pan-denominational ecumenical organization of all persons, clergy and lay," who wish to fight for the structure he has proposed.

Mr. Rose sees three basic tasks for the contemporary church: the first he calls Chaplaincy. By Chaplaincy he means "the proclamation of the biblical insight into the human situation." The second he describes as Teaching. By Teaching he means "the integration of this biblical insight with the realities of the contemporary world." The third he describes as Abandonment. By abandonment he means the self-giving of the church to the world.

The ministry, then, should be specialized to fit this three-fold task. Some parts can be carried out by laymen. Only Chaplaincy refers to the "priestly, liturgical, pastoral ministry." It is this ministry that the seminaries are dedicated to preparing young men to undertake. But because all three tasks actually fall upon the contemporary parish minister, "the structure of today's church leaves the clergyman with virtually no time to realize his essential ministry."

Lack of Funds

"Today," Mr. Rose charges, the church "is so caught up in institutional maintenance that it cannot afford the ministries of Teaching and Chaplaincy." Denominational emphases require so much financial support that "virtually no funds exist to support specialized ministries of any sort."

The Chicago cleric suggests what he calls "cooperative ministries." According to this plan, a local church might conduct services throughout the week designed to offer its members the widest choice of worship patterns, "from the Episcopal liturgy to the silent meetings of the Quakers." Every neighborhood would have a full-time facility for the religious training of adult laymen.

The theological seminaries for their part would widen their perspectives. Some of their students would be trained to preach, some to teach, some to serve as personal counselors. Laymen would be invited to enter as seminary students in order to prepare themselves for their particular role in the church and in the world.

Mr. Rose calls for the decentralization of approximately 90 per cent of the current national program now being carried out by individual denominations.

The young minister feels that the chief work of denominations in the future should be in providing experimentation, supporting research and development, and in serving the needs of the church—but a reformed church that will be basically ecumenical. He is not trying to eliminate particular theologies, he insists, but rather to see that they are engaged in regular dialogue, at the parish level. Mr. Rose feels strongly that such dialogue is preferable to the "ecumenical theology" he holds is now being forced upon local churches from the "upper echelons of Protestantism."

A New York ecumenical leader and denominational official, the Rev. Truman B. Douglass, Executive Vice President of the United Church Board for Homeland Ministries, told The New York Times that though the Rose Manifesto is "provocative," it is nonetheless naive in its confidence that renewal and reformation will take place if the archimedian point of the church is shifted from national denominational offices to local congregations.

"The plain fact," Dr. Douglass stated, "is that the local and regional bodies as they now exist are much less ecumenical in spirit and program than are the national bodies." He cites the national board for which he, himself, works. From two-thirds to three-fourths of its work, Dr. Douglass points out, is done on a cooperative basis with other ecclesiastical bodies. "This is not true of any local or regional church organization that I know," he adds.

Power Centers

Mr. Rose is correct in sensing that the power centers of American society are located in major urban centers and that Christianity in its present division is powerless to exercise any effective influence upon these centers. However, as the Rose Manifesto actually sounds to Dr. Douglass, "it seems to repeat the position of the John Birchites and states rights advocates who insist that all our evils are the result of locating too much influence at the national level. This simple trust in localism is just not supported by the observable facts. Rather, they appear to support the thesis that the more 'local' a church organization is, the more difficulty it has in seeing beyond the end of its ecclesiastical nose."

For his part, Stephen C. Rose is not willing to give up hope. "Let our motto for the moment be," his Manifesto concludes, "the ecumenical movement must be local; the Body of Christ must incorporate specifically defined functions; and the renewed church must be as faithful to the biblical reality that brings it into being as to the world that calls it into service.'"

Mr. Rose urges his fellow churchmen above all to substitute concrete, positive proposals for what he calls the "carping and back-biting" characteristic of the present day "outmoded" denominational church structure.

2 Savannah Churches Quit U.S. Presbyterians

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP) — Congregations of two Savannah churches voted Sunday to withdraw from the Presbyterian Church in the U.S., and their ministers said they were also renouncing the jurisdiction of the church.

Both churches said in similar resolutions that the Presbyterian Church in the U.S. has violated its conscience as originally adopted in 1861 by ordaining women as preachers and ruling elders, by making pronouncements on civil, economic, social and political matters contrary to the Confession of Faith and by giving support to the removal of Bible reading and prayers in public schools.

"The big difference is theology . . . the new morality of Karl Barth and another big issue is the National Council of Churches," said the Rev. Todd Allen, pastor of the Eastern Heights Presbyterian Church. "We believe the council is causing the church to go in a direction of endorsing civil disobedience."

He and the Rev. Clifford Brewton, pastor of Hull Memorial Presbyterian Church, said the question of civil disobedience was not a segregation issue. "The denomination in the spring of 1964 published in the Quarterly for Older Youth a lesson on civil disobedience and it maintained that civil disobedience was something that came from Jesus and the Sermon on the Mount." the Rev. Mr. Brewton said.

Members of Hall Memorial voted in favor of withdrawing 184-22 while the congregation of Eastern Heights voted to leave the denomination 122-0.

"Abraham and Lot had disagreements so rather than stay together and have a power struggle they parted company peacefully, "said the Rev. Mr. Allen. He said his church cut off Benevolence funds in 1964 "when it became apparent that the church was going to support the National Council of Churches."

The Rev. Mr. Brewton pointed out that on April 17, 1521, Martin Luther sounded the keynote of the Reformation by refusing to retract his position on the Scriptures at the Diet of Worms. Brewton said he used this in his sermon and quoted Luther as saying, "I cannot and will not retract for it is unsafe for a Christian to speak against his conscience."

Liberal-Conservative Split Is Stirring Presbyterians

MONTREAT, N.C., April 21—The Southern Presbyterian Church began its annual meeting in the mountains here today amid growing concern over unrest and instability in the influential denomination.

In the last year, the church, hich has a 99 per cent white membership, has seen increasing constriction in its ranks, an unusual attempt at withdrawal by two congregations in Savannah, Ga., at least six other splits within congregations, the withholding of donations by individual churches and disobedience of an integration order by a number of church units.

Samuel J. Patterson Jr., the outgoing moderator, delivered an address to the 106th General Assembly of the church. He said his year in office had convinced him that "the church is in an extremely healthy condition" because it was at least openly discussing controversial issues.

But Mr. Patterson conceded that other evidence had indicated that "all is not so well in our Church."

The source of tension in the 946,000-member denomination is the continuing battle between liberals, who have prevailed at recent annual gatherings, and conservatives, who have spent the last year organizing their ranks after a series of defeats.

Dispute's Focus Shifts

Most often, the focus of the battle between the two camps has been civil rights, but this year there is evidence that the issues have been broadened to encompass a fundamental questioning of the nature of the church and its place in the modern world.

In the last year, the church, hich has a 99 per cent white membership, has seen increasing constriction in its ranks, an unusual attempt at withdrawal by two congregations in Savannah, Ga., at least six other splits within congregations, the withholding of donations by individual churches and disobedience of an integration order by a number of church units.

Samuel J. Patterson Jr., the outgoing moderator, delivered an address to the 106th General Assembly of the church. He said his year in office had convinced him that "the church is in an extremely healthy condition" because it was at least openly discussing controversial issues.

But Mr. Patterson conceded that other evidence had indicated that "all is not so well in our Church."

The source of tension in the 946,000-member denomination is the continuing battle between liberals, who have prevailed at recent annual gatherings, and conservatives, who have spent the last year organizing their ranks after a series of defeats.

Dispute's Focus Shifts

Most often, the focus of the battle between the two camps has been civil rights, but this year there is evidence that the issues have been broadened to encompass a fundamental questioning of the nature of the church and its place in the modern world.

One of the pivots of discussion during the General Assembly's six-day meeting at its secluded conference center here will be a report on what one official calls "creeping congregationalism." This refers to a tendency among some congregations to act autonomously rather than to submit to the discipline of higher courts like the General Assembly.

A point made in another report also lies in the background of the discusions. This refers to an increasing subtlety used by segregationists to resist open worship in their churches.

The report notes that one Southern Presbyterian church that used to reject Negroes for membership on the straightforward ground that they were Negroes now still rejects them, but on the revised ground that all black men seeking to join white institutions are "sociological demonstrators."

Opposing Forces

Among the forces behind the two camps at the meeting here are two unofficial groups—the Fellowship of Concern and the Concerned Presbyterians.

The Fellowship, formed in late 1963, is the liberal group. It is considered largely responsible for creating the climate that induced moderates to come over to the liberal side in the last few annual meetings.

The Concerned Presbyterians, founded in late 1964, is the conservative organization. The group, and others of like mind, expected to make gains at the 1965 meeting but generally found themselves outnumbered by about three to one on key votes.

A resolution to invite the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. to address a church meeting, for example, was upheld by a 311-to-120 vote.

In the last year, however, the conservative group, which has had little trouble raising money, employed a full-time organizer to visit Southern Presbyterian churches in search of members. The effects of this organizer's efforts will be seen in the debates at the sessions here.

The Southern Presbyterian Church, whose formal name is Presbyterian Church in the U.S., was formed in 1861 after a split with northern bodies over the Civil War. It has about 6,000 Negro members.

MONTREAT, N.C., April 22 —In 1924, a young seminary student from a rural Mississippi background attended an integrated Student Volunteer Movement meeting in Indianapolis. The event changed Frank Hill Caldwell's life, and is likely to prove of equal significance to the Southern Presbyterian Church. He will lead the 946,000-member church, 99 per cent of whose congregants are white, in the coming year. "I grew up, I am ashamed to say, thinking the Negro was inferior and that segregation was the only way of life," the 64-year-old minister says of his early years. "I was a grown adult and race relations just didn't seem to me to be an issue."

Then came the Indianapolis conference. The students were addressed by some of the world's leading Christian scholars and preachers, among them a Negro missionary, the son of an African chieftan.

"That fellow was black, dead black, so I couldn't use the excuse that he had some white blood in him," Dr. Caldwell recalls. "And I'll tell you this, no matter what yardstick you wanted to use —classical references, Biblical scholarship, speaking ability, or just plain intelligence — that man ran rings around the others. They couldn't even come close to him."

The experience, the minister says, "clear knocked the props out from under me—I felt compelled by Christian conscience to move in another direction."

35 Years in Ministry

Dr. Caldwell's direction has taken him through a 35-year career as professor of homiletics (preaching) and later president of the Louisville (Ky.) Presbyterian Seminary, an institution that over the years has fed a steady stream of ecumenically minded, generally liberal ministers into the rigidly orthodox Southern church. In 1926

In 1964 he was named executive director of the influential Presbyterian Foundation, which is responsible for the long-range financing of the church's agencies and institutions.

Last night, in the vast, rock-walled auditorium at the denomination's mountain retreat here, the 106th General Assembly elected Dr. Caldwell moderator by a vote of 307 to 94 for his nearest competitor. As such he will be the church's titular leader.

In recent years, the church has had several moderators who ranged from moderate to liberal on social questions and on the question of union with other denominations. They generally contented themselves with operating privately to ease unrest in the troubled church. However, Dr. Caldwell, while also committed to harmony and reconciliation, is expected to be a leader of a different kind.

Social Issues Stressed

At a news conference today, the lean, scholarly looking minister was firm and forthright in his answers, frequently consulting a worn notebook to clarify his thoughts.

Between puffs on his meerschaum pipe, he said he favored re-examination of the nature of the church to introduce an orientation for social issues, that he supported unity with other Presbyterians and Reformed denominations, and that he would encourage efforts to ameliorate the "provincialism and regionalism" of the Southern church. He also was critical of the denomination's slowness in integrating its congregations.

Dr. Caldwell said his guide was a passage from John, iii, 3: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son."

"You've got to notice," he declared, "that the word is 'world' and not 'church.'"

Dropped From eWst Point

Frank Hill Caldwell was born in Corinth, Miss., on Jan. 26, 1902. He was nominated to the United States Military Academy but was asked to leave after a year because of failures in mathematics. He says with a twinkle that Douglas MacArthur, who was then the superintendent, "didn't appreciate my creative treatment of mathematics problems because the answers

Presbyterians Approve Some Civil Disobedience

MONTREAT, N.C. (AP)—Civil disobedience as a last resort was approved Monday night by the 106th General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, after the highest court of the Southern denomination warned against racial discrimination within its churches.

The assembly approved by voice vote a committee report which affirmed churches' belief in the rule of law. But the report said that in circumstances where some persons are unable to obtain their rights through the law, then civil disobedience may be countenanced.

"This measure can be justified only under most pressing necessity," the assembly statement said. "But when such a situation prevails the church may properly support those using this means to obtain for themselves those inalienable rights with which all men are endowed by their creator."

Supporters of the proposal emphasized the affirmation of lawful conduct and said a Christian might turn to civil disobedience only "as a measure of last resort to be employed only in circumstances of otherwise irremediable need."

In other action, the assembly, representing 950,000 members in Southern and Southwestern states:

—Went on record opposing capital punishment.

—Approved a Viet Nam policy statement calling on the United States to continue its efforts for peace.

—Urged its congregations to support denominational programs in the wake of funds withdrawals by some churches and presbyteries.

Pastoral Committee Will Go to Mississippi to Check on Resistance to Integration

By PAUL L. MONTGOMERY

MONTREAT, N.C., April 26—The General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church voted today to join unity conversations with seven other Protestant denominations, including one from which it split in the Civil War.

This decision by the 106th annual gathering of the regional church, which is 99 per cent white, to participate beginning next week in the Consultation on Church Union astounded many.

The denomination has taken progressive steps in recent years but it was considered far from discussing union with such a wide range of churches.

The substantial voice vote on the measure, coupled with another action today to send a pastoral committee to Mississippi to look into recalcitrance, resistance to integration and fundamentalism in its churches there, was though to be a defeat from which the denomination's extreme conservatives would not recover.

The Consultation on Church Union was formed under a proposal made in 1961 by the Rev. Dr. Eugene Carson Blake of the United Presbyterian Church and seconded by Bishop James A. Pike of the Episcopal Church. Its ultimate purpose is to establish a united Protestant church.

Annual Meetings

The Consultation has met annually since 1962. At its meeting in Dallas from May 2 to May 5 this year it will consider an outline of a plan of union.

The members of the group include the United Presbyterian Church, separated from the Southern church in 1861; the Episcopal, Evangelical United Brethren and Methodist Churches, the United Church of Christ, the Disciples of Christ and the African Methodist Epis-

The Consultation on Church Union was formed under a proposal made in 1961 by the Rev. Dr. Eugene Carson Blake of the United Presbyterian Church and seconded by Bishop James A. Pike of the Episcopal Church. Its ultimate purpose is to establish a united Protestant church.

Annual Meetings

The Consultation has met annually since 1962. At its meeting in Dallas from May 2 to May 5 this year it will consider an outline of a plan of union.

The members of the group include the United Presbyterian Church, separated from the Southern church in 1861; the Episcopal, Evangelical United Brethren and Methodist Churches, the United Church of Christ, the Disciples of Christ and the African Methodist Episcopal Church, a Negro denomination. Their total membership is 23 million.

The actions of the Assembly today had implications for the South as well as for the church. The 946,000-member denomination includes mostly college graduates from the 16 states where it is active, and has a large number of Southern legislators and professional men in its membership.

The action on Mississippi was the first time in the denomination's 106-year history that the General Assembly—which is the highest court and legislative body of the church—had attempted publicly to bring pressure to bear on its lower units for a specific purpose.

The pastoral committee is to examine the Mississippi churches, to "inquire into the difficulties therein," and to report its views on the "evident disorder" to the General Assembly next year.

The particular points of issue are a successful attempt in 1963 by the Presbytery of Central Mississippi to expel a minister with theological views they considered liberal, the foundation of a conservative Presbyterian seminary in Jackson, Miss., and the continuing refusal of the Mississippi presbyteries to receive the handful of Negro churches within their jurisdictions.

Presbyteries in Alabama and South Carolina have also refused to accept Negro members, but the number of churches left unattached has dropped from 22 to 9 since March 20.

The Presbytery of Central Mississippi, through a spokesman to the Assembly, said its situation "does not warrant" a committee visit, but acknowledged there was unrest and said it would "welcome" the group.

In a statement after the Assembly's action on unity, Dr. Blake, who is the General Secretary-elect of the World Council of Churches, said the addition of the Southern church to the Consultation would be a "great strengthening."

"I hope, despite the shortness of time, that the Presbyterian church's formal name) may be churche's formal name) may be able to produce in Dallas the nine participants necessary for them to take full part in this year's meeting," Dr. Blake said.

The New and Future Clergy

THE ENTRANCE of American clergymen into direct social action has, not surprisingly, produced strong counter-action in some quarters. Galvanized first on the civil rights issue by President Kennedy in 1963 and at Selma in 1965, clergymen of all faiths—and nuns as well—have left their pulpits and parish houses to involve themselves in such issues as civil rights, poverty, and peace. They have in growing numbers been found in picket lines, in protest marches, in the organization of boycotts, and even in jail. Many have expressed a concern over Vietnam that goes far beyond traditional religious pacifism. Others have encouraged strikes by the underpaid and demonstrations by the underprivileged. They have stirred division and dissension in their own churches and communities, embarrassed established business and political interests, related themselves to issues not traditionally or directly related (by most people) to the Gospels, and subjected themselves to indignity and humiliation.

Thus it is not surprising that some of them—not all, not even most, but some of them—have been silenced without explanation, or driven from their pulpits, or forced to cancel speaking engagements, or opposed as outsiders by local clerics, or denied the funds they needed to carry on their churches and church schools. From Albany to Sacramento, from Milwaukee to Mississippi, assorted bishops, businessmen, theologians, and fellow clergymen have told the activists that preachers should stick to preaching.

This issue is not confined to the Catholic Church, as often assumed. The issue may be newer to most Catholics. Their traditional concepts may be more sharply exposed. But clergymen of other faiths have also been warned or forced to cease and desist their social action activities by their superiors, by their financial supporters, by their trustees or by their congregations. "In the past," said Robert McAfee Brown, a leading Protestant observer, "controversial ministers were burned. Now they just get fired." Clergymen of all faiths in Mississippi and Alabama have denounced what they called the "outside intervention" of their Northern colleagues. Protestant ministers in California have bitterly assailed those taking part in a local agricultural strike. And one of the most famous Protestant preachers has chided his fellow pastors for "going too far beyond the Ten Commandments."

I LEAVE to theologians the question of a clergyman's obligations to his superiors. I am interested in his obligations to his country. As one who has been particularly wary of clergymen's mixing improperly in politics and public affairs, I am nevertheless concerned by the excessively narrow limits placed on their participation by some religious authorities.

The United States is not so rich in intellectual and inspirational leadership, or so certain of its course in the world, or so perfect in the treatment of its citizens, that it can afford the suppression of any thoughtful view or voice—and that includes the views and voices of preachers as well as teachers, editors, authors, and others. We cannot afford to listen merely to spokesmen for the state and the status

It is not that any of these moveme[illegible]—civil rights, peace, antipoverty, a[illegible] others—would wholly collapse if clerg[illegible] men were not allowed to take part. B[illegible] they have a special contribution to mak[illegible] Unlike political and business leade[illegible] unlike the often competitive civil rig[illegible] and other organizational leaders, chur[illegible] men are in an ideal position to rem[illegible] above all suspicion of self-interest. [illegible] living up to their tradition and train[illegible] in casting out fear and hate, they [illegible] prevent extremists from taking ov[illegible] these movements. While tragic exce[illegible]tions are obvious, their very prese[illegible] can discourage violence.

Some more tolerant observers h[illegible] declared that social action by a cler[illegible]yman is perfectly permissible so long as he makes it clear that he is acting as a private citizen, not as a churchman. But I am not certain that a clergyman, like a President, is ever a private citizen, wherever he may be and whatever collar he may be wearing. I am not certain that the public could o[illegible] would distinguish between the clergyman's role as prophet and his role a[illegible] private citizen. Nor am I even certai[illegible] that the clergyman could make that distinction. For his very vocation is to pr[illegible]test evil and injustice, to live as he le[illegible]tures, to give active as well as verba[illegible] witness to the Gospel's meaning for mod[illegible]ern problems—not merely with an empty ill-heeded string of "Thou shalt nots" from the Sabbath pulpit, but with dail[illegible] deeds that back up his doctrine.

Acting as a churchman instead of [illegible] private citizen, he may often find hin[illegible]self in conflict with the views of those t[illegible] whom he reports. I have no credentia[illegible] or desire to argue church structure. B[illegible] I question whether the minister of a[illegible] church is simply a hired hand, wh[illegible] the creature of his superiors or par[illegible]ioners, wholly bound to accept their [illegible]tates and doctrines on matters unrela[illegible] to dogma, wholly unable to act in [illegible]cordance with his own conscience [illegible] sense of justice.

To be sure, he should not purpor[illegible] speak for them. He should not deli[illegible]ately pressure or embarrass them. [illegible] surely there is a 2,000-year-old pre[illegible]dent for a preacher's going beyond g[illegible] words to good deeds, and then go[illegible] beyond those good deeds to a di[illegible] challenge of both religious and sec[illegible] authorities, and then going beyond e[illegible] that direct challenge to enduring [illegible] prisonment and violence in order to a[illegible]man's ways.

Most men of the cloth, one critic h[illegible] recently charged, are not competent t[illegible] deal with such issues. But who among u[illegible] is competent to solve the problems of Vietnam or Watts? The stakes are too great to leave war to the generals, or civil rights to the professionals, or poverty to the social workers. And why should moral battles to right old wrongs, in scriptural fashion, be left to the laymen of the church? Clergymen, like all the rest of us, must learn by doing, by involving themselves in the practical problems of men. The Civil Rights Bill of 1964, according to Senator Russell of Georgia, passed because "those damned preachers had got the idea it was a moral issue." Indeed they had—and indeed it was.

Many communities and their clergymen have denounced visiting pastors as "outsiders." But injustice is never local. Compassion cannot be geographic. And ours would be a poorer world if Christ had never left Nazareth, or Paul Tarsus, or Pope Paul the Vatican, or Martin Luther King Atlanta, or the late James Reeb Boston.

There will always, of course, be churches and churchmen who shun the problems of the world, who preach and prefer a religion of pomp and ceremony unrelated to public affairs, who measure their success wholly by the number of "decisions for Christ" that look to another life and another world. Clergymen involved in the California grape-growers' strike were accused by the local ministerial association of not staying within "the spiritual area." Questions of race, said certain other clerics, have nothing to do with questions of religion. And, while it was interesting in Selma a year ago to note which famous clergymen were there, it was equally interesting to note which were not. "There is more danger," Monsignor George Casey of Lexington, Massachusetts, has observed, "of the Church becoming irrelevant than radical."

But these reverend leaders of irrelevance, I am convinced, are not the leaders of the new and future church. More and more clergymen recognize that their ministry belongs most with those who need it most—not with the white middle-class and upper-class establishments, but with the poor, Christ's favorite people, with the peacemakers, with the oppressed. The spirit of renewal in the Catholic Church—and indeed in all churches—has been advanced not merely as a matter of new vestments and new liturgy but of atoning for the church's own guilt on such basic issues as race and poverty and peace.

A clergyman's right to participate in direct social action activities is not only a basic right but a basic responsibility. It should be exercised responsibly, not indiscriminately, imprudently, or impetuously. Rash, unprepared action can undo gains carefully achieved. Positive, constructive actions have a higher value than protests that primarily seek publicity. Clergymen should not let themselves be used as mere symbols or shields. Every possible cause need not be tackled with a burst of defiance and disorder. Public opinion must be won, not alienated.

ABOVE all, the mote in one's own eye should not be ignored. Clergymen should not travel to Selma or Jackson or Birmingham in order to forget about Chicago or New York or Boston. As this issue moves more rapidly from South to North, the pressures on Northern churches will increase—pressures from parishioners who want no Negroes in the neighborhood—pressures from important contributors, and important church leaders, and important politicians.

One other limitation is important. While the church must resist improper state pressures on these matters, so must it refrain from improperly pressuring the state. Any weakening of church-state separation, even for a good cause, would be a mistake. No church or churchman should dictate to, or be dictated by, any government—or be singled out for any special privilege or punishment—or become the tool of any party or administration. Clergymen newly active in what are necessarily political issues must nevertheless refrain from endorsing political candidates or political parties.

But church-state separation does not mean disregarding the moral issues involved in public controversies. Church independence from state control does not mean independence only to support the state's views. Nor can I understand, frankly, why some high clerical authorities who have had no compunctions whatsoever about interfering with other public policy decisions—on education, for example, or birth control—now refuse to let their subordinates work on Vietnam or civil rights.

I hope that they will, upon reconsideration, let these clergymen work. I hope that they will let them speak out—not only for the good of the church, which I do not judge, but for the good of the country. —THEODORE C. SORENSEN.

WALLFLOWER by a mossy wall in the shadow of maple and oak she had stood too long neglected by swain.
We were going to do her over —or so we thought.
We lifted her face and furnace washed out her coal-smoked soul painted sun to her clapboards and after a fashion becoming to ladies dusted her shingles blue-white.

But she spat diamonds to the winds stuck to her zinc hatpin winked at clouds made pacts with tornadoes.

To inform our maudlin sunshine her brown stain bled and soot drifted from her pores.

Darkly from her chimney she sent signals;
her messages came from the hearth.
Conversant in more than one tongue though resisting polyglot she rehearsed us in substitution drills.

At night she ran labs and seminars leading us mim-mem into restoring her original weather-warped front tooth.
We learned from her the language of welcoming.

With a clock in each mouth
she smiled at forests.

NEGRO CHURCHES AND THE AMERICAN BAPTIST CONVENTION

"Negro Churches and the American Baptist Convention" was delivered by Charles J. Sargent, Jr., Minister of the Union Baptist Church, Stamford, Connecticut, on May 11, 1966 in Kansas City, Missouri, at the Annual Luncheon sponsored by The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the American Baptist Convention.

The Negro church is an American institution, indigenous to the soil of the United States of America. It is easy to affirm that its birth and the quest of the transplanted African for freedom are intertwined occurrences. However the facts are complicated. Organized social life among Negroes was destroyed by the institution of slavery. The African clan and family traditions were obviated by the hostile environment of the New World. The plantation system negated the maintenance of structural family life. The fear of the slave owners of insurrection and revolt worked as an effective antidote to any organized religious life. Even efforts toward organized mutual aid among the slaves were negated during this reign of fear. The slave system in the New World effected an almost complete dehumanization of the African—with this dehumanization came the death of the religious myths and clan cults which were native to the African.

In the darkness of this lostness, the Negro church was born. In 1701, almost 100 years after the first slaves were imported, The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts was chartered in England by the Church of England. One of the major purposes set forth in its charter was the christianizing of the African in the Americas. During the Great Awakening, the evangelical zeal of the Methodists and Baptists, led them to proselyte among the slaves. The ministry of these groups was more effective and after the American Revolution, Methodists and Baptists met an enthusiastic response among the slaves. Several factors can be isolated which account for the acceptance of the free churches by the slave populations.

1. The evangelical emotionalism which characterized the Methodists and Baptists in this period was to some extent akin to the now nonexistent tribal religious practices.

2. The lack of education which characterized the Methodist and Baptist preachers in this period gave them a kinship with the poor, the outcasts and the illiterate.

3. The eschatological emphasis which characterized the Methodist and Baptist preachers in this period met a psychological need of the slave populations.

4. The emphasis upon feeling as a sign of conversion which characterized the Methodist and Baptist preachers in this era satisfied a real need of the slaves who were being taught that they had no feelings.

5. The fellowship which characterized the camp meeting revivals in this era gave rise to the possibility of the establishment of social cohesion among the slaves.

Christianity gave rise to an "invisible institution" which can best be identified as the embryonic Negro church. The nature of the Baptist movement with its lack of central organization and lack of emphasis on educational standards was appropriate to the character of this invisible institution. Under the twin hand of oppression (by some masters) and liberality (by others) the invisible institution began to grow and to take on visible form. The first record we have of a Negro Baptist Church occurs in Silver Bluff, Georgia (about 12 miles from Augusta, on the north shore of the Savannah River) on the plantation of John Galphin. Three names have come down to us in relation to the establishment of this church: A Reverend Mr.

David George, A Reverend Mr. George Lisle, and a Brother Palmer. It appears from the letters of David George that Brother Palmer was an itinerant preacher who had conducted both white, Negro and integrated revival meetings along the Savannah River. Although, no actual date of the founding of the Silver Bluff Church is extant, Pelt concludes that the congregation was organized between 1773 and 1775. In 1776, the local white Baptist congregagation in Williamsburg, Virginia organized the First Colored Baptist Church of Williamsburg, which was admitted to full membership in The Dover Baptist Association in 1791. The third Negro Baptist church was The First African Baptist Church of Savannah formed in 1779. In 1780, The Harrison Street Baptist Church of Petersburg, Virginia was organized. The next year saw the founding of The First African Baptist Church of Richmond, Virginia and five years later the First Baptist Church (African) of Lexington, Kentucky came into being. In the north, Negro Baptist churches began to be organized shortly after the turn of the century. 1804 saw the birth of The Joy Street Baptist Church in Boston, 1808 The Abyssinian Baptist Church in New York and 1809 The First African Baptist Church of Philadelphia. It is noteworthy within the context to spend a little time considering the circumstances surrounding the establishment of the Abyssinian Church in New York City; it is an example of the entire process in the north.

In 1807, Negro members of the Gold Street Baptist Church began to express dissatisfaction with the administration and policy of The Gold Street Church. Though they held full membership, they felt that the Gold Street congregation was neglecting their interests and needs. In a petition to the congregation to withdraw and form their own fellowship, they pointed out that they were not being given the opportunity to hold official positions within the congregation. After The Gold Street Church denied the petition, the Negro members invited the Rev. Thomas Paul, then pastor of The Joy Street Church in Boston, to mediate their differences. Paul came to New York and preached in several churches. He won the respect of Baptist laymen in the city and from this position successfully negotiated letters of dismission for four brethren and twelve sisters from Gold Street to organize Abyssinian.

The growth of Negro Baptist churches was phenomenal. As has been said, the Negro Baptist church "multplies by division." By 1880, there were enough Negro Baptist churches to launch a movement toward the establishment of a national organization. At that time, the Foreign Mission Convention of the United States was formed and five years later, it merged with the infant National Baptist Convention. Since that time following the adage of "multiplication by division," three major national organizations have emerged. The National Baptist Convention of America with 12,000 churches and 3 million members, The Progressive National Baptist Convention with 1,500 churches and 1 million members and the parent National Baptist Convention with 26,000 churches and 6 million members. The Negro Baptist Convention now claim almost 40,000 churches and 10 million members. Save for a very small number of recently established missions by both the Southern Baptist Convention and the American Baptist Convention, all of the Negro Baptist churches in the United States and many in Latin America and the west coast of Africa share this common heritage. In recent years, many Negro churches have left the fellowship of Negro conventions, either completely or in part, to join the American Baptist Convention. Among the factors which have contributed to this change are:

1. The impetus created by the present social revolution has motivated them toward the creation of an integrated society within the church.

2. The fellowship established among seminarians in predominantly American Baptist schools has given rise to the desire to continue that interrelationship after the school experience.

3. The use of American Baptist literature in church school and youth study programs has made for a familiarity which breeds conviviality.

4. The internal political aspects of the Negro conventions has caused disillusionment and general dissatisfaction. (It must be noted, however, that the same kind of internal politics can be found in the early history of both the American Baptist Convention and the Southern Baptist Convention.)

5. The opportunities for financial security offered by The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the American Baptist Convention is a practical stimulant to change.

Having sketched in very broad outline the historical situation which gave rise to the Negro Baptist churches, I will now proceed to review the unique nature and function of the Negro Baptist churches. For me, the ten most important characteristics of the Negro Baptist churches are:

1. The Negro church traditionally is a biblically oriented religious institution undergirded by a foundation of crisis existential theology. The crisis of the pursuit of freedom and identification with the mainstream of society has been the watershed of the Negro church. The biblical narratives of the divine interruption of God in the release of men from their enemies has been and is the crux of the theology of the Negro churches. Often, far too often, in his obsession with the divine intervention of God, the Negro church has neglected the responsibilities of God's children. This in part accounts for the so-called one sided eschatological emphasis of much preaching in the Negro church. The "pie in the sky" and "bye and bye" refer to more than theological concerns. They are a protestation against the present state of existence and a veiled symbolic hope that God will intervene in history and change the persecutions of the now. The man who sings while barefooted, "I got shoes, you got shoes, all of God's children got shoes, when I get to heaven going to put on my shoes and walk all over God's heaven" is not talking about a heaven that can be reached only after death. He is expressing the conviction that the same God who delivered Israel from Egypt will presently deliver him from the tyranny of oppression. He hopes for a heaven on the same plantation where he has known his hell. He cannot express his aspirations for fear of reprisal but in the symbolic narratives of the Scripture, he acknowledges his concern for his existence and his faith in his deliverance.

2. The Negro church is both a religious institution and a cultural necessity. By tradition, the church has been the center of Negro communal life. Ostracized and expelled from other community organizations, the Negro has found refuge within his church. Here within this fellowship he finds an emphasis on freedom of worship. This is not freedom in a vacuum. This freedom is evidenced in the freedom to express himself even during the act of worship. Here he finds emotional release from the frustrations and hostilities of second-class life. In his church, the Negro feels free. The washer woman can have status as superintendent of the church school. The porter can participate in policy making as a member of the board of deacons. Opportunities for leadership that do not exist in our total society are available within the Negro church. The traditions of American society have forced the Negro church to become an arena of political activity. The politics of the Negro church and conventions is directly related to the immobility of the Negro in community politics. In most instances the Negro does not and usually cannot participate in community democratic processes. Much of the unrest in local congregations can be traced to this same source. Again, the cultural aspect of the Negro church can be seen in its use as a means of maintaining identity. Until the last ten years, the only place where the cultural heritage of the Negro was respected was within the Negro church. The church provided a place of insulation from the hardships of the outside world. It gave rise to a sense of community concern and action. It provided the possibility of recognition and leadership. It gave the young an example of their potential. Even the leaders of the present Civil Rights Movement to a man, trace their background to the influence of the Negro church. In fact of the six major leaders, five of them were either ministerial students or ordained ministers.

3. The Negro church is a reflection of the matriarchal society which is common to Negro family life. Although the leading officers (preachers and deacons) are limited to men, it is the women who dominate the life of the churches. Because the female is the dominant force in family life, she also has the responsibility of maintaining the community which is evident in the church.

4. The Negro church often borders on being a personality cult. The fellowship of the congregation to a great extent owes its existence to the personality of the minister. The minister held a traditional position of leadership in all areas of life. He was the legal counselor, the financial advisor, the political leader and the spiritual advisor. He was the sole interpreter of discipline and order or disorder. In addition, the minister had the responsibility of articulating the needs of the entire Negro community to the larger community. Dictatorial powers have often been vested in the present day minister as an aftermath of this traditional posture. This facet of Negro church life raises a problem which shall receive more attention later. Let it suffice for now to assert that the shortage of prepared pastors, when coupled with the emergence of a Negro Middle Class, poses a threat to the continued existence of the Negro churches.

5. The Negro church is most often self centered in its mission. In spite of a concern for those outside of its walls, the great emphasis is on a ministry to itself. Socio-economic conditions force a life and death struggle for the survival of the institution. In many instances, the budget of a local congregation provides insufficient funds to care for maintenance of the building. Therefore, the pattern has been pennies for missions. In addition to this pattern, the concern for freedom and justice and the insularity of the Negro community have dictated the area of greatest concern outside the local congregation. These have been the educational institutions, which exist primarily for the education of Negro youth, and the Civil Rights Movement. Where foreign missions have been stressed, the direction is generally to Africa and the black republics of Latin America. The idea that the primary duty of the church is mission is still a hazy concept to most Negro Baptists.

6. The Negro church operates through small fellowship groups. These groups can be roughly divided into three classes: (1) Service Groups—such as choirs, usher boards, gospel choruses, flower guilds, etc.; (2) Fellowship Groups—such as men's clubs, women's auxiliaries, missionary societies, etc.; (3) Interest Groups—such as church school, state organizations, age group circles, etc. These groups, in spite of my arbitrary categories, have as their primary mission the financial support of the institution. It is common for a single church to have twenty-five or thirty small bank accounts in as many banks in a major large city. Most often, each group is duplicated in an organization for children and youth. In a single church there will be a senior choir, a youth choir, and a children's choir. This multiplicity of groups affords an opportunity for "everybody to be somebody."

7. Worship in the Negro Baptist church is normally a syncretic mixture of formal pageantry, traditional protestantism and historic patterns formed during slavery. One unfamiliar with worship in Negro churches may be surprised to find acolytes, vestments and shouting emotional displays in the same worship service. This is not uncommon. The Negro churches have accommodated elements of worship from all sectors of Christianity. In many churches an open Bible and a crucifix may form the worship center.

8. The Negro church is jealous of the Baptist concept of independence. This is the high point in Baptist tradition for him. Institutional freedom is a choice example of the desired individual and group freedom. Included and exemplified by the freedom of his church is the freedom to be himself.

9. The Negro church is a bastion of traditional protestant moral strictures. In most instances the concept of sin is partly hidden by a catalogue of sins. Within the churches, emphasis is placed on the evils of dancing, gambling, drinking, etc. The so-called New Morality is an insult to the Negro, but what is new and shameful is to have churchmen giving their public approval to this relaxation.

10. The Negro Baptist church is characterized by large attendance. The loyalty of church members to church attendance is wondrous to behold. In farm community and in city slum, the Negro church is crowded with worshippers. Last year, parishioners of my congregation used a tour of New York City churches as a part of their annual study conference. The surprise expressed upon a visit to a major downtown church was the most impressive memory left with our people. Here stood a church with all of the physical facilities necessary for an effective program yet their average Sunday attendance was estimated by the minister as being less than fifty. The indications are that if a Negro church occupied this downtown building that in less than two years it would be overflowing. The fact that the building is not the geographical center of the parish has no effect whatsoever in attendance. To use a now trite expression, "we don't know, but we must be doing something right."

The major crisis facing the Negro churches today is caused by two converging factors which have been mentioned above. They are the shortage of trained leadership and the emergence of the Negro Middle Class. In 1964, there were only 373 Negro B.D. students in the United States. This meager crowd must supply the needs of all the denominations in the United States, Canada and such foreign mission fields as are available. Of this number, some will become disenchanted with the pastoral ministry and enter military service or education. Others will leave the ministry entirely. This is complicated for the Baptists by our emphasis on "The Divine Call" and our failure to establish precise ordination standards. Thus many of our 40,000 pulpits are and shall be manned by totally unprepared men. Often these men, motivated by their own inferiorities seek to create an antipathy toward academic preparation. The Baptists are further affected by this situation due to the fact that each year we lose 35% of our seminarians to other denominations. In 1963, Dr. Benjamin E. Mays estimated that 92% of Negro Baptist preachers in the United States were theologically untrained and a high percentage of those are high school drop-outs or worse. The Negro seminarian is faced with a dilemma. His theological training builds a barrier between him and his brethren, between him and his prospective congregation and more often than not those whites who are his equals have shut the door in his face.

In the last twenty years, the New Negro Middle Class has deepened the problem of continued existence. This middle class is largely professional and thus does not have the desperate need for the status-giving machinations of the Negro church. Their training has given them a great desire for assimilation in the total community, and thus their personalities resent the insularity of the Negro churches. In addition, they are not attracted by the educational weaknesses of the average Negro pastor. Like other newly emerging middle classes, one means of escaping from lower class strictures is to trade up. Others move from Fords to Mercury, the Middle Class Negro often moves from Baptist to Presbyterian and Anglican and eventually to Unitarian. Vice-President Humphrey in a recent address to the Economic Opportunity Conference warned the Negro Middle Class that his retreat only serves to widen the gap between himself and the lower classes. This is true in the area of economics, but even more so in the church. To a great extent the present social revolution has been an antidote to this sickness in the body of the Negro churches. The leadership which Negro churches have given to this protest movement has given a new social posture to the church. A posture which the Middle Classes can view with pride.

In the light of this question, I ask what then does the Negro Baptist church have going for it?

The loyalty of the masses who look to it for direction and leadership in many areas of their lives, a high degree of lay participation through its multiplicity of small organizations, actual participation of lay people in worship through oral dialogue, the maintenance of emotion in religion (a religion without emotion is a philosophical bastard), and the perseverance of the historic tradition of freedom, are the high water marks of the Negro Baptist churches. Admittedly, these may be abused, but they must not be lost! Refined, re-interpreted, polished, yes—but not discarded!

I find it personally interesting that the path of white-Negro religious practices in many instances seems cyclical. It's difficult to determine who is following whom. The Negro churches learned their emotionalism and eschatological emphasis from the white evangelistic revivals. When the white churches abandoned this pattern, the Negro churches maintained it. In the present day the Negro church is trying to discard this characteristic while the white church is trying to recapture this fervor and zeal and involvement in worship. Again, the Negro churches are trying to gradually eliminate congregational singing in worship by the use of professional choirs and quartets, while the white church is trying to escape from professional music and reactivate congregational singing.

This is our history and this is our present character and the question still remains—what does this have to do with the American Baptist Convention and what does the American Baptist Convention have to do with it?

Like all Christians, (including Carl McIntyre) we are convinced that the greatest weakness of the churches is their division. We believe that division by color and economic status is even more dangerous than division by denomination. It seems apparent that the oneness of the people of God can never be achieved in a society rent by color discrimination either, stated or implied. Many Negro Christians look to the American Baptist Convention as God's instrument for the healing of this wound in the body of Christ. We see in the American Baptist Convention the potential for a racially inclusive church body. We have high hopes that this convention will enter into ecumenical discussions as a church that is one within its own confessional tradition and practice. We believe that the Baptists have a truth that is necessary for any vital ecumenical discussion. We have come to the American Baptist Convention because we believe you need us. We have preserved the traditional Baptist emphasis on freedom. Perhaps it has been abused, but it is alive! We believe we can be the motivating force toward renewal within the Baptist family. We come bringing our people because we believe that the Baptists must remain the people of the disinherited. We bring to you our congregations of throbbing, pulsating, disinherited folk who stand in need of the truth that the gospel does speak to their condition. The message of Jesus cannot be allowed to assume the image of a ministry solely to white-anglo-saxon protestant communities of conformity. The church of Jesus must evidence a concern for the broken-hearted, the poor in spirit, and the shutout or it will atrophy. These were the people to whom Jesus ministered, these are the people to whom the Baptist tradition appealed, and it is more and more apparent that the Negro Baptist churches are the sole reservoir of this tradition. We have come to work! We have come to participate! We have come to stay! But we cannot stay and will not stay unless the American Baptist Convention re-activates its own genesis. We have come to give what we have, but we are not willing to get lost in the morass of conformity. We therefore urge the American Baptist Convention to realize that talk about freedom of worship and freedom of religion can be empty words to enslaved men. The words of freedom, like The Word, must have an incarnation, and take flesh and dwell among men. Our concern for a society where each man is given the opportunity to develop all of his talents, either for good or evil is an intrinsic part of religious freedom. We believe that the churches of the American Baptist Convention must adopt this concept as their posture; not only in official national convention pronouncements, but in local church activities. You do more than disappoint a handful of Negro Christians who give you their allegiance when you fail to embrace this concept. You at the same time, re-enact the drama of calvary. The onus of the fight for freedom must be your burden as well as ours. We share it together not to save the Negro, nor to save America from embarrassment in the councils of the nations, but in obedience to our Saviour. We can best serve within the American Baptist Convention when you begin to recognize how important our ministry of service is to us. Schools like Bishop, Shaw and Virginia Union hold an important place in our hearts. For years they have been the only place that our boys and girls could receive exposure to higher education. Until they become as important to you as they are to us we will not be satisfied. The legitimate Civil Rights organizations are our creation and we cannot afford to abandon them. You must be willing to join us in their support. We were not satisfied with the creation of B A R B for instance, when it would have been just as easy to follow our already established leadership in S C L C. I will not apologize for my giving to the unified budget of the American Baptist Convention as long as my total mission giving embraces this necessary ministry.

We believe further that the American Baptist Convention must leave no stone unturned. They must create open pulpits where a man will be judged solely on his training, sincerity and ability. I personally know a white Baptist church that chose a man without doctrinal convictions as its leader while refusing to consider a Negro graduate of Colgate Rochester with a sound doctrinal background. If the pulpits across this nation were open, some of the Baptist men we lose to other communions would remain in the soil that nourished them. As a seminarian at a major non-Baptist eastern seminary, I was excused from field work experiences because the school had no contact with Negro Baptist churches and could not find a white Baptist church that would accept me. One could not conclude that the seminary affiliation is to blame. But that assumption will not explain the students at Andover Newton and Colgate Rochester who do their field work in community centers and Y.M.C.A.'s.

I have indicated our need for recognition, identification and leadership possibilities. The socio-economic backlash of slavery and segregation have left scars on the Negro personality. We want in, in the American Baptist Convention! We want to be a part of all decision making and policy making bodies. We believe that we have a contribution to offer and we know that our children and your children need to see us exercising leadership. We can no longer be content being elected or appointed to de-facto segregated positions in the American Baptist Convention. If we are not qualified to pastor, we are not qualified to direct a Christian center. If we are not qualified to work with any member of this Convention, we are not qualified to work with Negro members of this Convention. American society has sought to meet the demands of the Civil Rights Movement with token appointments. We hope that the American Baptist Convention will not follow this excuse for honesty. It is not sufficient to invoke the almost magic name of Boddie, nor to invite Gardner Taylor to preach, or to elect Sam Proctor to high office as was the extent of Negro participation in the last annual convention. We have the highest respect for Gardner Taylor and Sam Proctor and Chuck Boddie. These men are nationally recognized leaders apart from their participation in the American Baptist Convention. You do neither them, nor us, honor when you invoke their names. Rather, you take the cream off the top and contribute to the general feeling that "whitey" cannot be trusted. A large part of America's Negro population, including many of our laymen, become suspicious that you want to steal our best and leave the rest of us leaderless and alone. Those of us who attend and work and serve want to be heard, but more than that, we want to have a part in the selection of those who are heard.

If we qualify, we want to be state convention and city society executives. If we qualify, we want to be administrators in executive departments. If we qualify, we want to be pastors of local congregations. But more important, even where we do not qualify, we want to feel free to apply. In a word, we have come to participate! The national officers of the Convention must set the pattern, but be assured that activity on the national level alone will not suffice. We want to be an integral part of associational life also. I come from a state where a large percentage of the membership of American Baptist churches are members of the Negro churches. I find it significant that of 26 Negro churches listed in the Annual, only 6 have made statistical reports. A related fact is that of 45 members on the Board of Managers, only four are Negroes. I personally believe that this is an open state convention. Why then is Negro participation so meager? Is it because Negroes prefer to be by themselves? It is true that all 26 churches are members of a Negro state convention. Yet, I maintain that this is not the answer. Is it because the Negro churches do not have sufficient secretarial service to execute the blanks? I know that this is not the answer. I believe that we do not feel wanted. It must clearly be enunciated that years of forced exclusion does not breed desire for inclusion. All over this nation the Negro is saying to American Society, just as the Negro Baptist churches are saying to you, "For a century you have told us to prove ourselves, first. We have taken a leaf from your book and we are now saying, if you want us, prove it; not by words, but by attitudes and actions." We have not come as beggars or objects of mission, but as partners. You can prove you want us, not by tolerating our presence, but by accepting us in love as partners.

In conclusion, let me quote from a recent book review in Time Magazine: "Integration cannot fully arrive as long as the Negro feels he must strip himself of his folkways to enter the white man's world or as long as the white man expects him to." We do not view ourselves as objects of mission programs; we do not want you to view us as such. We have not come to get lost in the American Baptist Convention. Metallurgists have much to teach us. Long ago they learned that one piece of metal may have great tensile strength but lack durability, while a second piece may have great durability and lack strength. The secret is to alloy the two metals and thus obtain a product which has both tensile strength and durability. In the process, the strengths of both are accentuated and the weaknesses of each are refined. You have the strength of creative organization and we come bearing the durability of preserved tradition . . . together we can form the framework upon which renewal can be built for the Body of Christ.

Presbyterian Leaders Vote Creed Stressing Social Aim

CHURCHES 5/25/66

By GEORGE DUGAN

Special to The New York Times

BOSTON, May 24—The General Assembly of the 3.3-million-member United Presbyterian Church overwhelmingly approved today a proposed updating of the denomination's basic doctrine that for the first time would recognize in a creedal statement its obligation to work for social justice.

The voice vote of the 837 commissioners, or delegates, was almost unanimously for endorsement of the Confession of 1967, which now goes to the church's 188 presbyteries, or local governing units, for approval.

Excerpts from proposed creed are printed on Page 25.

Two-thirds of the presbyteries must ratify the 4,600-word Confession before final passage can be voted at next year's assembly in Portland, Ore. A simple majority is required in each presbytery.

Under the proposal, the 30,000-word Westminster Confession of Faith of 1647, the traditional sole doctrinal standard of Presbyterianism, will be supplemented by the new Confession of 1967 and six other creedal statements including the familiar Apostles Creed and the Nicene Creed. The latter two are now accepted by most Christian churches.

The Confession of 1967 rejects the traditional notion that the Bible is "inerrant" and thus immune from criticism in the light of new knowledge.

It also spells out for the first time in a doctrinal statement the church's responsibility to be concerned with social problems.

The new Confession has been intensively studied since last May by a special 15-member committee headed by the Rev. Dr. W. Sherman Skinner of St. Louis.

Work on the document began in 1958 when a special committee on a Brief Contemporary Statement of Faith was appointed. This committee's task was broadened by subsequent General Assemblies, and last year its conclusions were reported for the first time to an assembly.

The team of scholars who drafted the Confession was led by the Rev. Dr. Edward A. Dowey of Princeton Theological Seminary.

The vote of approval was followed by a storm of applause and the hearty singing of the Doxology, Protestantism's traditional hymn of praise. A standing ovation was given to Dr. Dowey.

The Rev. Dr. Carl McIntire, president of the conservative International Council of Christian Churches and a vigorous and frequent objector to what he describes as the modernistic and leftist leanings of the United Presbyterian Church, issued a statement today that said in part:

"The United Presbyterian Church has today repudiated the infallibility and the inspiration of the Bible.

"I call upon all Bible-believing Presbyterians to assemble in Portland, Ore., for a historic Presbyterian convocation when the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church convenes next May. On behalf of the United Presbyterians, we shall formally bury the Westminister Confession with all funeral arrangements. And at whatever the cost there shall be preserved in this country a Presbyterian Church maintaining the Westminister Confession and the ordination vows which were rejected here today.

"The contract which the General Assembly has had with its local churches by ordination vow, declaring the Scriptures to be the only infallible rule of faith and practice, has now been abrogated. The ecumenical dreamers have run off with the United Presbyterian Church."

Later, the Rev. Dr. Ganse Little, who was elected last Wednesday as Moderator, or titular head of the church, termed the action "historic."

Dr. Little has gained considerable popularity here with the commissioners for his blithe-spirited conduct of church business.

When one commissioner began what gave promise of being a rather long-winded dissertation by prefacing it with a humorous story involving a telephone, Dr. Little broke in, smiling broadly, and observed:

"Will you please put your call through promptly."

In the middle of a brief parliamentary muddle, he brought down the gavel and exclaimed:

"The chair won't accept this shuffling of the deck at this point—to use an ecclesiastical phrase."

Once, when debate seemed to be building up at an alarming rate, Dr. Little turned to a colleague and asked:

"Will you tell us how the roof stays on in a hurricane?"

This morning three men were nominated for the office of Stated Clerk, or chief executive officer, of the denomination. They are:

The Rev. Dr. John W. Meister, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Fort Wayne, Ind., whose name was presented by the assembly's Standing Committee on Nomination of a Stated Clerk.

Ruling Elder William Phelps Thompson of Wichita, Kan., Moderator of last year's Assembly, nominated from the floor.

The Rev. Dr. Hugh McHenry Miller, pastor of the First Memorial Presbyterian Church of Dover, N. J., also nominated from the floor.

The election of the new Stated Clerk, who will succeed the Rev. Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, will be held at 10 A.M. tomorrow.

Dr. Blake, Stated Clerk for the last 15 years, has resigned effective July 1 to become General Secretary of the World Council of Churches, which has headquarters in Geneva.

Dr. Meister's nomination was made by a 23-member committee made up of commissioners. The committee chairman, the Rev. Dr. Bryant Kirkland, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York City, told the assembly that the names of 55 persons had been considered. This list, he said, was narrowed to 18, then to 3 and eventually to one.

Excerpts From the Presbyterian Creed

CHURCHES 5/26/66

Special to The New York Times

BOSTON, May 24—Following are excerpts of the proposed Confession of 1967 approved today by the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church:

The one sufficient revelation of God is Jesus Christ, the Word of God Incarnate, to whom the Holy Spirit bears unique and authoritative witness through the Holy Scriptures, which are received and obeyed as the word of God written. The Scriptures are not a witness among others, but the witness without parallel. The church has received the books of the Old and New Testaments as prophetic and apostolic testimony in which it hears the word of God and by which its faith and obedience are nourished and regulated.

The New Testament is the recorded testimony of apostles to the coming of the Messiah, Jesus of Nazareth, and the sending of the Holy Spirit to the church. The Old Testament bears witness to God's faithfulness in His Covenant with Israel and points the way to the fulfillment of His purpose in Christ. The Old Testament is indispensable to understanding the New, and is not itself fully understood without the New.

View of Scriptures

The Bible is to be interpreted in the light of its witness to God's work of reconciliation in Christ. The Scriptures, given under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, are nevertheless the words of men, conditioned by the language, thought forms, and literary fashions of the places and times at which they were written. They reflect views of life, history, and the cosmos which were then current. The church, therefore, has an obligation to approach the Scriptures with literary and historical understanding. As God has spoken His word in diverse cultural situations, the church is confident that He will continue to speak through the Scriptures in a changing world and in every form of human culture.

In each time and place there are particular problems and crises through which God calls the church to act. The church, guided by the Spirit, humbled by its own complicity, and instructed by all attainable knowledge, seeks to discern the will of God and learn how to obey in these concrete situations.

The following are particularly urgent at the present time:

A. God has created the peoples of the earth to be one universal family. In His reconciling love He overcomes the barriers between brothers and breaks down every form of discrimination based on racial or ethnic difference, real or imaginary. The church is called to bring all men to receive and uphold one another as persons in all relationships of life: In employment, housing, education, leisure, marriage, family, church, and the exercise of political rights. Therefore the church labors for the abolition of all racial discrimination and ministers to those injured by it. Congregations, individuals, or groups of Christians who exclude, dominate, or patronize their fellow men, however subtly, resist the Spirit of God and bring contempt on the faith which they profess.

Search for Peace

B. God's reconciliation in Jesus Christ is the ground of the peace, justice, and freedom among nations which all powers of government are called to serve and defend. The church, in its own life, is called to practice the forgiveness of enemies and to commend to the nations as practical politics the search for cooperation and peace. This requires the pursuit of fresh and responsible relations across every line of conflict, even at the risk to national security, to reduce areas of strife and to broaden international understanding.

c. The reconciliation of man through Jesus Christ makes it plain that enslaving poverty in a world of abundance is an intolerable violation of God's good creation. Because Jesus identified himself with the needy and exploited, the cause of the world's poor is the cause of his disciples. The church cannot condone poverty, whether it is the product of unjust social structures, exploitation of the defenseless, lack of national resources, absence of technological understanding, or rapid expansion of populations. The church calls every man to use his abilities, his possessions, and the fruits of technology as gifts entrusted to him by God for the maintenance of his family and the advancement of the common welfare.

D. The relationship between man and woman exemplifies in a basic way God's ordering of the interpersonal life for which He created mankind. Anarchy in sexual relationships is a symptom of man's alienation from God, his neighbor and himself. Man's perennial confusion about the meaning of sex has been aggravated in our day by the availability of new means for birth control and the treatment of infection, by the pressures of urbanization, by the exploitation of sexual symbols in mass communication, and by world overpopulation. The church, as the household of God, is called to lead man out of this alienation into the responsible freedom of the new life in Christ.

Presbyterian Reform Plan Is Approved

BOSTON — The General Assembly of the 3.3 million-member United Presbyterian Church gave overwhelming approval Tuesday to a proposed updating of the denomination's basic doctrine that for the first time would recognize its obligation to work for social justice.

The voice vote of the 837 commissioners, or delegates, was almost unanimous in its endorsement of a 4,600-word Confession of 1967, which now goes to the church's 188 presbyteries, or local governing units, for approval.

Two-thirds of the presbyteries must ratify the confession before final passage at next year's assembly in Portland, Ore. A simple majority is required in each presbytery.

Under the proposal, the 30,000-word Westminster confession of faith of 1647—the traditional sole doctrinal standard of Presbyterianism—will be supplemented by the new Confession of 1967 and six other creedal statements including the familiar Apostles and the Nicene. The latter two are accepted by most Christian churches today.

The confession rejects the traditional notion that the Bible is "inerrant" and thus immune from criticism in the light of new knowledge. And it spells out for the first time in a doctrinal statement the responsibility of the church to be concerned with social problems.

The new confession has been under intensive study since last May by a special 15-member committee headed by the Rev. Dr. W. Sherman Skinner of St. Louis. Work on the document began in 1958 when a special committee on a Brief Contemporary Statement of Faith was appointed. This committee's task was broadened by subsequent general assemblies.

2 Priests Protest Its Use by Lovett

Two Episcopal priests who began a 98-hour fast inside the Cathedral of St. Philip Wednesday night will be allowed to continue their vigil, the cathedral said Thursday.

The two, the Revs. Roy Hunter and Albert Driesbach, are protesting the use of the church sanctuary for the baccalaureate service of Lovett School, a private, segregated institution.

A St. Philip spokesman said Thursday, "We have no intention of asking them to leave as long as they conduct themselves in keeping with the dignity of the church. The church is open to anyone who wants to come in and use it as a place of worship."

The priests plan to stay in the church until 10 p.m. Sunday with only daily communion to sustain them.

The church spokesman said, "The whole policy of the church is an open door policy and for that same reason we are allowing the Lovett School to have its baccalaureate services here, just as we allowed Northside to use the church last week for its baccalaureate service.

The Rev. Mr. Hunter, Atlanta's only Negro parish priest, is at St. Paul's and the Rev. Mr. Dreisbach is supply priest at the Church of the Nativity and is an associate director of the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity.

Methodists Getting Plan To Curb Bias

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, Ga. (UPI) — South Georgia Methodists will be asked to take their first step toward eliminating racial barriers within the Georgia denomination at their centennial conference Monday and Tuesday.

A resolution proposing elimination of the all-Negro Central Jurisdiction will be presented to 800 delegates representing 148,000 white Methodists in south Georgia.

Passage of the measure would result primarily in a change in administrative organization. Merging of churches and integration are not proposed in the resolution, and under Methodist legislation, could be achieved only on a voluntary basis.

The step would be the first taken in the nine-state Southeastern Jurisdiction. It requires a two-thirds vote for passage and would open the door "for further study and negotiation with Negro Methodists."

A report on the merging of the Methodist Church with the Evangelical United Brethren will also be presented but no vote is expected.

Bishop John Owen Smith, Atlanta, will preside over the sessions.

Two Episcopal Priests End Protest Fast at Cathedral

AC 6/7/61

By MICHAEL DAVIS

Two Episcopal priests ended a 99-hour fast Sunday night after baccalaureate services were held in the Cathedral of St. Philip for the graduating class of Lovett School.

The Rev. Robert Hunter and Albert Dreisbach had been fasting in the church sanctuary since Wednesday night.

As the Lovett graduating class filed into the church, the priests sat in opposite naves with opened Bibles in their laps.

THEY'RE IGNORED

Officials of the church ignored the priests during the ceremony and stated that they would do nothing to remove them unless there was a disturbance.

Outside the church at Peachtree Road and Andrews Drive more than 100 Negro and white pickets representing the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Equality (ESCRU) carried signs protesting the services because the school refused to desegrate.

The pickets, led by the Rev. John Morris, executive director of ESCRU, wore buttons with figures of a Negro and a white man kneeling before Christ and a cross.

One of the pickets, Dr. Melvin Kennedy of Morehouse College, carried a placard which read, "We protest the use of this cathedral for the baccalaureate services of the Lovett School."

The Rev. Mr. Morris said that he has been informed that Lovett will not hold it baccalaureate service at St. Phillip's again because it is building its own chapel at the school.

CRITICIZES CHURCH

Immediately after the services, the Rev. Mr. Hunter, who is Atlanta only Negro Episcopal priest, charged that officials of the church made no constructive effort to "come to grips with the situation."

He also said that the bishop of the Atlanta Diocese, the Rt. Rev. Randolph Claiborne Jr., had expressed sympathy with the two fasting priests but that he had no authority to stop the services.

The Rev. Mr. Dreisbach, an associate director of ESCRU, said, "Atlantans show "The Deputy' on the stage and then come here tonight to live it out." "The Deputy" is a controversial play about Pope Pius XII during World War II.

"The church," he said, "has failed to face the issues at hand. The Rev. Robert E. Lee escaped the issue . . . the comforted are still comforted and the afflicted are still afflicted." The Rev. Mr. Lee delivered the baccalaureate sermon.

Lovett once was affiliated with the Episcopal Church, but lost this affiliation and became a private institution when it refused to drop its ban against Negroes.

South Georgia Methodists Defeat Merger with Negroes

AC 6/9/66

By MARGARET HURST
Constitution Religion Writer

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, Ga. — A resolution aimed at the gradual elimination of racial barriers in the Methodist Church in nine Southeastern states was voted down Wednesday by the all-white South Georgia Methodist Conference.

After two hours of stormy debate, the delegates voted in a secret ballot in favor of the resolution, 296 to 207, but failed to give it the two-thirds majority necessary for passage.

If passed, the resolution would have abolished the all-Negro Central Jurisdiction in Georgia. It would have allowed Negro bishops from the Central Jurisdiction who live in the Southeastern United States to become members of the College of Bishops of the all-white Southeastern Jurisdiction.

This would have no immediate effect on local conferences and congregations.

The vote Wednesday does not mean the measure is dead, however, since a two-thirds vote of jurisdictions in nine Southeastern states will determine the ultimate fate of the resolution.

Presiding Bishop John Owen Smith said that several conferences, including Tennessee, Florida, North Mississippi and North Alabama, have voted in favor of the resolution.

A Methodist spokesman said the Florida vote was 802 to 45 and Tennessee's was 500 to 2.

Prior to the voting here Wednesday, the resolution set off an emotion-packed debate.

Speaking against the resolution, lay delegate State Rep. Dorsey Mathews of Moultrie said, "This resolution just opens the door a little way but you open it enough for them (Negroes) to get their foot in . . . and it'll be the last of the Methodist Church."

Dr. Zack Henderson, president of Georgia Southern College, urged the conference delegates to pass the resolution. "Are we, the church, going to stand by and not take the next step when education has taken it, business has taken it and athletics have taken it?" he asked.

The Rev. John Blackwell of Springfield, who said he comes from "the grass roots" and knows "what the people back home are thinking," argued that passage of the resolution would cut the number of superintendents needed.

"Where we have nine superintendents now, there is a possibility we'll need only six when we go back home," he said.

He and several other spokesmen against the resolution, said that if passed it would cause the church to lose a large number of its members.

In other action, James T. Pennell, chairman of the Committee on Christian Vocations, told the conference that his committee had sent letters to all conference ministers asking them how many young persons in their congregations were interested in the ministry or a related vocation.

Pennell said 192 reported no youths considering a Christian vocation, 82 reported one or more interested young people, and 72 did not reply.

An Arlington lawyer, W. E. Bostwick, said that the Methodist Church is giving ministers better training and building bigger churches but statistical reports show it is serving fewer people.

He said the way to reverse the fall-off in membership would be "not to adopt this resolution."

Earlier Wednesday George T. Wright, a Tifton druggist, was elected lay leader of the conference. Wright, a member of the Conference Board of Lay Activity since 1957, succeeds William S. Parks, a Rhine businessman who has served four years.

The following were named district lay leaders: John R. Rogers of Ashburn, Americus District; Tom McKinstry of Columbus, Columbus District; George W. Mayo, of Savannah, Savannah District; Byrd Posey of Albany, Thomasville District, and Dr. C. E. Zimmerman of Tifton, Valdosta District.

Michigan Catholics to Patronize Businesses That Hire Negroes

CHURCHES

LANSING, Mich., June 9 (AP) — The Roman Catholic Church in Michigan said today it would use its millions of purchases dollars to try to influence supplier companies to hire more Negroes and members of other minority groups.

Four bishops announced that when Catholic institutions spend their money, "those institutions which provide equality in employment opportunity will be favored over those which do not."

The plan was outlined jointly by the bishops of Lansing, Grand Rapids, Marquette and Saginaw. The Detroit Archdiocese adopted such a program last spring.

Michigan's five diocese have an estimated total of 2.5 million members, and a spokesman said Michigan Catholics would be the first to start such a project on a statewide basis.

The bishops said Catholic institutions would ask companies with which they deal to pledge equal employment opportunities and to take affirmative steps to hire members of minority groups.

They said the companies would be asked to report periodically on how many minority group members they employ, and in what positions.

The statement said the plan was not a boycott "but rather an affirmative use of the hiring and purchasing power of Catholic institutions to end employment discrimination."

Memphis Methodists Vote To End Racial Distinction

JACKSON, Tenn. (AP)—The Memphis Conference of the Methodist Church Friday overwhelmingly approved a proposal which would break down racial distinction in church organization.

The Memphis Conference became the sixth of 16 conferences in the Southeastern Jurisdiction which must approve the plan before the Jurisdiction can absorb two conferences in the Central (Negro) Jurisdiction.

The resolution, passed by a vote of 222-34, also would permit Negro bishops in the Central Jurisdiction to join the all-white College of Bishops.

A second proposal, carrying through the intent of the first at the "grass roots level," also was approved but by slightly less of a majority.

The delegates voted 204-57 to invite individual Central Jurisdiction churches to join their Conference.

The 700 clergy and lay delegates attending the Conference's 128th annual session at Lambuth College showered the Little Chapel Church of Paducah, Ky., with its second honor in as many days.

The church, with only 30 members, was named "church of the year" among the 540 churches in the Conference area of West Tennessee and Southwest Kentucky.

Thursday, Mrs. Ora Belle Peck, minister of the Little Chapel Church, became the first woman in the history of the Conference to be admitted on a trial basis for ordination. She will be ordained in two years if she successfully completes the probation period.

The session ends today with the reading of pastoral appointments.

Major Churches and Private Groups Seek Low Rentals

6/21/64

By EDWARD B. FISKE

Several large Protestant denominations and secular groups have agreed to pool their resources in a multimillion-dollar effort to stimulate the construction of low-rent housing throughout the nation.

The new project, the first of its scope in the housing field to involve both religious and secular agencies, has been announced by Urban America, Inc., a private, nonprofit urban planning group here that will administer the program. Its purpose will be to encourage the formation of nonprofit corporations to sponsor low-rent housing by offering such groups enabling funds and technical assistance.

The United Church of Christ is already committed to the program, and approval is expected soon from the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., the Protestant Episcopal Church and the Methodist Church. The American Baptist Convention is also considering participation.

In announcing the project, Stephen R. Currier, president of Urban America, said the program would use an annual operating budget of approximately $1-million to release "hundreds of millions more" in federally insured mortgages and interest and rent subsidies.

Under Federal housing legislation — principally Section

221(d)(3) of the Housing Act of 1961 — nonprofit organizations, including church-related groups, are eligible to receive Government assistance for the construction and rehabilitation of low-rent family housing. Such assistance comes in the form of mortgage insurance and subsidized interest payments.

Additional funds will also be available to nonprofit groups through the recently passed rent supplement program. Under this program, tenants would pay 25 per cent of their income for rent and the Federal Government would pay the remainder required to keep the housing project solvent and in good repair.

Mr. Currier said the Urban America program could reach the point where it would be assisting in the construction of from 20,000 to 30,000 units annually. Low-rent housing is currently being constructed under the Housing Act provision at about half this rate.

The Urban America staff will seek to stimulate interest in the sponsorship of housing by local churches and other nonprofit groups, provide "seed" or enabling funds on a revolving-loan basis, and also technical, legal and other assistance at all stages in the development of the corporation.

It is prohibited under an agreement from acting as a sponsor or owning properties itself. In some cases it may charge nominal fees and interest for its services and loans.

The new program will be implemented in the form of an expansion of the present activities of Urban America's Local Development Services Division. Since February, 1965, this division, working under a Ford Foundation grant of $575,000, has provided technical services to nonprofit groups involved in the construction of approximately 3,000 units.

Urban America, Inc., is the result of a merger last December of the Action Council for Better Cities, a national organization of civil leaders concerned with urban planning, and Urban America, Inc., a planning group previously known as the American Planning and Civic Association.

In addition to the Local Development Services Division Urban America publishes the monthly magazine Architectural Forum and operates design and information centers. These activities are supported by the Taconic Foundation and industrial concerns. The chairman of the board of trustees of Urban America is Andrew Heiskell, chairman of the board of Time, Inc.

Local Aid Sought

Church interest in the technical services project stems from the large numbers of requests for help received by national church agencies from local churches and church-related groups interested in doing something about housing problems in their areas.

Under the agreement, which must be renewed after two years, Urban America will provide administrative staff and facilities and direct the program. The participating denominations will sit on the division board and make available their communications channels and influence in communities.

Agreement between major denominations and private secular agencies are not unknown in other areas of social action. Churches have worked closely with major civil rights organizations, for example, and they have been the principal clients of the Industrial Areas Foundation, the controversial community organization agency operated by Saul D. Alinsky.

Churches have also been active on a local basis in the sponsorship of low-rent housing. A spokesman for the Federal Housing Administration said that church-related groups had been responsible for a quarter of the units built under the provisions of section 221 (d) (3) of the Housing Act of 1961.

McCracken Asserts 'Infinite Love' Is Rejected Today

By GEORGE DUGAN

Jesus Christ is not making an impact on modern society, the Rev. Dr. Robert J. McCracken told worshipers yesterday in his sermon at Riverside Church.

"Ours is a society relying heavily and finally on force, on military might and on nuclear superiority," he declared.

"Christ's teaching in this regard runs counter to our accepted and established practice. He repudiates force, advocates nonresistance to evil, bids us love our enemies, bless those who curse us, pray for those who despitefully hate us."

According to Dr. McCracken, this is not only "unpopular teaching" today but its practicality is questioned.

'Too High and Too Hard'

"It is looked upon as a kind of poetry, a Utopian dream, idealistic but too high and too hard for ordinary humanity, and out of touch with the realities of the everyday world," the minister said.

"Showing 'infinite Christian love' to Communists, it has been said, is like stroking a tiger on the head and calling him 'poor puss.'

"This is the attitude of thousands who attend church and have their names on its membership roll. The idea of applying the principles of the Sermon on the Mount to international politics—though they may not put their feeling into words or even think the issue over very deeply—does not seem to them workable."

Jesus Christ is not making a universal appeal today because of His "moral and austerity," Dr. Cracken asserted.

A Challenge to Comfort

"Right down the line Christ gives offense by His moral austerity," the minister said. "He rebukes our acquisitive society. He rebukes our comfor-loving, take-it-easy philosophy. He rebukes our moral laxity. He rebukes our reliance on force and our rejection of love as the royal way of life.

"Ours is a comfort-loving society. On parting from one another, we say, 'Take it easy.' We equate comfort with civilization.

"For the pioneer psychology, we have substituted a philosophy of soft living. Collective security bids fair to take the place of individual initiative. The demand is for wares that are conducive to effortless living. Few things are prized quite so highly."

DR. KING ASSAILS WHITE CHURCHES

Finds Cold Indifference or Hypocrisy Toward Negro

Special to The New York Times

GENEVA, July 17—The Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. said in a prepared sermon today that the American Negro was "usually greeted by a cold indifference or blatant hypocrisy" when he called on the "so-called white churches."

"One of the shameful tragedies of history is that the very institutions which should remove men from the midnight of racial segregation participate in creating and perpetuating the midnight," Dr. King said in the sermon that was recorded yesterday in Chicago.

More than 400 delegates to a World Conference on Church and Society saw only an empty pulpit as Dr. King's voice rang through St. Peter's Cathedral.

Dr. King's appearance was to have been a major highlight of the two-week conference organized by the World Council of Churches.

But the United States civil rights leader canceled his visit because, he said, the riots in Chicago required his presence there.

The theme of his sermon was that the world is in a moral and social darkness with many people failing to find the guidance they look for in the church.

"In the terrible midnight of war," Dr. King said, "men have knocked on the door of the church to ask for the bread of peace, but the church often disappointed them."

"Millions of Africans, patiently knocking on the door of the Christian church where they seek the bread of social justice have either been altogether ignored or told to wait until later, which almost always means never," he said.

Dr. King said that "those who have gone to the church to seek the bread of economic justice have been left in the frustrating midnight of economic deprivation."

"If the church does not recapture its prophetic zeal it will become an irrelevant social club without moral or spiritual authority," he warned.

Catholic Families Are Less Receptive To Rights Views Than Their Clerics

NYT 8/9/65

By JOHN COGLEY

Whites attacking civil rights marches in Chicago have been incensed at the participation in the marches of Roman Catholic priests and nuns. Some of the whites have announced that they were going to withhold church donations. Chicago has long been known as the most liberal archdiocese in the Catholic church. Through three decades of permissive archbishops—Cardinals Mundelein, Stritch and Mayer—the city became the center of the most vigorous Catholic social movement in the United States. Its widely known Auxiliary Bishop, Bernard J. Sheil, a fighting liberal who at the age of 80 is now retired, appeared to many as typical of Chicago Catholicism. He was typical of a certain wing but not of Chicago Catholicism as a whole.

News Analysis

Chicago's reputation for liberalism was overextended. It has been based on the views expressed and leadership exercised by a comparatively small number of enlightened clergy who, like Bishop Sheil, spoke out against racial discrimination and the sores festering in the city's slums.

In many cases, these priests were looked on as eccentrics by their clerical peers and by many of the laity, as the Bishop himself was.

'Holding the Line'

Until it was too late, most leaders of the all-white Catholic neighborhoods threatened by an overflow from the ghettos identified "holding the line" against Negroes not only as an effort to hold on to their mortgaged homes but also as a way of "saving" their parishes, the proud symbols in concrete and marble of their loyalty to the Church.

For long years they were convinced that they had the genuine, if tactfully unspoken, support of their pastors. In many cases they were correct.

In most instances, pastors were no more imaginative than the people. They went along with "holding the line" until it was too late and their once-proud middle-class Catholic parishes became black ghettos.

Many of the homegrown clergy of Chicago share the lower middle-class social background of those who made up the mobs shouting hate slogans. Some of the marching clergy have parents and relatives who, like the mob, feel threatened.

It would be safe to say, however, that, among the younger generation at least, members of the average Catholic family who become priests and nuns are now markedly more liberal than their lay brothers and sisters.

A Moral Test

First of all, the clerics tend to see the racial problem in stark moral and theological terms—as a test of one's belief in the brotherhood of man. They are also likely to be several rungs above their siblings on the educational ladder. This means they find it easier to relate the racial question to other religious and political commitments such as Christianity and democracy.

Moreover, because even the Pope has taken a strong stand for integration, they are strengthened by the approval of the top leaders of the Church, by the admiration of their peers, and by the opportunity to do something that gives dramatic public witness, in an ecumenical setting, to their beliefs.

These clerics are free of financial worries. For the marching priest or nun, the civil rights movement is an exciting, spiritually satisfying, morally heroic enterprise. Their married brothers or sisters, however, are eaten away with insecurity and fear of the unknown that can so easily turn into blind hatred.

For them the civil rights issue may, instead, represent the possible loss of a home, the transformation of a familiar neighborhood into a ghetto—a threat to family, community and, not least of all to the Church itself.

That the ministers of the church do not see it this way, that some are helping to bring the feared future into existence, is, then, not only a bafflement but an outrage.

For such people the church that they have supported all their lives has joined the "enemy." For the social-conscious priest or nun, of course no such thing has happened. The Church has joined the side of the poor and the oppressed

Churches Move On Slums; Poor Gaining Decent Homes

By LOUIS CASSELS
United Press International Writer

America's churches have found a new way to serve humanity — by becoming slum landlords.

In sharp contrast to the kind of slum landlord who exploits the poor by charging exorbitant rents for rat-infested hovels, churches are moving into the housing field for the sole purpose of providing decent homes to low-income families at rentals they can afford.

Their increasing activity in the housing market is abetted by Section 221 (D) (3) of the Federal Housing Act, which says that non-profit organizations, including church-related groups, are eligible for government assistance in the construction and rehabilitation of low-rent family housing. The government assistance includes long-term loans at interest rates (around 3 per cent) far below those currently available to ordinary private borrowers.

EVEN WITH this kind of financial help, few churches have the resources—or the courage—to venture into slum housing operations on an individual basis. The tendency is for several religious groups to band together in a non-profit corporation.

One of the most ambitious projects of this kind was launched in the nation's capital last spring. The Protestant Council of Churches, the Episcopal Dioceses of Washington, the local Council of Catholic Men, the District of Columbia chapter of the American Jewish Committee and All Souls Unitarian Church joined in establishing an interfaith agency known as COIN — Community Organization for the Improvement of Neighborhoods, Inc.

COIN is negotiating for the purchase of several large, rundown apartment buildings in the inner city area of Washington. It will completely rehabilitate them and rent them to low-income families at a fraction of the rentals being charged in the same area for dity, dilapidated slum flats.

IN CLEVELAND, 400 Protestant churches are cooperating through the Greater Cleveland Council of Churches in construction of a non-profit housing development for 125 low-income families in the Hough district, a Negro ghetto which was torn by rioting this summer.

Each of the participating congregations also will undertake to rehabilitate at least one house in the Hough section. A private development organization will handle the repairs, which will cost the sponsoring congregations from $1,000 to $2,000 each.

On the west side of Chicago—which also has been the scene of rioting this summer — Baptist, Catholic, Episcopal, Lutheran, Methodist and Presbyterian churches have formed an interdenominational "Christian Action Ministry" which will, among other things, seek to rehabilitiate housing in the area.

Although multiple church sponsorship makes for strength and efficiency, there is nothing to prevent a single congregation from tackling a slum housing program — if its members have enough dedication to the task.

IN ST. LOUIS, members of the Second Presbyterian Church have formed a non-profit organization called Christian Neighbors, Inc. Their first venture was to buy a badly deteriorated apartment building located in the same block as their church. They converted it from 14 overcrowded slum flats into seven decent-sized apartments at modest rentals.

Encouraged by that success, they purchased another 10-family apartment house in the same area. Its renovation was carried out with the help of volunteer labor by church members.

A powerful impetus to local church efforts in the housing field was provided recently when four big Protestant denominations (The United Church of Christ, United Presbyterian Church, Episcopal Church and Methodist Church) threw their financial support behind a secular organization called Urban America, Inc., which has had a great deal of experience in the acquisition and rehabilitation of slum housing.

URBAN AMERICA will assist local church groups throughout the country to form non-profit housing corporations. It will tell them how to qualify for government loans, and advise them on selection, purchase, and rehabilitation of property. If need be, it will even lend them "seed money" to get the project under way.

With an operating budget of about $1 million a year, Urban America hopes to serve as a catalyst for community action that will channel hundreds of millions of dollars into acquisition and renovation of slum housing for renting to low income families on a non-profit basis.

Widow Enters Building Business

MARGATE, N.J., Sept. 1 (UPI) — The widow of millionaire builder Frank Adamucci, who was gunned down last summer in the plush Rickshaw Inn in Cherry Hill, plans to go into the construction business.

Mrs. Rose Adamucci, the former Rose Mottola, said construction is "a first love." She has been active as a real estate broker.

Mrs. Adamucci said she learned much about the construction business from her late husband. The 47-year-old widow, who failed to take the stand during the trial of three men convicted of slaying her husband, described his death as "such a waste."

"It had no rhyme or reason," she said.

'Man-in-the-Pew' Complains

By GLYNN MAPES
Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

Religious publications are becoming increasingly controversial, and, to some people, downright irreverent.

Consider these recent articles:

—Motive, an official publication of the Methodist Church, printed a play that implied Christ was illegitimate.

—The National Catholic Reporter ran a two-part series giving readers detailed information on intra-uterine contraceptive devices.

—Renewal, a monthly sponsored by Protestant mission groups, suggested much of the United Presbyterian Church's budget for mission work actually goes to sustain a needless bureaucracy.

—Ave Maria, published by some priests at the University of Notre Dame, exposed racial discrimination at four Catholic colleges.

The upshot of these and similar articles for these and similar publications: New readers, new controversies and new troubles.

"Nasty Letters"

"We're getting some nasty letters from the man-in-the-pew accusing us of selling out the church and calling us liberals and Communists," says Richard C. Underwood, editor of Together, "the Methodist family magazine." "Nasty Letters"

"We're getting some nasty letters from the man-in-the-pew accusing us of selling out the church and calling us liberals and Communists," says Richard C. Underwood, editor of Together, "the Methodist family magazine." The magazine has run articles recently on dope addicts, homosexuals and communism and a piece entitled In Defense of (Civil Rights) Demonstrations.

Ave Maria has been banned unofficially from libraries at several Roman Catholic seminaries and parochial schools, claims an editor proudly. And at least two magazines, Christian Century, a nondenominational publication, and The Churchman, a small monthly aimed at Episcopalians, are threatened with losing their tax-exempt status for publishing articles on such nonchurch affairs as Sen. Goldwater's Presidential campaign.

Despite the troubles, however, more and more religious publications are venturing from their traditional formula of sweetness and light. Church leaders say there now are at least 20 bold, campaigning religious periodicals, most of which get at least some direct financial support from a church. Until a few years ago, only a handful of religious publications—all unfettered by direct church control—dared to be so outspoken.

The widening scope of the publications dates back three or four years to the beginning of large-scale church participation in the civil rights movement, their editors say. Now the publications are attempting to prod the churches into even broader involvement.

"Mandate" From the Readers

Motive magazine is a prime example. "We have a firm editorial mandate from our readers to discuss social and political issues," contends B. J. Stiles, Motive's 33-year-old editor. "We want to explode the myth that the sacred and the secular are somehow separated." An ordained Methodist minister, the $10,000-a-year editor heads an editorial staff of three. The magazine, founded by the church's board of education in 1941, now has a circulation of 36,000, up from 26,000 in 1961, before it took on its pugnacious bent.

While disagreeing with some of its stands, Methodist leaders generally applaud the magazine. "If there's a controversial development in the theology, Motive will take it apart, examine it and put it back together again—and the rest of us will learn," says Bishop Donald H. Tippett, president-designate of the Methodist Church Council of Bishops.

Motive has shown "great success in attracting thoughtful students into the clergy," the bishop says. "The magazine speaks to these people in a language that makes religion and the church relevant. They will make our best leaders, and, frankly, we'd lose them if we had to depend on most of the other church publications."

He adds, however, that he wouldn't recommend it to all Methodists. "Some of our people would find Motive very distressing." (Indeed, Bishop Tippett himself was distressed by the magazine when it reprinted the play that implied Christ was illegitimate. "But you have to expect a few missteps with a magazine as far out as that one," he remarks.)

A Burial & an Obituary

After the magazine ran a discussion of premarital sex last November, one reader suggested in a letter Motive printed that church leaders "bury the corpse of what was once a beneficial organ of the Methodist Church. It has been putrifying for some time now, so the burial service should not be prolonged."

Motive has gotten attention outside the church, too. A satirical, newspaper-style "obituary" of God—widely reprinted in such publications as Time Magazine and the New York Times—appeared first in the February 1966 issue of Motive. The piece, which pokes fun at over-serious theologians arguing over the relevance of God in today's world, begins:

"God, creator of the universe, principal Deity of the world's Jews, ultimate reality of Christians, and most eminent of all divinities, died late yesterday during major surgery undertaken to correct a massive diminishing influence. In New York, the stock market dropped sharply in early trading.

"The market rallied in late trading after reports were received that Jesus, who survives, plans to assume a larger role in management of the universe. . . . From Independence, Mo., former President Harry S Truman, who received the news in his Kansas City barbershop, said: 'I'm always sorry to hear someone is dead. It's a damn shame.' "

The effect of some controversial stories can be measured in dollars. Officials of the Presbyterian Church say they lost $50,000 in probable contributions as a result of Renewal's attack on the administration of mission funds. Trimming the fat from the administration, the article stated, "could open dozens of hospitals a year with the savings on airline travel that would be gained by firing the staff."

Another way the missions could save money is by not renewing their subscriptions to Renewal, says one critic of the magazine; the United Presbyterian Church's Board of National Missions pledges to buy 6,000 subscriptions a year.

Critical Acclaim

Most religious journals don't pay much to contributors; many articles are contributed free. Their quality has attracted some critical acclaim.

Columbia University's Graduate School of Journalism included in its 1966 magazine awards a commendation of Motive and of Continuum, a quarterly sponsored by St. Xavier College in Chicago. Motive was cited for "skillful and dramatic presentations of major issues," and Continuum for its role "as a Roman Catholic magazine of small circulation delving into controversy and presenting strong conviction and thorough research in a handsome format." Continuum has repeatedly called for liberalization of the Catholic Church's stand against birth control.

Some professionals who admire the magazines offer their talents. An associate editor of a large news magazine writes regularly on Vietnam and civil rights for Renewal, though he uses a pseudonym to avoid embarrassing his publisher. Robert Osborn, cover artist for the New Yorker Magazine, drew the cover for Motive's January 1966 foreign affairs issue for "only a small fraction of his usual charge," says Motive Editor Stiles. The cover showed a seedy-looking Uncle Sam wielding a large sword in one hand and holding a scrawny peace dove in the other.

A Forum for Priests

Churchmen are the major contributors to the publications, of course. The National Catholic Reporter, for instance, provides a forum for Catholic priests who urge—sometimes anonymously—that the church relax its rule against married clergy. The paper also has interviewed liberal Catholic theologians who maintain Catholics are free to use birth control devices.

Such articles have helped swell the newspaper's circulation from an initial 11,000 in October 1964 to nearly 75,000 today. Its series on intra-uterine devices alone drew more than 500 reprint requests within three days after publication, says Donald J. Thorman, publisher, a former daily newspaperman and management consultant.

An offshoot of a diocesan weekly in Missouri, the National Catholic Reporter, unlike most new publications, gets no support from church coffers. "That's the way we like it," says Mr. Thorman. "We're free of the Catholic Church's institutional habit of managing the news." The paper moved into the black in June.

Publications with financial ties to a church naturally have far fewer financial worries. Motive, for example, is 40% subsidized by the Methodist Church; the remaining funds come from subscriptions ($3 for eight monthly issues published during the school year) and a few ads. Most other church magazines rely heavily on bulk subscription sales directly to churches, which distribute them to parishioners.

The financially supported publications seem to delight in biting the hand that feeds them. Perhaps least likely to applaud the U.S. Supreme Court's decision outlawing school-sponsored prayer in the classroom would be members of the conservative Southern Baptist sect. Yet the Baptist Standard (circulation 371,000), official magazine of the Baptist General Convention of Texas, supported the decision.

"Some folks said I was driving God from the school," recalls the Rev. Ewing S. James, the Standard's softspoken, 66-year-old editor. But he says he staunchly believes that separation of church and state extends to the classroom. Mr. James says he and his magazine are politically conservative and theologically fundamentalist, yet the magazine consistently needles Baptists to accord equal treatment to Negroes.

Editors aren't shy about engaging in some spritely controversies among themselves. In the Aug. 27 issue of Ave Maria, Father John Reedy, the editor, and James F. Andrews, a layman who is managing editor, exchanged editorial volleys on what the clergy's "vow of poverty" should mean.

An Argument

Mr. Andrews argued the clergy should demonstrate publicly some material privation—"We can see that 'poverty' while not meaning destitution means more than an internal disposition of detachment or habit of the soul or attitude." Father Reedy countered that "When I made my vow, I was not pledging myself to destitution or even to any exceptional privation of material things. . . . I intended to disengage myself from the kind of concern about material possessions which would distract me from the effort to serve and love God in a distinctly direct and immediate way. . . . Personally, I see no virtue in material poverty in itself."

Father Reedy now concedes, "Unfortunately I've come out on the short end." Nearly to a man, he says, the response has been that Mr. Andrews was nearer the truth. (Though published by priests at Notre Dame, Ave Maria isn't connected with the university.)

Occasionally, a church publication will find that its controversial religious articles are so successful that it will broaden its scope. That is what happened with Ramparts, a hard-hitting monthly founded in 1962 as an independently financed journal for Catholic lay writers. Ramparts has sharply attacked Jesuit education, has linked the Catholic church with right-wing extremist elements and has carried on a running battle with Cardinal McIntyre of Los Angeles over his conservative stance on civil rights issues.

The magazine's circulation has risen to nearly 75,000, up from about 7,600 in 1964. So recently it trained its guns on more topics of broad secular interest. Among them: A highly publicized expose of how Michigan State University helped the Central Intelligence Agency train and arm forces of former Premier Diem of South Vietnam.

Nightclub Priest Bids Church 'Get Down to Earth'

Boyd Warns Christianity May 'Die' in 2 Generations

He Calls for Urban Centers and Modern Discussion

By GEORGE DUGAN

The Episcopal priest who opened a month-long stand this week as a paid performer at the hungry is a sophisticated nightclub in San Francisco, is convinced that the Christian church will be dead in two generations unless it "comes down to earth."

The 43-year-old priest, the Rev. Malcolm Boyd, gave up a career in television and radio 11 years ago to enter the ministry.

An intense, nervous man who seems never to be quite sure that he is doing the right thing, despite his strong convictions, he has frequently been in hot water with some of his colleagues.

He ruffled his superiors five years ago when he heard confessions in a bar, organized a series of "espresso nights" in a converted garage and publicly charged Christianity with "smugness" and "snobbishness."

Unpopular With Superiors

As a result, he was asked to resign as chaplain for Episcopal students at Colorado State University.

Moving to Detroit, Father Boyd got into trouble with his superiors there for writing and appearing in plays that used "vulgarity and profanity." He was politely asked to take his evangelism elsewhere.

His headquarters are now in Washington, where he holds the title of Episcopal chaplain-at-large to college campuses.

At the hungry i, the controversial priest is making his first appearance as a paid performer. His $1,000-a-week salary will be turned over to agencies concerned with the civil rights movement.

CONTROVERSIAL: The Rev. Malcolm Boyd, Episcopal clergyman who has been appearing in a nightclub.

Father Boyd's supporters — and there are many — see him as a needed gadfly trying to stir the church out of what they describe as a "religious ghetto."

His detractors—and there are many—regard him simply as "another nut."

Recently, in an interview in a Times Square restaurant, the priest sipped a double martini and charged that the Christian churches have "elected to remain outside existential concerns, wallowing in their own archaic and esoteric church-as-usual affairs."

He proposed that they establish urban centers, offering after-theater hi-fi, late evening coffee and old-fashioned "bull sessions" on love and sex.

He favored what he described as "bar evangelism," wherein a roving minister might supplant the bartender as a psychological counselor.

According to Father Boyd, seminaries are at least 50 years behind the times. He said that students for the ministry now come out of "isolation" without the slightest idea of how to relate themselves to the world into which they are suddenly thrust.

His latest book, "Are You Running With Me, Jesus?" published by Holt, Rinehart & Winston, drew critical applause.

'A Very Moving Book'

A collection of private prayers, completely informal and ranging from civil rights to unwanted pregnancy, the volume was described by a New York Times reviewer as, "to my considerable surprise, a very moving book."

Father Boyd's plays are directed mostly against racial discrimination and "institutionalized" church life. He holds that the media of the theater and motion pictures have far more impact than pulpit sermons.

The Episcopal priest, short and a bit on the stocky side, with receding gray hair, was born in Buffalo.

He was graduated from the University of Arizona in 1944, and went to Hollywood, where he embarked on a public relations career with Mary Pickford and Buddy Rogers. Radio and television writing followed.

In the early 1950's he began studying for the priesthood at Union Theological Seminary here and at Oxford University in England.

New Trends Stir Debate

By JOHN COGLEY

The two words that best describe contemporary Christianity are "ecumenism" and "secularity." Both throw light on some striking changes in religious life, changes that range from joint Protestant-Roman Catholic worship, through large-scale participation of clergy and nuns in the civil rights movement, to the successful appearance last week of an Episcopal priest, the Rev. Malcom Boyd, as a stand-up showman-preacher in San Francisco's hungry i, a popular nightclub in the North Beach area.

Without an understanding of the ecumenical spirit and a grasp of what contemporary thinkers have in mind when they talk about "secularity," much of the present, highly publicized activity of churchmen and other religiously concerned persons, is looked upon as merely shocking, or at best as flamboyantly showoff. It may well be in some gether in the "secularizing" of Christianity.

For long centuries, secularizing was looked upon not as a religious opportunity but as "secularism," a full-blown anti-religious ideology that would restrict the godly questions to private life and eliminate all traces of religious concern from public affairs. As such, it was applauded by the non- and anti-religious and generally decried by the religious.

The difference between the two movements, secularism and secularity, still counts for little for many. For example, there are those who look back with painful, and increasingly public, nostalgia to a "Christian" society, or at least a "religious" society. Sometimes the nostalgia goes all the way back to the medieval period. With others, it stops at an earlier time in this country when prayers were recited in the schools

The two words that best describe contemporary Christianity are "ecumenism" and "secularity." Both throw light on some striking changes in religious life, changes that range from joint Protestant-Roman Catholic worship, through large-scale participation of clergy and nuns in the civil rights movement, to the successful appearance last week of an Episcopal priest, the Rev. Malcom Boyd, as a stand-up showman-preacher in San Francisco's hungry i, a popular nightclub in the North Beach area.

Without an understanding of the ecumenical spirit and a grasp of what contemporary thinkers have in mind when they talk about "secularity," much of the present, highly publicized activity of churchmen and other religiously concerned persons, is looked upon as merely shocking, or at best as flamboyantly show-off. It may well be in some instances. However, there is method, too, in the seeming madness.

In a book just published by Duquesne University in Pittsburgh, "Church-State Relations in Ecumenical Perspective," one of the writers, Daniel Callahan of The Commonweal writes that historical movements are like people—they have to live down the gossip that their birth was illegitimate. Mr. Callahan points out that this was the fate originally suffered by the movements now known as ecumension and "secularity."

For decades, to bear out Mr. Callahan's argument with an example, ecumenism was widely regarded by leading Catholic prelates as theological indifferentism, the idea that beliefs, doctrines, and convictions are really unimportant and that one religion is as good (or as bad) as another.

Ecumenism, seen that way, was frowned upon as a meaningless expression of theological wishywashiness supported by benignly insipid platitudes about human brotherhood. The slightest hint of the ecumenical spirit consequently was frequently looked upon as a danger to theological virility.

Wishywashiness

For an example, look at the National Council of Christmas and Jews. Throughout three decades, it had a hard time rounding up Catholic priests who could get hierarchical permission to participate in its work. Last week, however, the National Conference in New York gave an award to Cardinal Spellman and three other Protestant, Eastern Orthodox, and Jewish leaders.

The general acceptance of Christian ecumenism and interfaith amity as desirable is now almost universal, though of course there are still holdouts. These objectors, however, have taken to writing prefaces for each other's books, the Protestants pointing out how much they admire the Catholic's unmoving devotion to his "principle," and the Catholics pointing out their deep respect for the Protestant who will not budge from his. So even among them, there is an ecumenical movement of sorts.

The success of ecumenism has meant that Roman Catholic, Protestant, and Eastern Orthodox Christians are increasingly able to work together in the "secularizing" of Christianity.

For long centuries, secularizing was looked upon not as a religious opportunity but as "secularism," a full-blown anti-religious ideology that would restrict the godly questions to private life and eliminate all traces of religious concern from public affairs. As such, it was applauded by the non- and anti-religious and generally decried by the religious.

The difference between the two movements, secularism and secularity, still counts for little for many. For example, there are those who look back with painful, and increasingly public, nostalgia to a "Christian" society, or at least a "religious" society. Sometimes the nostalgia goes all the way back to the medieval period. With others, it stops at an earlier time in this country when prayers were recited in the schools and other symbols of national godliness were upheld in the courts. But, wherever the line is drawn, these persons bravely oppose what they regard as the present vulgarization of religion and the defeat of certainty by easy "tolerance" and of the "spiritual" by cheap materialism. The social activists in the churches on the contrary, look upon the present openness of society not as a threat to religion but as an opportunity.

Nostalgia

There is tension between these two groups, in all the churches. For example, Triumph, the new conservative Catholic magazine published in Washington by Brent Bozwell, states that its founders were motivated by a desire to break the monopoly now enjoyed by "liberal" publications in the Catholic press. Triumph's editorial posture is that of an embattled minority, holding out with almost eschatological fervor against a "liberal" movement that promises to corrupt Christianity and destroy all the loveliness of life in the process.

Other examples of leading figures who did not like the way things were going and feared that "secularism" was totally overcoming Christianity were the brilliant English writers, T. S. Eliot and Evelyn Waugh, both of whom went to their graves believing that contemporary Christianity was undergoing some dark night of the soul but believing also, with a hope that they related to faith and charity, that the "religious" order of society would some day be regained.

The present generation of Christian activists, Catholic and Protestant alike, have no such hope. Nor would they wish to restore the past. They are content to believe that there is a connection between their religion and secular values and that these links should be stressed.

When they demonstrate for civil rights, for example, they believe that they are acting with Christian responsibility, though doing so in a secular style. If a priest among them should find that a nightclub provides him with a pulpit more effective than one he would find in a cathedral and the kind of congregation he would not be likely to find in a cathedral, he might well move into the night club, as Father Boyd has done.

Grenadans Weep in Church Over Negro Pupils' Beating

CHURCHES 9/19/66 AC.

By HOMER BIGART

(Copyright 1966 by The New York Times Co.)

GRENADA, Miss.—The first public display of contrition by citizens of Grenada over the beating of Negro school children by white mobs last Monday and Tuesday took place Sunday in the Methodist church.

At a call from the minister, more than half the members of a congregation of nearly 500 came before the altar to kneel and pray forgiveness. Some were weeping.

Meanwhile, Gov. Paul Johnson urged Mississippians to remain calm Monday when Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. visits Grenada. King was expected to arrive late Monday to conduct a rally. King plans to remain in Grenada through Tuesday.

In his sermon, the Rev. C. B. Burt lashed out at the "bestiality" of the white adults that whipped and stomped Negro children who integrated two previously all-white schools here early last week.

He said he witnessed some of the mob action. He said he had seen Negro children stumble in terror as they tried to evade pursuit from a crowd brandishing clubs and chains. "I could hardly believe my eyes," he said.

Among his congregation were Grenada City Manager J. E. McEachin, who has resigned under fire from extremist elements for his moderate stand on civil rights, and Bradford Dye, Grenada's prosecuting attorney, who is under similar attack but who refuses to resign.

No one walked out in protest when the Rev. Mr. Burt delivered the strongest rebuke yet heard from a Grenada native against the arch-segregationist element whose violence has put the city government under federal injunction to protect the Negro children.

Word that he intended to speak out against the violent element had spread through this delta town of 8,000 and the large red brick First Methodist church was filled to capacity for the morning service.

Burt said he did not suspect that any of his congregation had taken part in the violence. But he wanted the members to ask themselves whether they had done enough to forestall the "brutality" of last week.

As for himself he felt "a deep sense of guilt and shame" for not having been more outspoken on behalf of righteousness, law and order.

The churches of Mississippi have done too little to prepare the people for inevitable social change, he said. Some ministers who spoke up were branded as integrationists, he said, and the Mississippi conference of the Methodist church had lost some of its finest young preachers who had gone to other states.

"Somewhere, somehow, the church has failed when there is this kind of hate and bestiality in a city of this size," Burt said. "Where was the church when these seeds were planted?"

Dr. King Assails Churches on Rights

By GEORGE DUGAN
Special to The New York Times

DALLAS, Sept. 25—The Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. charged all of America's religious bodies tonight with "unfaithfulness" to their mission on the question of racial justice.

In a speech prepared for delivery at the Dallas Memorial Auditorium, the civil rights leader and head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference declared that in the midst of a nation "rife with racial animosity, the church too often has been content to mouth pious irrelevancies and sanctimonious trivialities."

Dr. King was one of three scheduled speakers at tonight's session of the annual meeting of the International Convention of Christian Churches (Disciples of Christ). The week-long assembly of the two-million-member body began on Friday.

Dr. King shared the platform with the Most Rev. John J. Wright, bishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Pittsburgh, and Rober G. Storey, a Dallas lawyer and former president of the American Bar Association.

Calls for New Deal

Called by God to combat evils, Dr. King said, "the church has often remained silent behind the safe security of stained glass windows."

"Called to lead men on the highway of brotherhood and to summon them to rise above the narrow confines of race and class," he said, "it has often been an active participant in shaping and crystalizing the patterns of the race-caste system."

The Negro leader warned more than 10,000 Disciples in his audience that the church must recapture its prophetic zeal or become "little more than an irrelevant social club with a thin veneer of religiosity."

In some communities of the South, he asserted, many churches are the "ready lackeys of state governments." In defiance of the Supreme Court's desegregation decisions they allow their religious education buildings to be used for private segregated schools, he charged, thus casting the mantle of sanctity over the system of segregation."

Hour of Segregation

"How often the church has ben an echo rather than a voice, a tail light behind the Supreme Court and other secular agencies, rather than a headlight guiding men progressively and decisively to higher levels of understanding," he observed.

It is not enough for religious bodies to be active in the realm of ideas only, Dr. King stressed.

The church, he emphasized, must first of all remove the "yoke of segregation from its own body."

"Only by doing this can it be effective in its attack on ouside evils. Eleven o'clock on Sunday morning is still the most segregated hour of the week," Dr. King said.

Bishop Wright was sharply critical of "muddle-headed people who love the human race, but despise the man next door."

Love for humanity is an illusion, he said, and many who profess most loudly their love for all humanity frequently turn out to be "frauds."

"You can only love persons," the Bishop contended and declared:

"You cannot love Negroes, nor Jews, nor Catholics, nor Democrats, nor bricklayers, nor intellectuals, nor deep sea divers as such, save, perhaps, in the very broad sense that, for special reasons and in cer- the company of these particularly congenial or you agree with these more than with these more than you are with Republicans, pearl fishers, Eskimos, Connecticut Yankees, Amish people or Daughters of the Eastern Star, precisely as such. We can only love persons."

Mr. Storey sharply attacked civil disobedience, contending that widespread failure to obey the law results in "anarchy."

Respect for the law is at a new low and Christians should encourage obedience to it, he said, and added:

"Some of the participants excuse themselves with the statement that the law against which they protest is itself illegal, but the decision of alleged illegality of laws, ordinances or regulations of political subdivisions, cities states or the nation is the sole responsibility of the courts of the land."

Mr. Storey, who is a former vice chairman of the United States Civil Rights Commission and was executive trial counsel for the United States at the Nuremberg war criminal trials, termed the war in Vietnam and law enforcement at home as the two great issues facing the nation.

Atlanta Baptists Back Fired Pastor

9/27/66

By DICK HEBERT

The three fired church leaders of a Baptist church on the edge of the Mercer University campus in Macon were commended by Atlanta Baptist pastors Monday for their stand against segregation which cost them their posts.

The three were asked to resign Sunday by the all-white congregation of the Tattnall Square Baptist Church in a 259 to 189 vote which climaxed a summer-long desegregation dispute. They handed in resignations Sunday night.

Monday, about 125 Atlanta area Baptist pastors met in their weekly conference and adopted by an overwhelming majority a resolution commending the three "for maintaining a Christ-like spirit in this matter," according to the resolution's author, the Rev. William H. Geren, pastor of East Point's Dogwood Hills Baptist Church.

The resolution was adopted after a lengthy debate over the pastors' right to interfere in the autonomous actions of a Baptist congregation.

An amendment not to release the resolution to the public was adopted by a 2-vote margin, but it was reliably reported that the measure supports the stand taken by the Macon pastor, the Rev. Dr. Thomas J. Holmes, his assistant pastor, Douglas Johnson, and music director Jack W. Jones.

The 75-year-old church, two doors away from Mercer University's administration building, now is without a staff. Deacons of the church were to meet Monday night to discuss future action.

CLOSED TO NEGROES

After two Negroes attended services June 26, deacons voted 12 to 9 to ask the congregation to fire the three churchmen, and the congregation voted to close its doors to Negroes. They voted Sunday 259 to 189 to ask for the three resignations.

The Rev. Geren said he drafted his resolution after his teenage son read an Atlanta Constitution account of the firings and asked him, "What do you think about that?"

It was reported that there was some effort at the pastor's conference to refrain from naming the church in the resolution but it was defeated after debate.

INVITED BY TV

Meanwhile, the Tattnall Square controversy continued to gather national attention Monday. Dr. Holmes said he has been invited to appear on a national television panel show.

"I had no idea it was going to reach quite the dimensions it has reached," Dr. Holmes commented.

It was learned that two unidentified Baptist churches in Georgia adopted open-door policies after the Tattnall Square dispute reached public attention. Other churches also began "intensifying their efforts to wrestle with this problem and open their doors," one church source said

NEW CAMPUS CHURCH

And in another development it was reported that a group of persons in the Mercer University area have approached Dr. Holmes about forming another campus area church.

Dr. Holmes verified the report and described it as a "live option." He said, "I don't know what will come of it. I'm not sure I want to go through with it because I wouldn't want it to come into existence motivated by the strife conditions."

Also Monday, a Negro Mercer student who was forcibly kept out of the church Sunday shortly before the congregation voted to oust its leaders described his Sunday encounter as "a faith - shattering experience."

GHANA STUDENT

Sam Jerry Oni, 25, a student from Ghana who was the first Negro to attend Mercer three years ago, was kept in a police car at the church until he agreed to leave peacefully Sunday.

In an interview Monday he said, "I have been living with this nonsense of segregation in the church for the past three years. It's been an agonizing experience and it's been a faith-shattering experience."

He said he plans to continue seeking admittance to the church.

In November, 1964, The Lutheran Witness commented on the Nobel Prize awarded to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. There were those who immediately responded to the article, criticizing both Dr. King and the Witness for casting him in a favorable light.

It is to be expected that there will be some who take exception also to a statement made recently by the President of the American Lutheran Church, Dr. Fredrik A. Schiotz:

> "Many well-intentioned people have been critical of Dr. King, calling him a Communist. The time for indulging in this luxury is over. It is time for all who believe in justice under law to pray for and speak well of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference."

That Lutherans should participate in the rampant character defamation against Dr. King is especially surprising. Every Lutheran child learns at an early age the words that the Great Reformer Martin Luther composed to explain the commandment THOU SHALT NOT BEAR FALSE WITNESS AGAINST THY NEIGHBOR: "We should fear and love God that we may not deceitfully belie, betray, slander, nor defame our neighbor; but defend him, speak well of him, and put the best construction on everything" that the neighbor says and does.

Without intending to solicit financial support for his work and without attempting to endorse his theology, the Vanguard would urge Dr. King's critics to stay their pens and keep back their words until they have considered the following propositions:

Institute Calls For Inner City "Plan"

The plan that the Church must use for an effectual ministry to our great cities is "the Christ Plan," the Reverend Paul Schulze said to those attending Valparaiso University's Institute on Human Relations July 22-24. Pastor Schulze, son of Dr. Andrew Schulze, LHRAA's Director of Research, serves in an inner city ministry in Portland, Oregon.

"The Christ Plan," he explained, begins with "incarnation. . . God's Son abandoned heaven and totally involved Himself, completely identified Himself with the beaten one, the lost. . .He simply came to be with people as one of them, to minister, to serve, not to be served. To share, to shoulder, to ease the burden, to let in hope, that men might be reclaimed for better things. . . .

PASTOR JOHN LIGNELL

Dear Friends in Christ:

America's big problem has now become our community's big problem.

We have been put to the test by the Chicago Freedom Movement.

The response of the people of our community has made headlines.

But have the headlines and newscasts really presented the true response? I do not believe so. For two and a half days this week I have spent most of my time conferring with religious and civic leaders of our community and Synod.

A majority of the people have responded well. They have remained sane and sober. They have not surrendered to all the demands made upon them, but they have been willing to keep their minds open and listen. They have shared their concern about their safety and stability, and the value of their property. This is good. They have also been mindful of the rights of others. This, too, is good.

For too long, we have avoided this problem. Now instead of becoming victims of despair, we are doing what we should have been working harder to do for years; organizations like the Gage Park Civic Association are working to become more than a shadow of the community. I cite this organization as one hope for the future because it has been willing; in fact, eager, to listen to the Church.

The Church should be heard, and the Church has a message. The angels descended to earth on the night that Christ was born and sang, "Peace, goodwill among men." This is what mankind needs, and our community is no exception.

I am heartened to observe that the people of our community who would stoop to trouble-making and rabble-rousing are a minority. If this neighborhood is ever ruined, it will be their doing. The N-

Speakers Challenge Church

PEACEMAKER

In November, 1964, The Lutheran Witness commented on the Nobel Prize awarded to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. There were those who immediately responded to the article, criticizing both Dr. King and the Witness for casting him in a favorable light.

It is to be expected that there will be some who take exception also to a statement made recently by the President of the American Lutheran Church, Dr. Fredrik A. Schiotz:

"Many well-intentioned people have been critical of Dr. King, calling him a Communist. The time for indulging in this luxury is over. It is time for all who believe in justice under law to pray for and speak well of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference."

That Lutherans should participate in the rampant character defamation against Dr. King is especially surprising. Every Lutheran child learns at an early age the words that the Great Reformer Martin Luther composed to explain the commandment THOU SHALT NOT BEAR FALSE WITNESS AGAINST THY NEIGHBOR: "We should fear and love God that we may not deceitfully belie, betray, slander, nor defame our neighbor; but defend him, speak well of him, and put the best construction on everything" that the neighbor says and does.

Without intending to solicit financial support for his work and without attempting to endorse his theology, the Vanguard would urge Dr. King's critics to stay their pens and keep back their words until they have considered the following propositions:

1. When people peacefully gather for the purpose of "petition or remonstrance for redress of grievance," they are clearly within their constitutional rights. It is the sworn responsibility of government to protect people who are exercising those rights.
2. Dr. King has consistently urged such procedure as a morally right alternative to disorderly, violent protest. (Recall his 1963 expedition into an inflamed Birmingham Negro community, urging surrender of arms in order that non-violence might characterize their response to injustice.)
3. When violence has occurred at the site of non-violent demonstrations, it has chiefly been the demonstrators and, in some cases, those protecting them, who have been victims of violence. While the demonstrations themselves were non-violent, the response in such instances was violent.
4. The hate expressed in violent reactions against demonstrators has not been engendered by the demonstrations, but has been aggravated by our patterns of exclusiveness and segregation, and has been exposed in such demonstrations. Clearly then, it is this hate—or its passive companion, lovelessness—that needs to be confronted and dealt with rather than the demonstrators.
5. It is important to note that when the 1966 summer riots and violence first shook Chicago, they were instigated by Negroes—a relatively miniscule number, to be sure, but people who knew no other way to express their frustrations except explosively. But when Dr. King appeared on the scene, a Negro to whom other Negroes could entrust leadership, and when this man urged non-violent expression of protest against their plight, they listened.
6. At that point, rioting by Negroes ended. They had no need to express themselves through violence any longer. Their protests and needs were communicated by Dr. King's marches. There were signs of hope. But now, whites turned to violence—turning and burning of cars, throwing bottles and stones, even at nuns.
7. To discredit Martin Luther King, his marches and his non-violent procedure, and to deny the rights he calls for is to endanger his effectiveness and to undercut his leadership and his influence in the Negro community. If his procedure is not trusted or proves fruitless, the possibilities—and probabilities—that remain in this tense hour are irresponsible and violent leadership or impromptu and spontaneous explosive riots of protest. And those who participate in undercutting Dr. King—or who stand idly by when he needs active endorsement—will be partners in a grave crime against the man and against a city that might have been spared bloodshed and agonies.
8. To those who say, "Had the demonstrators not marched, the whites would not have responded in violence," the answer must be given: "Had the whites attended to the injustices, indignities and dire needs of the Negro, there would have been neither marches nor riots."
9. In any case, the Christian's call to love, to edify, to enrich and to forgive his neighbor is an unconditional call and has nothing to do with whether the person to be loved is himself loving, appreciative or Christian. Our call is to reflect the love of God Who gave His Son into death for us, in spite of our unloveableness.

Institute Calls For Inner City "Plan"

The plan that the Church must use for an effectual ministry to our great cities is "the Christ Plan," the Reverend Paul Schulze said to those attending Valparaiso University's Institute on Human Relations July 22-24. Pastor Schulze, son of Dr. Andrew Schulze, LHRAA's Director of Research, serves in an inner city ministry in Portland, Oregon.

"The Christ Plan," he explained, begins with "incarnation. . . God's Son abandoned heaven and totally involved Himself, completely identified Himself with the beaten one, the lost. . .He simply came to be with people as one of them, to minister, to serve, not to be served. To share, to shoulder, to ease the burden, to let in hope, that men might be reclaimed for better things. . . .

"The style and strategy of this plan is one that penetrates and identifies, discovers and sympathizes even with the 'enemy.' It shares and shoulders the other man's burdens and lot in life. . . I AM CALLED TO SEE TO IT THAT THE OTHER MAN'S CONDITION IS RICHER THAN IT WAS BECAUSE OF MY PRESENCE WITH HIM, NOT BECAUSE I AM MORE IMPORTANT THAN HE BUT BECAUSE MY REDEMPTIVE INVASION OF HIS CIRCUMSTANCES REMINDS US BOTH THAT GOD HAS RECLAIMED US ALL IN CHRIST JESUS."

Pastor Schulze pointed out that this plan of Christ to invade human society demands that we "learn its language and sympathize with its problems. . .Sad to say, the church has too often abandoned the role of the prophet. She has gone into the palace, but she has lain on the king's lap. Determined to succeed and fearful lest she die, she has too often begged for favors from city hall and in the process has lost her leverage for moving the city fathers to necessary changes."

A readiness to follow Christ's plan, he concluded, "is a readiness to die. This," he explained, "means of course a readiness to abandon some of the forms and customs to which we have become accustomed—some of our idols. Only Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today and forever. Everything else must change, or be changed."

soon thereafter, and found in it this letter from their pastor:

PASTOR JOHN LIGNELL

Dear Friends in Christ:

America's big problem has now become our community's big problem.

We have been put to the test by the Chicago Freedom Movement.

The response of the people of our community has made headlines.

But have the headlines and newscasts really presented the true response? I do not believe so. For two and a half days this week I have spent most of my time conferring with religious and civic leaders of our community and Synod.

A majority of the people have responded well. They have remained sane and sober. They have not surrendered to all the demands made upon them, but they have been willing to keep their minds open and listen. They have shared their concern about their safety and stability, and the value of their property. This is good. They have also been mindful of the rights of others. This, too, is good.

For too long, we have avoided this problem. Now instead of becoming victims of despair, we are doing what we should have been working harder to do for years; organizations like the Gage Park Civic Association are working to become more than a shadow of the community. I cite this organization as one hope for the future because it has been willing; in fact, eager, to listen to the Church.

The Church should be heard, and the Church has a message. The angels descended to earth on the night that Christ was born and sang, "Peace, goodwill among men." This is what mankind needs, and our community is no exception.

I am heartened to observe that the people of our community who would stoop to trouble-making and rabble-rousing are a minority. If this neighborhood is ever ruined, it will be their doing. The Negroes will not ruin it. They want to be assured that they have the right to live here, but they do not want another "ghetto." They want to know that they will not be forced to live only in certain neighborhoods forever.

I know that the civil rights movement is not without sin, and I have voiced criticism of some of their tactics, but the intelligent thing to do is to listen to them, not to close our ears or run away. We are not without sin, but their leaders are well advised to hear us and enter into sympathy with our concerns.

No one can predict the future, but I would say that with the efforts of people of good will now working toward solutions to these problems, our community will remain a good community. And as one leader in the community has said, "It is not enough to talk about preserving our community; we must work to improve it." Gage Park and her sister neighborhoods do not have to be "on the way down;" they can and should be "on the way up," and there are certainly possibilities that this can come about.

Looking at all of this from a practical point of view, we can say that our neighborhood is just one of many that will be so confronted in the next year or two. People talk about moving where the Negroes will never move in. The day can come when there will not be such a place.

Ours was the first community to be confronted by the Chicago Freedom Movement. In a sense, this makes us pioneers. The rest of the world is looking at these few square miles to see what we are going to do. It is tragic that the publicity has been given to the wrong people, but if we keep our heads, some day the world will know that the real heroes are the people of good will who are working quietly but effectively, to increase the reputation of this community, which has always been regarded as a good place to live. They are the ones, if you'll excuse the expression, "who shall overcome."

Sincerely, in Christ's work,
John E. Lignell, Pastor

Institute Asks "What About Children?"

The Reverend Ben Hill, educator, minister and editor from Tulsa, Oklahoma, described the plight of countless whose lives have run close to his own:

"There are children where we live who have never seen the stars, either imaginary or real. Shrouded in moral midnight from the beginning, they are children of the amoral. The cold, heartless, broken down, abandoned inner city strips humanity of its ideals; and the true nature of our fallen humanity is revealed. Here a rejected people—with its family completely destroyed as a result of slavery—is isolated with no guideline and no help, left with a sense of being unwanted. The sense of personal worth is destroyed. Frustrated ambition leads to defiance of social regulations—not a people who have lost controls, but a people who never had controls.

"I've seen them foundering in the dark—grasping, pushing, trying to rise—only to sink in the final despair of 'What's the use!'"

Pastor Hill told of children "steeped in chronic neglect. . . where we live there is a small army of these—waifs without warmth, babes without comfort, improperly fed—unwashed and unwanted. Should they live into a tomorrow, what kind of tomorrow will it be?"

Worse yet, Pastor Hill sees Negro children "in morbid exile. . . children sinking into tasteless

REPORTS FROM Chicago

By DAVID NELSON

The Reverend David Nelson has been pastor of Bethel Lutheran Church (LCA) on Chicago's west side for one year now. Bethel, about 70 years of age, had long served a largely white constituency. Since Pastor Nelson's arrival, program emphasis has shifted to serve also the more immediate neighbors of the church, who are for the most part Negro.

On a hot summer day in August, 1965, a small riot broke out in West Garfield Park, one of Chicago's West Side communities. Roots of the riot lay in the pressures of ghetto living—unemployment, poor and over-crowded housing, bad education, exploitation by merchants, and other ills. Immediate catalyst for this incident was a situation surrounding an all-white fire station in the heart of a Negro community.

Negroes had sought to integrate the station all summer to no avail. Then, on August 12, the trigger event occurred. The station's hook and ladder truck responded to a fire call, but reportedly because some of the firemen had been drinking, no one was on the steering end of the trailer. As the truck moved out, the trailer swung like a giant sickle, hitting and killing an innocent Negro bystander. The community, patience already stretched, erupted in violence.

With quick police action the incident was limited to the West Garfield Park area. A hastily formed "committee of thirteen" was chosen by the community to meet with the mayor to air grievances. A list of seven necessary changes to improve the community was clergymen found that words would no longer suffice. The crowd, filled with promises made and broken, no longer would be stopped by words. In our community (West Garfield Park), the 1966 incidents brought scattered window-breaking, arson, and gunfire.

The churches in the community set up a twenty-four hour communications headquarters. Local pastors went out in groups of two, seeking to talk with people they knew on the streets, asking them to return home.

After one such vigil, I was driving home to the parsonage, and had just gotten out of the car when a single shot rang out, the bullet whistling overhead. I could see no one in the direction of the shot, and no more shots were fired.

Now, these weeks later, we can pause and ask—why did all this happen, what hadn't the churches in the community and beyond done, how are we responsible? To lay down any easy answers would be presumptuous and naive, but we can point to some things which have stood out in the church's actions and reactions.

First, the churches for the most part identified with the "status quo." When the community began been in the form of "safe," paternalistic, "band-aid" projects which seldom strike at the real problems but more often at their symptoms. The solution doesn't lie so much in working with the end product of the ghetto as with changing of the ghetto pattern. The ghetto pattern forces Negroes, who make up twenty-five per cent of Chicago's population, to live in ten per cent of the geographic area. It forces rents by the same token to be higher in a ghetto slum than in fine white communities.

The whole pattern of segregation must be destroyed. In Christ every wall of separation has been removed, and when society erects walls, but separates men, it sins, and does injustice to God's humanity. These walls must be removed, whether they occur in housing, schools, employment, or in church.

But we can point with hope to some glimmerings on the horizon. In our community, the churches, now recognizing the tremendous work that needs to be done in the cities, have banded together in a cooperative called "The Christian Action Ministry." Projects in housing, employment, education, counselling, and other areas have been undertaken in an attempt to serve the whole community and not just those in church. As the community sees barriers between denominations falling as the churches began to witness to their one-ness in Christ, a ray of hope is given that other barriers including segregation, might fall, too.

What more must we do? The church must acknowledge the crisis that faces our American cities—and bend itself to serving the new day rather than preserving the old. No patching or surface work will do—it must completely retool itself. Bold experimentation in city ministry is needed. Worker

With quick police action the incident was limited to the West Garfield Park area. A hastily formed "committee of thirteen" was chosen by the community to meet with the mayor to air grievances. A list of seven necessary changes to improve the community was agreed upon by the mayor and the committee, and action was promised by the city.

By the summer of 1966, one year later, NOT ONE of the seven items promised by the city had been fulfilled. Pressures in the ghetto community continued to build. There was no relief.

Again the hot days came, and with them, action. Catalyst this time in releasing the pressures of the ghetto in violence was centered around the opening of fire hydrants by youth in an attempt to cool off. An arrest attempt was made by police at a hydrant on the near West Side. A crowd gathered, reacting against the police. The reaction spread, this time not limiting itself to one community, but involving the whole West Side.

Store windows were broken at random, as groups of youth indiscriminately hit both friend and foe. Signs reading "Soul Brother," or "Blood Brother," went up on many windows as store owners attempted to avert the bricks.

As the situation grew hotter, Dr. Martin Luther King called clergymen together in an early attempt to calm the situation. The clergymen found that words would no longer suffice. The crowd, filled with promises made and broken, no longer would be stopped by words. In our community (West Garfield Park), the 1966 incidents brought scattered window-breaking, arson, and gunfire.

To lay down any easy answers would be presumptuous and naive, but we can point to some things which have stood out in the church's actions and reactions.

First, the churches for the most part identified with the "status quo." When the community began changing, the new Negro residents were not welcomed by the churches. The church often became a symbol of rejection by whites, and thus the Negroes avoided them.

Secondly, in almost the same light, the church at large has been silent to the injustices suffered by the Negro community, injustices imposed upon them by the ghetto pattern. A Negro gang leader, speaking to church leaders about the causes of the riot, asked these leaders "How can you let us live like this down here?" The churches have most often spoken to the white community. But in such communication we have not wanted to discuss white exploitation of Negroes in the matter of housing rents, in stores, in credit, and in employment situations. When the Negro brother has been hurt the white Christian has largely been silent. Perhaps we have not chosen to see them but we have allowed these injustices to exist, and by our failure to protest we have given assent.

And thirdly, even when some attempts have been made by the church to move in on the problems, these attempts have often but more often at the [illegible] The solution doesn't lie so much in working with the end product of the ghetto as with changing of the ghetto pattern. No patching or surface work will do—it must completely retool itself. Bold experimentation in city ministry is needed. Worker priests, industrial missions, cell-group centers, apartment ministries, community organization work, are a part. More experiments are needed. Cadres of Christians need to be formed, people who are willing to live the ministry of reconciliation, to integrate by either moving back into the city or by welcoming Negro residents into their blocks.

It is too late to argue the question of integration. What is needed now is a whole-hearted commitment on the part of the church to deal with the crisis we face, whatever the cost in lost membership or offerings. The church must be willing to die to live. It is called to serve, to bend itself to mission.

The truth is plain. The ghetto pattern imposed by society on the Negro community is sin. Every barrier must be broken down, and is in Christ.

Another gang member said to the group of church leaders gathered at the Church Federation of Greater Chicago, "You have our lives in your hands. I hold you responsible!" We are responsible. We are our brother's keeper. Now we must act. Now.

Compared to other cities of comparable size, Baltimore has been quiet this summer. News concerning racial disturbances during the past weeks concerned itself with the court injunction which forbade the National States Rights Party to conduct anti-Negro rallies in public parks. The tone of these rallies was so low that Mayor McKeldin referred to "the inflammatory, degrading, insulting tirades indulged in by these alien agitators." The injunction—now extended to cover the rest of the summer—was based on the riot-inciting nature of the rallies. Those who screamed "Free speech!" were reminded that freedom of speech does not include the right to shout "Fire!" in a crowded theater.

Baltimore's Negro community has enjoyed relative peace this summer. Property damage has been minimal. One hesitates to "explain" this for fear one's analysis will blow up in one's face. After all, Baltimore has all the conditions which contribute to riotous outbreaks, yet we in Baltimore have good hopes that they will not happen.

Perhaps the best way to explain this is that there is a spirit of hope that something is happening and will happen. CORE's activity has contributed much to this mood of hopefulness. Open occupancy has been announced by several apartment house owners. Even numerous bars—including those on Baltimore's notorious "Block"—have been desegregated. CORE has established a Freedom School and has been active in unionizing certain previously neglected segments of the labor group. CORE members also deserve a great deal of credit for circulating through the adjoining Negro areas to encourage Negroes to avoid the Patterson Park vicinity while the anti-Negro rally was in progress.

Job Corps and Youth Employment activities have probably contributed something to stabilizing feelings in our city. It has been pointed out that Baltimore has a relatively low unemployment figure—3.5% in the overall population and 5.7% in the Negro group.

Much credit must be given Mayor Theodore R. McKeldin and acting police commissioner, Gen. Geo. M. Gelston. Both have left no doubt about their deep interest and concern. Gen. Gelston, known nationally as the commanding officer of the state militia which kept the peace in the Cambridge disturbances two years ago, has established a fine rapport with the Negro community. The Community Relations Committee of the police department, headed by a Negro, is on the job and attempts to attack each problem as it arises. His stationing of a large police force in and around Patterson Park was an announcement to the people of Baltimore that could not be misunderstood.

Activities of church leaders have been prominent in the news. Teams of clergymen are on call at all times to assist in quieting a troubled neighborhood. A chain telephone system has been set up by which one telephone call would establish contact with more than fifty clergymen in a matter of minutes. On the day of the Patterson Park rally, fifty-five clergymen—Episcopal, Catholic, Lutheran, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist—participated in an intensive three-hour door to door blanketing of the trouble area, while fifteen others remained on call at the police station that night, ready to go out immediately if needed.

We are thankful for the peace that was. But we dare not forget that the basic conditions which lead to frustration and hatred, and ultimately foment riots, still exist in Baltimore. As long as Negro education is second-rate, as long as unemployment for Negroes remains greater than unemployment in the white community, slum housing remains with its overcrowding and attendant evils, and as long as the majority of the white population maintain a prejudiced attitude towards Negroes, disturances will arise.

Christian leaders in the entire city must make it a matter of first concern to build a community in which each individual knows himself to be an important part and in which he enjoys the wealth of opportunities which our country has to offer. In the neighborhood in which St. Matthew Lutheran Church has established a center of Christian activity, staff members are actively engaged in the Neighborhood Action Group. George Staples, a Prince of Peace Volunteer, is in charge of a neighborhood survey. The purpose is the building of a better community through self-help.

Unity of purpose between civic officials, police, church leaders, and local civil rights groups and willingness on the part of all these to back up this purpose—with special emphasis on open housing—with direct action would seem to be the best hope for peace in any city. And Baltimore has this to a high degree.

description, appraisal, comment by pastors who work there

Omaha

By R. JENKINS

Born and educated in the south, Pastor Jenkins' first parish experiences were also derived from the south. On the scene in Omaha for almost a dozen years, as pastor of Hope Lutheran Church, he has seen not only the city grow, but also its racial problems, which finally exploded in Omaha's streets this summer.

In 1957 Omaha was listed with the few metropolitan areas in the United States as an All-American City. The underlying reason for this distinction was the massive strides made by city government, changing from the home rule charter to the city planner type. Almost anyone would imagine that life in all All-American City would offer peace and satisfaction to its population.

Many of the citizens of Omaha were satisfied with the "status quo" but there was a minority of the minority that was content neither with the bad administration of city government nor the implementation of its laws. This group consisted mostly of young Negro adults who were unable to identify with the middle-class Negro that was being partially accepted by the whites. There were others that were unable to find ways to present their grievances to the constituted authority for proper consideration. This group was disgusted with the "Uncle Tom" activities of many self-appointed leaders or "representatives" from the Near North Side. These self-appointed leaders had much to say to the Governor, to Unemployment played a major role in the precipitation of the unwholesome incidents of the past weeks in Omaha. If a person has to walk around with no money in his pockets, no job, and only a dark outlook for the future, there is the possibility that anything can happen. It must be remembered that such persons feel they have nothing to lose. When repeated attempts for employment are made and one is constantly given the "run around" a person is likely to become frustrated. This is the type that was accused (some found guilty) of malicious destruction of property, looting and vandalism on the night of July 4th and on three occasions since then, resulting in more than 136 arrests. To imagine that the brick throwing, window smashing and looting was not premeditated cannot be correct. One needs only to observe the windows that were repeatedly broken to discern that there were reasons behind the actions. It could be that they had been mistreated in these places of business. There is the possibility that their friends were insulted, or that they were denied work in those places because of the color of their skin.

of the Lutheran Church? These Negro youths are the ones that were bypassed, as Christians claimed to be busy doing mission work in far away lands. They were the ones that were ignored while the youth of suburbia were being saturated with the love of Christ and beautiful church buildings were being erected elsewhere. They were overlooked when jobs were available. These were shunned and shortchanged when recreational facilities were distributed; they were denied decent housing and the opportunity for a well rounded education. It seems as if the church for the most part forgot all about them.

Many of the Christians are apparently asleep, for most of them have done nothing in a constructive way to rectify matters. A few of them have had their little group meetings to condemn the Negro and to say that he has set back his cause for another twenty years and to say that his lot here is so much better than down south. But as for getting to the core of the matter and advancing to the forefront of the battle, to become involved in the real issues, few have stood up to be counted—nothing has been done. The Governor, the Mayor and the city fathers have made some feeble attempts to cover over the sores; but one does not cure a cancer by anointing it with butter.

It is time for the church to open its eyes and see that these people also need Jesus, not only the message of His redemption, but all the riches of His grace; which according to Luther's explanation of the fourth petition of our Lord's Prayer includes a decent home, peace, protection, employment and a fully developed and enjoyable life. As yet, those disturbed youth cannot

Cleveland

By RAY L. MIKLETHUN

Pastor Miklethun is a clergyman of the American Lutheran Church serving the National Lutheran Council as Lutheran Campus Pastor for greater Cleveland. He serves at Western Reserve University, Case Institute of Technology and Cleveland State University.

For a first-hand account of what happened in the Cleveland riot this summer, Pastor Miklethun interviewed the Reverend James Cook, LCA pastor serving the Hough community from his store-front quarters called "Shepherd of the Street."

The current outpouring of violence in metropolitan areas erupted in Cleveland on Monday, July 18 and continued through the end of the week. Four persons — all Negroes — were killed during the riots, three by unidentified bullets and the fourth by a small group of "vigilantes" from a nearby white neighborhood. The fire department found it necessary to send its men and equipment from fire to fire throughout four nights to quell the rash of "fired" buildings. Looting was widespread. Mayor Locher's request for National Guard assistance brought 1500 troops into the city by Tuesday evening. For the next week the central portion of the city's East Side was transformed by the martial appearance of troop trucks, patroling jeeps and machine guns. By R. JENKINS

Born and educated in the south, Pastor Jenkins' first parish experiences were also derived from the south. On the scene in Omaha for almost a dozen years, as pastor of Hope Lutheran Church, he has seen not only the city grow, but also its racial problems, which finally exploded in Omaha's streets this summer.

In 1957 Omaha was listed with the few metropolitan areas in the United States as an All-American City. The underlying reason for this distinction was the massive strides made by city government, changing from the home rule charter to the city planner type. Almost anyone would imagine that life in all All-American City would offer peace and satisfaction to its population.

Many of the citizens of Omaha were satisfied with the "status quo" but there was a minority of the minority that was content neither with the bad administration of city government nor the implementation of its laws. This group consisted mostly of young Negro adults who were unable to identify with the middle-class Negro that was being partially accepted by the whites. There were others that were unable to find ways to present their grievances to the constituted authority for proper consideration. This group was disgusted with the "Uncle Tom" activities of many self-appointed leaders or "representatives" from the Near North Side. These self-appointed leaders had much to say to the Governor, to the Mayor and to the City Council on how to stop the uprisings; but before this time they had had nothing to offer and had really not addressed themselves to real problems of the community. Police brutality—in language and action—was one of the chief topics of talk on the Near North Side. In the hope of rectifying matters, a Police Community Relations Organization was organized. The Executive Secretary of the Mayor's Human Relations Board was responsible for the new group's activities under the chairmanship of a Negro attorney. When complaints were brought to this group, defense of the police department and justification for its activities and methods were attempted by the Chief of Police or other high ranking officers.

Unemployment played a major role in the precipitation of the unwholesome incidents of the past weeks in Omaha. If a person has to walk around with no money in his pockets, no job, and only a dark outlook for the future, there is the possibility that anything can happen. It must be remembered that such persons feel they have nothing to lose. When repeated attempts for employment are made and one is constantly given the "run around" a person is likely to become frustrated. This is the type that was accused (some found guilty) of malicious destruction of property, looting and vandalism on the night of July 4th and on three occasions since then, resulting in more than 136 arrests. To imagine that the brick throwing, window smashing and looting was not premeditated cannot be correct. One needs only to observe the windows that were repeatedly broken to discern that there were reasons behind the actions. It could be that they had been mistreated in these places of business. There is the possibility that their friends were insulted, or that they were denied work in those places because of the color of their skin.

It is not always easy to say just which is the right way to accomplish a goal. The rock throwing was not the proper one. But as I stood on the corner of 24th and Lake streets in the heart of the Omaha "ghetto" at 3:30 a.m. on August 1st, attempting to curb the violence, and when I saw angry cops stop and search every automobile with as many as three Negro youth in it, and saw them run their cruisers in front of me and demand that I go another way, when I was doing nothing contrary to the law, I could begin to understand.

What had the church in Omaha been doing before these things happened? Has it been the real salt of the community? Have the needs of these young people been the concern of the white brother bypassed, as Christians claimed to be busy doing mission work in far away lands. They were the ones that were ignored while the youth of suburbia were being saturated with the love of Christ and beautiful church buildings were being erected elsewhere. They were overlooked when jobs were available. These were shunned and shortchanged when recreational facilities were distributed; they were denied decent housing and the opportunity for a well rounded education. It seems as if the church for the most part forgot all about them.

Many of the Christians are apparently asleep, for most of them have done nothing in a constructive way to rectify matters. A few of them have had their little group meetings to condemn the Negro and to say that he has set back his cause for another twenty years and to say that his lot here is so much better than down south. But as for getting to the core of the matter and advancing to the forefront of the battle, to become involved in the real issues, few have stood up to be counted—nothing has been done. The Governor, the Mayor and the city fathers have made some feeble attempts to cover over the sores; but one does not cure a cancer by anointing it with butter.

It is time for the church to open its eyes and see that these people also need Jesus, not only the message of His redemption, but all the riches of His grace; which according to Luther's explanation of the fourth petition of our Lord's Prayer includes a decent home, peace, protection, employment and a fully developed and enjoyable life. As yet, these disturbed youth cannot see why their Christ must meet with them in a dilapidated shack in the slums, while He meets with his white brother in some of the finest of stately structures elsewhere. The church must realize that the love of Christ must be put to action; that no longer can we say that we love the neighbor in the heart without manifesting that love in our words and conduct. The subtle discrimination and the open segregation must go! Members of the church can no longer divorce themselves from the problems and needs of the community and hide behind some pious sounding rationalizing to avoid doing their duty as Christian citizens. What has happened was bad, but unless we shoulder our responsibilities as the children of God it can be far worse.

Described sometimes as a "listening ministry", Pastor Cook's SHEPHERD OF THE STREET quarters are only a short distance from where Cleveland riot erupted.

By RAY L. MIKLETHUN

Pastor Miklethun is a clergyman of the American Lutheran Church serving the National Lutheran Council as Lutheran Campus Pastor for greater Cleveland. He serves at Western Reserve University, Case Institute of Technology and Cleveland State University.

For a first-hand account of what happened in the Cleveland riot this summer, Pastor Miklethun interviewed the Reverend James Cook, LCA pastor serving the Hough community from his store-front quarters called "Shepherd of the Street."

The current outpouring of violence in metropolitan areas erupted in Cleveland on Monday, July 18 and continued through the end of the week. Four persons — all Negroes — were killed during the riots, three by unidentified bullets and the fourth by a small group of "vigilantes" from a nearby white neighborhood. The fire department found it necessary to send its men and equipment from fire to fire throughout four nights to quell the rash of "fired" buildings. Looting was widespread. Mayor Locher's request for National Guard assistance brought 1500 troops into the city by Tuesday evening. For the next week the central portion of the city's East Side was transformed by the martial appearance of troop trucks, patroling jeeps and machine guns. Bars and night clubs in the affected area were closed and street lights along the main artery of the area called Hough (rhymes with "rough") were dimmed.

The sequence of events that triggered the riot is not clear. No evidence has been presented by anyone to support the Cuyahoga County Grand Jury's conclusion that the riot was "planned, precipitated and executed" by communist agitators. Even the police under-cover agents who infiltrated local radical groups could offer no evidence that these organizations had either planned or exploited the riots.

A series of bitter, hateful and uncouth rebuffs to Negroes precipitated the violence. The attempt of a young woman to collect funds in a tavern for funeral flowers for a twenty-three year old prostitute friend who had died of a heart attack was met by foul words from a white owner and an order to leave the premises. Later a Negro patron at that same tavern asked for a glass of water with his drink. His request was denied with a curse, because he was a "nigger." When a sign was posted on the bar's door reading, "no niggers allowed," crowds began to gather and mill outside. Police were summoned and soon the riot began.

Nonetheless, the stupidity of attributing the events of these four days in July to any single incident or to the efforts of any organized group is patent to anyone who knows the Hough ghetto at all. The truth is that this area has been so neglected by the city's administration and has experienced so many broken promises that even among those who deplored the violence, there was a tacit nod of consent.

Angered and disappointed by the Grand Jury report, local civil rights groups are presently conducting a review of the riots. The drearily consistent story that emerged from the first night's testimony was of intolerable housing conditions, compounded by a nearly total breakdown of code enforcement and inferior service in garbage collection; of discrimination in employment; of overcrowded, inadequate schools; of local grocers glutting the price of their merchandise and raising prices further to coincide with the receipt of ADC checks in the area; and of such frequent rotation of police officers that any personal relationship or growth in understanding is rendered impossible. The mood of the residents is summed up in the comment of a woman who, when asked if she was angry at her incarceration by police without formal arrest, said, "Angry? . . . I was mad!" The plight of ghetto residents is sounded in the cry of a young man, "Who will protect us from our protectors?" One sensed that he meant more than the police.

There is evidence that some segments of the city are responding to what has been called an "SOS." Housing inspectors are being assigned to Hough, local youths have been employed for a massive clean-up campaign, several church groups are responding with support for job training and housing programs. The question, however, is whether any long-term commitment to the irradication of the conditions that spawn riots is present.

When this writer asked the Reverend James Cook, pastor of Shepherd of the Street Lutheran Mission (LCA) and one of the most knowledgeable local Lutherans, what Lutherans had been doing to express their concern for the city and its ghettos, his reply was direct and short, "Nothing." That point can hardly be over-exaggerated. Lutherans have done almost nothing to ameliorate racial tension in their own congregations. During the past two years, a time of continuing racial tension, the local chapter of LHRAA went defunct. Members transfer from one congregation to another to escape life together with Negroes. Currently, a mission congregation is conveniently being established to provide an alternate church home for disgruntled members of one parish in a "changing neighborhood." In some cases parochial schools provide a means for Lutherans to escape integrated public education.

In only a few and isolated cases are Lutherans joining with fellow Christians to respond to the crisis. The pathos of Lutheranism in this city is not its ill will but its blindness. Have we been establishing religious societies on the basis of more than faith and baptism, preaching a truncated, pseudo-gospel, unable to realize the fellowship of all believers in our own quarters? If that is the case, perhaps we can not afford a glimpse at the larger community. That would remind us of our own faithlessness.

Editor's Note:

A Missouri Synod "Gospel Center," serving the Hough Area, was organized in 1937. Its dedicated pastor, the Reverend Oswald Volz, has just retired from his ministry this summer.

The work at the Center was begun about thirty years ago. In 1965 its communicant membership was reported as 60. The Center seems most effective in its outreach to children, gathering them for Sunday School and Baptism.

"Dear Mr. Berry,

"Here is a thought which you, with your keen sense of humor, might appreciate.

"Today there is much anger and tension over the racial situation even though this situation has existed for hundreds of years, and is improving now at a faster rate than ever before. This apparent contradiction puzzled me until I pictured the situation as one person with his foot on another person's neck. This situation causes no tension as long as the supine person doesn't attempt to get up.

"But when the attempt to get up without disturbing the relationship of foot to neck is made, it means that both persons must expend much energy and effort. It is even harder to try to allow the prone person to get up by inches. It is particularly hard on both persons at about the half-way up position. The erect person is apt to develop severe cramps in that one leg, and the rising person's pain moves from his neck to his back — or lower.

"Naturally, both parties are apt to get very angry at this point. And, unfortunately, it is practically impossible to shake hands at this point without the erect person losing his balance — unless it's a very perfunctory handshake. (Try it.)

"It appears to me that the obvious solution for both would be a quick removal of the foot from the neck. The already erect person would then be free to use both legs to accomplish things which, as a one-legged man, he found impossible to do. (Need I name them?) And the formerly prone person could then have the opportunity to make positive contributions to the relationship as a man instead of the negatives as a worm (the prone posi-

Institute Focuses on Housing

Dr. Robert Marshall appealed to the Scriptures and asked Christians to re-think their position on a responsible stance towards government in this present day.

"Christians trace their heritage. . . to a people who did not submit to the outrages of Pharaoh but followed Moses in taking their complaints to court and eventually deserted their slave labor for freedom. . .We dare not pass by the prophets who called for radical changes. . .We remember Jesus who went about doing good, though it led to crucifixion. We remember St. Paul who continued his ministry even when he fell afoul of the law and became an offense to the government."

Dr. Marshall, President of the Illinois Synod of the Lutheran Church in America, pointed out that in this country, "where Christians are part of a people who rule, they are obliged to assert their power on the side of good. They cannot withdraw, as though withdrawal were the pattern God approves. Withdrawal would mean a commitment to anarchy or tyranny as non-Christians might decide."

Dr. Marshall suggested that those who oppose civil rights legislation on the ground that "you can't legislate morality" should be continually reminded that, "We have been legislating morality since the beginning. I trust we have not been legislating immorality, or not wanting to. But there is a chance that we in our day are coming very close to it by having laws that perpetuate discrimination."

"The problem with housing has developed in America with respect to those people who have worked and have accumulated the wealth to buy better houses, but who cannot because of race or nationality. . .

Institute Presses for Confrontation

Speaking to the 1966 Institute Banquet, William Ellis, New York attorney and newest member of the LHRAA Board of Directors, served notice that the Church dare not tolerate a self-righteous feeling that suggests that court actions and legislative developments have guaranteed everything that is really important in achieving human rights and decency, and now we have only to sit and wait for the benefits to accrue.

Attorney Ellis, a member of the Executive Committee of the Lutheran Church in America and a churchman in his own right, urged that the church ought not only speak, but needs desperately to listen too, and to listen to individuals. "This is the day in which the Negro male is saying to this country: 'I know that I'm a man at this time and I know that I have dignity. . .

Institute Points to Lateness of Hour

President of Valparaiso University, Dr. O. P. Kretzmann, was keynote speaker for the Institute. With his topic, "The Hour is Late," he showed that our troubled world is largely the result of people having cut themselves from their roots. In an effort to serve self, men have chosen to disclaim and set aside their spiritual, moral and social heritage. "The ambition, the fear, the hatred, the ignorance which produced these hours in this year are now moving toward the horizon of history. The hour IS late!"

As he continued to discuss today's world, with its "built-in injustices" crying out, Dr. Kretzmann observed, "a part of that world is already done, and another part is dying and being born on the streets of Chicago, Cleveland, New York and Jacksonville. Let it die! Let it die just as quickly and just as quietly as possible. I accept with joy the fact that the hour is late. . .time is running out. . .God is in all of this."

responsible stance towards government in this present day.

"Christians trace their heritage. . . to a people who did not submit to the outrages of Pharaoh but followed Moses in taking their complaints to court and eventually deserted their slave labor for freedom. . .We dare not pass by the prophets who called for radical changes. . .We remember Jesus who went about doing good, though it led to crucifixion. "The problem with housing has developed in America with respect to those people who have worked and have accumulated the wealth to buy better houses, but who cannot because of race or nationality. . .

DR. MARSHALL McNair

Think of the familiar story of the Good Samaritan. The story embarrassed the faithful of Jesus' day because a Samaritan would not have been accepted as a neighbor. Yet one of the faithful found himself befriended by a Samaritan. The Samaritan had become a neighbor by showing mercy, in spite of the prejudice that had prevented him from living next door. Because of Jesus' teaching, the Christian is always haunted by the possibility that God will make somebody his neighbor whom he does not recognize nor accept as a neighbor. Then the Christian would be living the 'bad life,' and should expect judgment and correction from God."

LHRAA Board of Directors, served notice that the Church dare not tolerate a self-righteous feeling that suggests that court actions and legislative developments have guaranteed everything that is really important in achieving human rights and decency, and now we have only to sit and wait for the benefits to accrue.

Attorney Ellis, a member of the Executive Committee of the Lutheran Church in America and a churchman in his own right, urged that the church ought not only speak, but needs desperately to listen too, and to listen to individuals. ATTY. ELLIS McNair

This means that I'm not interested in any more paternalism. I'm interested in working. But if we work, we work as equals.' "

He continued, "How much must this man do to prove to you that he is a man? Must he fight in Viet Nam? Well, of course 18% of the men who are fighting now in Viet Nam are Negroes. Must he fight in wars? is that it? Must he pay taxes? What must he do? Must he, in order to prove his manhood, go into the streets with guns?"

He added that although churches at the national level have said the right things, it remains now for church members at local levels to get the message across, and if today's "young men and young women who grow up in a Christian home observe total, utter irrelevance and at points cowardice in the church," they will "see no reason why they should remain a part of it."

Is it status that we are really all concerned about? Mr. Ellis wondered. Are the important questions where we live, with whom do we associate? "Does our status depend on this or do we derive our dignity and status from the fact that we are recipients of the love of Christ and this cannot be taken from us?" How we answer this will determine whether or not we as individuals can speak to our day, showing in our conduct that we care about other people—all people, very much.

Honest Catholic Can't Back A Segregationist---Hallinan

AC 10/6/66

By MARGARET HURST

Archbishop Paul J. Hallinan declared Wednesday that no honest Catholic can support a segregationist, obviously referring to segregationist gubernatorial candidate Lester Maddox.

The Atlanta Archbishop said it is the policy of the Archdiocese neither to support nor denounce political candidates or parties, but he said: "This is not politics. It is morality."

In a clear reference to Maddox's candidacy, Archbishop Hallinan said the issue of segregation was not introduced by the church but has been introduced "as the official stand, name and policy of a political candidate and the movement that has suddenly espoused him."

He said the teaching of the church cannot "fail the people of God by silence in moral issues."

When asked if his statement applied to Maddox, the Archbishop said: "It applies to any political candidate with that stand (segregation)."

There are approximately 83,000 Catholics in Georgia.

In an editorial which appears Thursday in the Georgia Bulletin, the archdiocesan newspaper, the Archbishop wrote:

"As 1966, ends, it is time for Catholics to look again, to look closely and often, at the racial teaching of their church. Protestant and Jewish congregations, we presume, are doing the same."

He said that when white Catholics of the Archidiocese of Atlanta accepted and supported the integration of schools, hospitals and other church-related programs in 1962-63, they were "loyally responding to a basic Christian norm—justice."

Archibishop Hallinan said that now, four years later, events have occurred which have

"shaken the emotional core of the problem for people of many faiths, both white and Negro."

He continued:

"The progress made, Negro moderation, non-violence as a tactic, necessary laws and the enriching experience of life based on quality, not color — these have been gains.

"But the continued deprivation of many Negroes, both open and hidden discrimination toward them, the growing Negro discouragement over white complacency, injustices that provide ready fuel for rioting and outbreaks by racist Negro leaders, the discovery that the North knows even less than the South about racial justice, the growth of the Klan and the slogans and idols of political segregations—these are grim losses."

Archbishop Hallinan said that since World War II there has been no excuse for any Catholic to be unaware that Catholics have a "special obligation of justice."

He said:

"The American Catholic knows where his Church stands.

"The honest Catholic cannot support segregation in any way.

"The true Catholic cannot be a segregationist."

National Council Presses Efforts to Save CDGM

The president and the general secretary of the National Council of Churches have urged the Office of Economic Opportunity "to allow nothing to prevent the continued operation" of the Child Development Group in Mississippi. In a telegram addressed to OEO director R. Sargent Shriver, Bishop Reuben H. Mueller and Dr. R. H. Edwin Espy gave their assurances "of our belief in the integrity of CDGM as one of the groups which is representative of the people in Mississippi whom your program is intended to help."

The OEO cut off public funds from the two-year-old CDGM, the largest Head Start program in the country, on grounds of irregular fiscal procedures. This was challenged by the church agencies, which had helped establish the CDGM, in statements issued earlier by the Program Board of the NCC Division of Christian Life and Mission.

Acting on the request of the Executive Committee of the NCC General Board, which met last week, copies of the National Council's plea were also sent to President Lyndon Johnson; Vice President Hubert Humphrey; the Rev. James McRee, chairman of CDGM; Walter Reuther, chairman of the Citizens' Crusade Against Poverty; Senators Joseph Clark of Pennsylvania and Jacob Javits of New York; and members of the Inter-Religious Committee Against Poverty.

"On the basis of information available to us from six of our member denominations directly involved in the Christian ministry in Mississippi, we believe that the CDGM has rendered an unusually effective service during the past two years," said the National Council's message.

"Race and the Elections" Resolution Issued by NCC Division

"Profound concern" at mounting evidence of the exploitation of racial tensions in current political campaigns was voiced last week by the Program Board of the Division of Christian Life and Mission of the National Council of Churches. In a resolution adopted October 6, the Board cited the "desperate need for moral leadership" at a time when "backlash threatens to poison national political life."

The Program Board authorized its chairman, Dr. Norman J. Baugher, who heads the General Brotherhood Board of the Church of the Brethren, to organize a National Committee for Moral Integrity on Racial Issues in the November elections. In addition, it charged this committee with preparing "a basic clarification of the moral issues involved and mobilizing all available resources to bring these issues before churchmen, political leadership and the public at large."

The Board further resolved that this committee should present its analysis of the issue to the campaign ethics committee of each major political party, to Congressional candidates, and to the President of the United States.

"The utter urgency of creating a more sane and morally sensitive approach to race" was highlighted in the resolution, which called for making maximum use of the National Council's and its constituents' resources.

The Program Board also resolved to request the Executive Committee of the NCC General Board to draw up and distribute messages alerting them to the exploitation of racial tensions to all member communions, for circulation among their membership prior to the November elections.

Indiana Council Holds Statewide Legislative Institutes

For two weeks, beginning October 17, the Indiana Council of Churches has scheduled legislative institutes in 13 communities in the state. Among the issues to be discussed which are expected to come before the 1967 State Legislature are repeal of capital punishment, social welfare and mental health proposals, correctional reforms, the "implied consent" bill, and parimutual betting.

Planned by the Council's Department of Legislation and Civic Affairs, the institutes will enable churchmen and legislative candidates to study all sides of each issue. This is the first time, said department chairman, the Rev. Ernest A. Rueter of Gary, that these briefing sessions have been carried into the communities. Previously the Council has sponsored a one-day seminar in Indianapolis.

Among the many prominent leaders of the sessions will be the Rev. Dr. Grover L. Hartman, executive secretary of the Council; two State Representatives; a former mayor of Indianapolis; three attorneys; social welfare and civil rights leaders; representatives of community services and many others, in addition to clergymen expert in their fields.

Following those being held this week in Hammond, Kokomo, Batesville and Lafayette, institutes will be conducted from Oct. 24-27 in Jeffersonville, Evansville, Fort Wayne and Terre Haute.

Ohio Governor Proclaims "Combat World Hunger Month"

A proclamation was issued on Oct. 13 by Governor James A. Rhodes of Ohio declaring: "Whereas, through the Combat World Hunger Campaign of Church World Service-CROP, funds are used in helping people overcome the root causes of hunger...I do designate October 23 through November 24, 1966 as Combat World Hunger Month in Ohio."

The Governor cited the fact that the "gap between those who have and those who have not is widening, and that the common tradition of the three major religious faiths in America is to assist those in need," as reasons for his proclamation.

"The Wonderful World of Ohio," he stated, "along with the rest of our nation, has been abundantly blessed in that our productive capacity and our great agricultural industry is capable of producing more than our domestic needs require."

The proclamation urged citizens "to share in this program and to help provide the hungry people of the world an opportunity to help themselves."

San Diego Council Holds Open Forum on Controversial Proposition

Churchmen and other interested persons in the metropolitan area of San Diego last week heard both sides of a controversial anti-obscenity initiative which will appear on November ballots in California. Under the auspices of the Social Concerns Committee of the San Diego Council of Churches, they attended two public dialogue meetings at which Proposition 16 was aired.

Chairman of the discussions on Oct. 14 was the Rev. James Rees Hadley, secretary of Christian Social Concerns of the San Diego District of The Methodist Church. The following day, the session was chaired by the Rev. R. Scott Haasarud, pastor of Shepherd of the Valley Lutheran Church in Spring Valley.

The "No" position at both sessions was presented by the Rev. Lester Kinsolving, legislative chairman of the Council. The issue involves a question of the censorship of obscene literature. As it is now written, its objectors contend, even the Bible could be censored if the Proposition passes.

The death of the Rev. Dr. Robert W. Spike at 42, victim of a murderer on the campus of Ohio State University in Columbus, Ohio, on October 17, profoundly shocked and saddened the staff of the National Council of Churches, which he served until a year ago as director of the Commission on Religions and Race.

Speaking of his death, General Secretary Dr. R. H. Edwin Espy declared: "Robert Spike was a Christian minister who practiced what he preached. His life was committed single-mindedly to the service of God and man. His contribution in recent years to the cause of racial justice has been a landmark in the application of the Christian Gospel to an area of crying need in our society. The ministry of the church in the world has been immeasurably enriched by his courageous life.

In Brief: Church World Service has shipped six Quonset-type housing units to Haiti for those made homeless by Hurricane Inez. Also airlifted to the stricken country were 100,000 pounds of dried milk, flour, cornmeal and wheat and 1,250 blankets.

--- The Sixth Annual Conference on Religious Leadership for Peace conducted by the Northern California Council of Churches will be held Nov. 13-15 at Asilomar, Pacific Grove. One of the major speakers on "New Perspectives in Foreign Policy" will be the Rev. Dr. Edwin T. Dahlberg, a former president of the National Council of Churches.

--- A service of the Church Federation of Greater Indianapolis is Dial-A-Movie. By phoning its number, parents are advised whether current films are appropriate for family viewing. Classifications are based on a consensus of leading religious and non-sectarian rating agencies.

--- Dr. H. Conrad Hoyer, associate director of the NCC Department for Councils of Churches, will be a resource leader at the Midwest Pow-Wow for Church Council executives at Green Lake,Wisconsin, Nov. 11-13. Other sessions are planned for the Northeast, South Central and West Coast areas. Chairman of the Midwest meeting is Ellis H. Dana, executive vice-president of the Wisconsin Council of Churches, which sponsors this session.

--- The Rev. Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell, pastor emeritus of Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City, was installed on Oct. 16 as president of New York Theological Seminary. Attending the ceremony, among others, were Dr. John C. Bennett, president of Union Theological Seminary, and Dr. Franklin Clark Fry, president of the Lutheran Church in America.

DISCUSSION GUIDES

for use in preparation for the

CONFERENCE ON PEOPLE, RELIGION, AND A CHANGING VIRGINIA

John Marshall Hotel

Richmond, Virginia

November 28-29, 1966

PRE-CONFERENCE DISCUSSION GROUPS

A Conference on People, Religion and a Changing Virginia, sponsored by the Virginia Council on Human Relations and a large group of the state's responsible religious leaders, will be held in Richmond on November 28-29, 1966.

The purpose of the conference is to provide the first statewide occasion for Virginians of various religious persuasions to work together in light of their common Judaeo-Christian heritage toward constructive solutions for critical human problems in a time of significant social change.

It is anticipated that 1,500 Virginians will participate in the conference. It is hoped that many other Virginians will participate in both pre-conference and post-conference discussions of the conference themes in their communities. This guide has been prepared to help persons in communities who desire to participate in discussion groups.

Discussion groups in a community may be formed in different ways: as an inter-faith group, as a group of men and/or women in a congregation, as a campus group of students and/or faculty, etc. If you do not know of a group in your community, consult your religious leader. He may need your help in organizing a local group.

This guide provides for four or more meetings of discussion groups. If meetings are to be held weekly, they will need to begin not later than mid-October. Groups should plan to meet for an hour-and-a-half or two hours, when possible.

It would help to have at least one person in each group who plans to participate in the conference itself, so he could bring to the conference the fruit of your discussions and back to the group the fruit of the conference. If your group raises a question which it is particularly eager for the conference to deal with, please send that question, as early as possible, to Conference Headquarters, 17 East Cary Street, Richmond, Virginia 23219.

I. The Theological Bases for the Social Concern of the Religious Community

(Conference Speaker: Dr. George D. Kelsey, professor of Christian Ethics, Drew University, Madison, New Jersey.)

1. Read and discuss these Biblical passages: Genesis 1:27; Deuteronomy 10:12--11:1; Malachi 2:10; Isaiah 58:1-12; Mark 12:28-34.

2. What theological bases for social concern do the three major religious traditions in America hold in common? What, if anything, is distinctive in each tradition?

3. What are the dangers involved when religious groups as groups get involved through public pronouncements, lobbying, etc., in public affairs? What are the dangers involved when they do not get involved?

4. What are the principal barriers to effective social action by religious individuals and groups? How can those barriers be overcome?

5. Comment on these statements;

   A. "God created but a single man . . . so that no one should say to his fellow-man, 'My ancestor was greater than yours.'"

   Mishnah, Sanhedrin 4:5

   B. "The unfinished task of securing full civil and human rights for the American Negro is still the most urgent social challenge that confronts religious leaders. All the pretensions of American democracy and of the Jewish and Christian heritage to a concern with brotherhood and the sanctity of the individual are tested in our response to this problem. The voice of religion should be heard proclaiming most persuasively and firmly those insights of American faith that brand prejudice and inhumanity as sinful. . . ."

   Commission on Peace and Justice,
   Central Conference of American Rabbis

   C. "Discrimination based on the accidental fact of race or color, and as such injurious to human rights, regardless of personal qualities or achievements, cannot be reconciled with the truth that God has created all men with equal rights and equal dignity. . . .

   "We can show our Christian charity by a quiet and courageous determination to make the quest for racial harmony a matter of personal involvement. We must go beyond slogans and generalizations about color, and realize that all of us are human beings, men, women, and children, all sharing the same human dignity and nature, with the same desires, hopes and feelings. . . ."

   Catholic Bishops of the U. S.

D. "In a world society in which hate is institutionalized in war, and self-interest in our web of economic relations, we can hardly survive unless we also institutionalize the moral needs of man -- for community, for compassion, for dedication and, let us not fear the word, for love. . . .

"As Christians, how often we pray that the Holy Spirit 'will remake the face of the earth.' Yet how clottish or dull we are at the suggestion that we too have a part to play in this transformation and that we can hardly hope to storm heaven from the second swimming pool or the third car. Our new resources are, if we will, the instruments of a new society and a new liberation. But God does not act without us. We shall not recreate our earth by default. On the contrary, we shall destroy it. In the era of nuclear plenty and nuclear destruction 'we must love each other or we must die.'"

Barbara Ward

E. "The massive indifference of the ordinary white citizen of good intentions is the moral equivalent of the perfidy of the white racists. The profound apathy of the white 'moderates' is ethically tantamount to the radical impudence of the white racists."

William Stringfellow

II. The Role of the Religious Community in the Struggle for Fair Housing

(Conference Speaker: Father John F. Cronin, S. S., Assistant Director, Department of Social Action, National Catholic Welfare Conference, Washington.)

1. What is the housing situation in your community: the condition of housing, racial patterns of residence, the coverage of fair housing laws, if any, etc.?

   (For help in gathering information, call on knowledgeable professionals, civil rights and other public interest organizations, local, state, and federal government personnel.

   (Reports 1 and 2 on Housing Patterns in Richmond are available from the Virginia Council on Human Relations, 17 East Cary Street, Richmond, Virginia 23219. Reports are free, but a contribution to cover costs would be welcomed.)

2. What are the basic arguments for and against "fair housing" laws?

3. What are some things which concerned citizens can do to support and encourage freedom of residence in their community so that all persons, regardless of race, religion, or national origin, can secure the housing they desire and can afford?

   (By far the best single resource available is the Fair Housing Handbook published by the American Friends Service Committee and the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing. This Handbook, containing facts about race and housing and concrete suggestions for concerned citizens, may be ordered from the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, 323 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y. 10016, for 50¢. Order enough copies for all members of your group.)

4. Comment on these statements:

   A. "The ghettoization of the Negro in American society is increasing. Three million Negroes -- roughly one-sixth of the nation's Negro population -- are now congested in five of the greatest metropolitan centers of the North. The alienation of the Negro from the mainstream of American life proceeds apace. The Negro is discovering to his sorrow that the mobility which he gained in the Emancipation Proclamation and the 13th and 14th Amendments to the Constitution nearly a hundred years ago merely enables him to move from one ghetto to another. A partial apartheid -- economic, social, political and religious -- continues to be enforced by the white people of the U. S. They use various pressures -- some open, some covert -- to keep the Negro isolated from the nation's social, cultural and religious community, the result being black islands surrounded by a vast white sea. Such enclaves in American society not only destroy the cohesiveness of the nation but also offend the Negro's dignity and restrict his opportunity. These segregated islands are also an embarrassment to white people who want an open society but are trapped by a system they despise. Restricted housing is the chief offender. So long as the racially exclusive patterns of suburban America continue, the Negro will remain an exile in his own land.

Editorial, The Christian Century

B. "I would address myself to the entire community and especially to the members of my own church to make it very clear that the sale or rental of a home is not merely a financial transaction. It is a moral decision as well. There can be no justification for rejecting a prospective buyer or renter because of his race or religion."

Roman Catholic Archbishop John P. Cody

C. "Now, there is simply no possibility of a real change in the Negro's situation without the most radical and far-reaching changes in the American political and social structure. And it is clear that white Americans are not simply unwilling to effect these changes; they are, in the main, so slothful have they become, unable even to envision them. It must be added that the Negro himself no longer believes in the good faith of white Americans -- if, indeed, he ever could have. What the Negro has discovered, and on an international level, is that power to intimidate which he has always had privately but hitherto could manipulate only privately -- for private ends often, for limited ends always."

James Baldwin

III. The Role of the Religious Community in Changing Educational Patterns

(Conference Speaker: Rabbi Jacob M. Rothschild, Hebrew Benevolent Congregation, Atlanta, Georgia.)

1. What is the extent of school desegregation in your community? What percentage of Negro students are in schools with white students? What is the degree of faculty desegregation?

2. Evaluate the "freedom of choice" plan used in the vast majority of Virginia school districts. What are its values? What are its dangers?

3. What is the responsibility of the church and synagogue in helping administrators and teachers to examine their own prejudices and to understand better the background, traditions, and problems of minority groups?

4. What is the responsibility of a parent who feels that the educational standards are being lowered in a particular school?

5. What are some things concerned citizens can do to improve the quality of public school education?

6. Comment:

   A. Although 89% of the school districts in the Southern and border regions were desegregated in 1965-66, only 16% of the area's Negro students were enrolled in schools with whites. Only 11% of Virginia's Negro students were enrolled in desegregated classes. Eighty-nine per cent were still in all-Negro schools. (Source: Southern Education Reporting Services, January 5, 1966.)

   B. "Schools segregated in fact teach only subject matter and fail to fulfill one of the traditional goals of public education; they fail to prepare youth to function in a multi-racial society as participating citizens."

   U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, 1963

   C. "Whatever the pace of (the) technological revolution may be, the direction is clear: the lower rungs of the economic ladder are being lopped off. This means that an individual will no longer be able to start at the bottom and work his way up; he will have to start in the middle or on top, and hold on tight. It will not even be enough to have certain specific skills, for many skilled jobs are also vulnerable to automation. A broad educational background, permitting vocational adaptability and flexibility, seems more imperative than ever. We live in a society where, as Secretary of Labor Willard Wirtz puts it, machines have the equivalent of a high school diploma. Yet the average educational attainment of American Negroes is 8.2 years.

   Bayard Rustin

D. "The practical results of the de jure and de facto brands of segregation in education are essentially the same -- unequal education and mis-education for millions of minority and economically deprived young people. If education is concerned with the total person and his functional role in a democratic society, it cannot escape a major responsibility for providing concrete experiences of exposure and interaction with persons of various races, nationalities, religions, and economic classes. De facto segregation, at best, provides a kind of ghetto mentality that is separated from the 'real stuff' of life in the world. What will it profit us if we succeed in educating persons to function occupationally with computers and fail miserably to educate them to function with other human beings?"

Percel O. Alston

IV. The Responsibility of the Religious Community to Set Its Own House in Order

(Conference Speaker: Mr. Warren H. Turner, Jr., vice-president, Protestant Episcopal Executive Council, New York City.)

1. It is often charged that "eleven o'clock on Sunday morning is the most segregated hour in America." Do you think this accusation is valid? What are the basic reasons most congregations remain segregated? What can be done to see that local religious units are genuinely (as distinct from merely officially) open to all persons?

2. What are the admission and service policies of the various health, educational, and welfare institutions operated and/or supported by your religious community? If any institutions still have segregation policies, what can be done to change them?

3. What responsibilities do religious institutions have regarding fair employment practices within their own structure, investment of funds in non-discriminatory undertakings, and the use of their purchasing power in support of their professed goals?

4. Why is the religious community often so slow in making desired changes in its own institutional life?

5. What are some things predominantly white and predominantly Negro congregations can do together in your community to break down the barriers of color within the religious tradition?

6. Comment:

   A. "A young freedom-rider from southern Georgia was told by her well-educated, prosperous, churchgoing and family-minded parents not to return home unless she got rid of this foolish notion of championing the Negro's cause in the attempt to overthrow the deep-rooted Southern tradition. The daughter said, 'I love my parents, but I cannot accept their phoniness. I have stopped going to church. The church has said, 'Love your neighbor and don't count the cost,' but it hasn't led or even permitted people to do what it says.'"

   Karl E. Lutz

   B. "Prayer and prejudice cannot dwell in the same heart. Worship without compassion is worse than self-deception; it is an abomination. Thus the problem is not how to do justice to the colored people, it is also how to stop the profanation of God's name by dishonoring the Negroes' name."

   Rabbi Abraham J. Heschel

   C. "For every person who disavows religion because some ancient and unrevised dogma outrages his intelligence, several become irreligious because the social impotence of religion outrages their conscience."

Reinhold Niebuhr

D. ". . . The greatest contribution the local religious unit can make is to seek and to find, nay, to be found of that inner life without which it is sounding brass and tinkling cymbals, without which it is nothing. Their greatest contribution is to preach and proclaim and live their own particular and peculiar message, that which they and they alone have. Unless we can say, 'We are not pagans, this is the way we behave because we are in this household of faith, this is what it means to be a Jew, this is what it means to be a Christian, this is how we behave because of what we believe.' Unless this can be said then I am convinced that all our techniques, all our gimmicks, program kits and human engineering will fail."

CDGM - Child Development Group of Mississippi

FACT SHEET

The Child Development Group of Mississippi is a statewide Head Start program which was organized in the summer of 1965. It is currently concluding operation under its second grant from the Office of Economic Opportunity.

On August 25, 1966, CDGM submitted a proposal to OEO for funding for an additional year's operation. That proposal requests $20.3 million to serve 13,500 children in 170 centers in 37 counties throughout Mississippi.

This sum falls far below the needs of the poor community and considerably under an original request for $41 million which OEO rejected outright.

More than 16,500 children who applied for inclusion in the new program were rejected by us with great reluctance.

The new proposal is a statement of the minimum needs of the poorest people in the poorest state in the nation.

The following are relevant facts about CDGM's current program.

Basic Data

Size of present grant: $5,644,343 for 6 months of operation.

Number of children served: 12,145 (as of June 3, 1966)

Geographical coverage: 121 centers in 28 counties across the state.

Who Works for CDGM

Number of employees: 2,272 employees on payroll of which 2,112 are on local center staffs, 80 work in 15 area offices, and 62 work in the central office.

Composition: 98.9% of CDGM employees are local Mississippians (99 % in the local centers, 100% in the area offices, 80% in the central office).

Training

In its commitment to the elimination of the root causes of poverty, CDGM has attempted to employ poor people and provide them with new skills through which they can realize their full potential. Extensive opportunities for training were provided our staff at all levels, including:

- -Training of area social service coordinators: 162 hrs/person.
- -Training of area administrators by central staff and outside consultants: 162 hrs/person in workshops.
- -Training in systematic problem solving by Transolve, Inc.:
  - -for area staff: 24–36 hrs/person
  - -for eight selected area staff (who now conduct their own workshops): 80 hrs/person
  - -for center coordinators: 24 hrs/person
  - -for each community committee: 16 hrs/person
- -Training, instate, through workshops and consultants for area and local teaching personnel: 55,348 man hours
- -OEO sponsored teacher training courses in colleges and universities:
  - -189 teachers for eight weeks/person
  - -4 area teacher guides at a high level, six week training course at Peabody Institute, Nashville
  - -15 teachers at a one week training course at the University of Southern Mississippi

Opportunities for Decision-Making

A total of 1,006 people, virtually all of them poor, were accorded the opportunity to make decisions directly affecting their own lives and the operation of CDGM centers.

- -Serving on community committees (121): 945 persons
- -Serving on area councils: 44 persons
- -Serving on the CDGM board of directors: 17 persons

Volunteer Work

There are 49 centers, operating on an entirely voluntary basis, serving 4,365 children, which call themselves CDGM. They receive no funds from CDGM or the government, yet they constitute one of the largest Head Start programs in the country.

CDGM has far exceeded the 10% non-federal share which poverty agencies are required to meet through local funds or voluntary contributions. As of July 8, 1966, with more than 2 months before the program ends, CDGM staff contributed more than 380,000 hours of voluntary labor at a computed dollar value of $605,641.

Miscellaneous Data

-CDGM's cost per child per week is $19, considerably under national OEO guidelines and other Head Start programs in the state of Mississippi.

-The 12,147 children served by CDGM represent only 7% of the eligible children who could be getting a Head Start education.

-A random sampling of 150 CDGM resource teachers, who receive $75 a week average, indicates that their average wages prior to working with CDGM were $44 per week.
